The three riders who have defeated Kramer in match races caught the champion off form. This year the champion broke the quarter-mile record established fifteen years ago. He rode the distance in 0:27 2-5, three-fifths of a second faster than the old figures. He reduced the one-third mile record from 0:37 2-5 to 0:36 4-5 and lowered the eighth of a mile mark from 0:11 3-5 to 0:11 2-5. The fastest time for the eighth of a mile made by any other rider is 0:11 4-5. This time in an eighth of a mile cycle sprint race is equivalent to 0:09 4-5 in a hundred-yard dash.

Before this season Alfred Goullet, the Australian, Joe Fogler and most of the professional riders apparently combined to beat Kramer. Racing faster than ever before during the first two months of this season, he was able to beat this combined force, but by pushing the champion hard in every heat they finally wore him down.

The referee was not able to disqualify the teamaters. They were too clever. Kramer trained hard to overcome the odds. The result was practically a collapse. He has admitted that his chances for the championship are slight. Goullet is leading by five points. With little chance of regaining form during the hot weather, it is likely that Kramer will see his string of national championships broken.

When teaming was not stopped by the course officials the National Cycling Association changed the rules governing titular races to provide that two instead of four should race in the semi-finals and finals. A series of grand semi-finals, where only two riders were to start, was instituted. The remaining races for the championship will be run under these rules. Kramer says the rule was made too late to help him, as there are several riders who are now able to beat him in two-men races.

The champion is a methodical business man, and keeps a set of books showing all receipts and expenditures. He never smokes and seldom drinks, his indulgence being limited to a glass of light beer with his meals. His only fads are automobiling and raising roses and chickens.

Accident Ends Walkers' Trip.

Owing to an injury sustained by Frank one of the three members of the American Walkers' Association who started from Times Square Saturday midnight on a tramp to Buffalo, the trip was canceled after the men had journeyed about sixty-five miles. Gage attempted to dodge a swiftly moving automobile about a mile from Wappingers Falls, and stumbled over a rock, spraining an ankle. He continued to Wappingers, five miles from Fishkill, where the trip ended. Gilbert Swartz and W. Probst, who accompanied Gage, had to assist him back to New York.

Farmer Here to Box Smith.

Frank Farmer, who gave Jimmy Clabby quite a surprise in a recent bout at Oshkosh, Wis., and his manager, Sam Howard, arrived in this city yesterday. The first bout for the Westerner in this section will probably be with Gunboat Smith. Several other boxing bouts will be arranged, and then it is the intention of Howard to take Farmer to Australia.

Oldfield in Minneapolis Race.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Aug. 9.—Barney Oldfield was added to the list of entries for the first 500-mile automobile race on the new speedway here Sept. 4.

PILKINGTON'S ROWING PLAN.

To Have High Schools Hold Race and Pick Crew for National Regatta.

James Pilkington, President of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen, takes issue with a certain implication that interscholastic rowing has a bad effect on the health of the participants. Most of the boys who will compete, or who have competed in these races that Mr. Pilkington has promoted, are eighteen, nineteen, and twenty years old. He pointed out that many of the great oarsmen did their best and fastest work at this age, including Hanlon, the American champion, and Kemp, the Australian. These men never suffered any evil effects from their early rowing.

Mr. Pilkington's plan is to have the various city high schools hold a race in the Spring over their home city course. From the participants in this race a crew would be picked from men in all the boats, to represent that city at the National Championship regatta. The Spring races would get the boys interested in the sport, and would produce a great deal of school rivalry and interest. Only those boys who showed themselves willing and fit would be picked to practice more seriously during the Summer months to represent their city at the "Nationals." It is pointed out that such inter-city events always provide a good contest and great interest wherever they have been rowed.

Camel

The New Blend Flavor

Cigarette smokers relish Camels because in the blend of choice Turkish and choice Domestic tobaccos they have a brand they prefer to either tobacco smoked straight!

Camels are refreshing and do not tire the taste. The blend does that, producing a mild, mellow smoke with a most enticing flavor and fragrance. Yet all the desired "body" is there.

You can smoke Camels liberally, because the blend takes away the bite and parch and leaves no unpleasant cigaretty after-taste.

Quality—no premiums.

Camels are sold everywhere in scientifically sealed packages, 20 for 10c; or ten packages (200 cigarettes) in a glassine-covered carton for $1.00. We strongly recommend this carton for the home or office supply or when you travel.

The stamp placed over and seals the package, which keeps out air, thereby preserving the quality of the blended tobaccos. By inserting the fingers as illustrated, the stamp easily breaks without tearing the tin foil, which folds back into its place.

Garford Proof Of Good Business Judgment

WOULD you be satisfied to have your business reputation for efficiency rest on the impression given the public by your transfer and delivery equipment?

Your equipment is constantly before the public eye. To hundreds who might be tomorrow's customers, it illustrates the business standards you have set for yourself.

It rests with you whether your vehicles are a traveling advertisement—proof of your progressiveness—or a constant suggestion of inefficient methods.

Garford trucks stamp you as a keen, aggressive business man with a modern appreciation of the money value of time.

An Excellent Illustration

The moving and storage companies are making an asset of the particularly close scrutiny of transfer and delivery equipment.

Garford motor trucks in the use of moving and storage companies as well as 200 other distinct lines of trade are showing efficiency and economy as typically illustrated by a recent letter from the Main Street Warehouse Company, St. Louis.

We quote in part:

"Our experience with the Garford truck has been more than satisfactory.

"Actual outlay for upkeep during 1914 not $25 per month, including thorough overhauling and complete set of tires.

"It has been in constant use from date of purchase to present time."

Our complete and comprehensive range of styles and sizes from ¾ to 6 ton, gives you unusual latitude in the selection of a Garford for your business.

There is a Garford for every trucking requirement.

YANKEES IN TIE WITH CLEVELAND

There seems to be a conspiracy against the Yankees. Saturday darkness interposed, and the game was not finished. Yesterday a heavy thunder storm broke over the Polo Grounds at the end of the sixth inning, and made a little lake of the infield. That ended further playing in a 1 to 1 game with Cleveland that served only to further augment the records of baseball. Silk O'Loughlin did his best to supply the missing three innings. He waited nearly the prescribed thirty minutes, and then fortified with his life preserver waded out on the field. The rain had stopped and there was a beautiful streak of blue in the western sky. Silk scouted around the home plate when the canvas covering was removed and then walked out toward the outfield. One glance was enough, and he hurried back to shout "Game called!" as the spectators were volleying cries for it to continue.

For the first few minutes of the game Wild Bill Donovan's players seemed endowed with some real baseball genius. There was one interesting double play in which Peckinpaugh, Boone and Pipp won approval, but after that the Yankees played their true type of game. The flash had passed, and if one were feeling particularly disgruntled, stupidity might have been applied in some instances. In the fifth Peckinpaugh let Turner's tap, that should have been an easy out, breeze past him, and Maisel did about the same thing in the next inning when Kirke hit a roller to him. If you were the official scorer you would probably account for those lapses by the usual alibi of a bad bound, but there wasn't anything of the sort. As a matter of fact, there was no particular damage done, for hits by either side were not forthcoming to much extent.

While the pitchers, Caldwell and Mitchell, were not bombarded, each was rather free with passes, Caldwell allowing four bases on balls and Mitchell giving three, but in the two innings. Of the safeties three were gained from Caldwell and four from Mitchell.

It was Caldwell who saved the Yanks from a defeat. One run was scored by Cleveland in the second inning, when Kirke hit for a home run that bounded into the first row of the right field stand. The Yankees were scoreless until the fourth. Hartzell went out on an infield tap to Chapman. Boone did better, however, and beat out a hit to the same spot. He stole second and advanced to third on Vanamaker's infield out. Caldwell saw the black clouds rising over the field, and decided that a run must be scored to tie the game. He shot one about three feet over Mitchell's head that rolled to centre field, and Boone crossed the plate.

They say that every thunder storm produces at least one freak occurrence, and yesterday's was well within the Polo Grounds. Mitchell had shown no great ability as a strike-out artist for five innings, but the instant the rain began to come down in the sixth he decidedly wet ball and fanned Pipp and Vic Cook for strike outs, and Hartzell was following the same trait when Silk stopped the game. The score:

Yankees Buy Pitcher Markle.

Special to The New York Times.

WACO, Texas, Aug. 9.—Pitcher Cliff Markle of the Waco team of the Texas League was sold today to the New York Americans. Markle has struck out more players than any pitcher in the league. New York paid $2,000 for him. Markle played in the Virginia State League last year. He is only 23 years of age, and his home is at Pittsburgh. This is the second player Waco has sold the New York Americans within thirty days.

Girl Throws Ball 209 Feet.

TACOMA, Wash., Aug. 9.—What was said today to be a new world's baseball throwing record for a girl was made yesterday by Miss Ruth McCabe, when she threw a ball 209 feet 5 inches. Miss Dorothy Smith of Vassar College is said to have established the best previous record in 1911 with a throw of 204 feet. Miss McCabe is a fourth year student in high school here.

CUTSHAW POLES OUT SIX HITS OFF CUBS

Brooklyn Baseman Equals World's Record in Batting in One Game.

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 9.—Prominent among the high lights in the complete rout of the Cubs today was the hitting extraordinary of George Cutshaw, the Brooklyn second baseman. Parading to the plate six times in the most one-sided and farcical baseball exhibition staged this season on the West Side grounds, the little Dodger got six consecutive singles, equaling the world record established by Clarence Beaumont, former Pirate and Cub, July 22, 1899, in Pittsburgh. Cutshaw scored two runs, drove in another and stole one base. The score was 13 to 0.

Just by way of getting revenge on Bresnahan's men for a lacing the West Siders accorded them in Brooklyn early in the season when the Cubs won 19 to 4, the visitors gathered twenty-three hits for a total of twenty-seven bases, pounding the offerings of G. Philbert Pierce and Pete Standridge. Eight of these drives were assembled during Pierce's five-inning sojourn, which was marred by glaring blunders by Zimmerman and Phelan.

Continuing their slugging when Standridge ascended the peak, Robinson's troops cleaned the Coast rookie, hitting his fork ball delivery for fifteen solid smashes in the last four innings. Control was the only thing the West Side pitchers had, and they worried through the bombardment without yielding a pass.

A glance at the score proves the Dodgers really had no reason for attacking Bresnahan's twirlers so fiercely, as the one run registered in the second, when a single and double blended, would have returned big Ed Pfeffer the winner. The giant right-hander literally toyed with the home guards, holding them to two useless singles, and in the last seven innings retired the side in order.

Cutshaw's part in the proceedings started in the second round, when he spanked a single to centre. Again in the fourth he drove a safety to the same pasture. Returning to the plate in the fifth session George sent one past Phelan at a dizzy clip. His fourth shot was made in the sixth period, a hopping grounder that escaped Zimmerman. Left field came in for the slugger's attention in the eighth when he dropped his fifth hit in front of Schulte. Every spectator in the park cheered the little fellow when he stepped forth to bat the ninth, and he got his sixth single by beating out a bounder to Fisher. The score:

Braves Check Losing Streak.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 9.—Boston checked its losing streak today by defeating St. Louis 6 to 2. Dolan's error in the first inning gave the world champions a three run lead which St. Louis could not overcome. The locals rallied in the fifth and scored twice on Hyatt's triple, Gonzales's single, and Griner's double. The score:

Reds Overcome Lead and Win.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 9.—In an uphill fight which lasted twelve innings Cincinnati won from Philadelphia today 5 to 4. The visitors took an early lead, getting two runs in the first inning on a base on balls and three singles. They scored again in the third on Williams's error. An error by Luderus was responsible for another in the sixth. Demaree weakened in the sixth, scoring two runs off a double, an error, and four singles. They forced Demaree's retirement in the seventh before any one was out, and tied the score on two singles and a sacrifice. The score:

UMPIRE QUIGLEY HURT.

Gas Stove Explodes and Hurls Him Length of Umpires' Room.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—Umpire E. C. Quigley, who was injured painfully when a gas stove exploded in the umpires' quarters of the National League baseball park this afternoon, was resting easily tonight and will be back in the game within a week or ten days, according to his physician.

Quigley was preparing to heat water for a bath to follow the game, and had just turned the gas on full force when the explosion occurred. He was hurled the length of the room and knocked unconscious.

Umpire Hank O'Day heard the explosion and rushed into the room and turned off the gas. Quigley regained consciousness in the West Side Hospital, a block away.

GIANTS' GAME CALLED OFF.

Rain Comes When New Yorks Are Taking First Turn at Bat.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 9.—With 2,500 people in the ball park, and while the Giants were batting in the first inning today, rain began to fall, and in a few moments the Forbes Field diamond was a sea of mud, necessitating a postponement of the first game of a series of four to be played this week. It will be played off as part of a doubleheader on Sept. 16, when the Giants come here for the last series of the year.

With Umpire Klem behind the plate and Cockill on the bases the game began by Adams walking Burns, and the latter went to second when Snodgrass sent a grass cutter to centre. With Doyle at the bat Burns played too far off second base and was thrown out by Schang, Wagner taking the throw. Doyle then filed to Hinchman and Fletcher was thrown out by Wagner. Tesreau was the pitcher announced for New York.

Regarding Manager McGraw's criticisms of doubleheaders, appearing in certain papers throughout the country, President Dreyfuss said after the game was called off today that if he had his way it would not be played, and he insisted that at the next meeting of the National League he would introduce a resolution to abolish doubleheaders under all circumstances.

BROOKFED RALLY CHECKED.

A double play stopped a batting rally by the Brookfeds, in the ninth inning yesterday, at Washington Park, Brooklyn, and enabled the Chifeds to win by a score of 2 to 1. It was not the only time during the contest that a double play caused a wave of disappointment to pass over the few persons who witnessed the game. Twice before the visiting infielders choked off attempts on the part of the locals to get men over the plate, and Beck, the Chifed first baseman, played a prominent part in perfecting the play each time it was made.

Hendrix, who pitched for the Chifeds, was touched up freely, but tightened up when the danger signal was displayed. Finneran, who was in the box for the Brookfeds, allowed seven hits in the eight innings in which he officiated. Only two errors were recorded during the game and this was responsible for the first run scored by the visitors. Halt made a wild toss of Westerzil's grass cutter, and Flack scored on the misplay. The second and winning tally came in the eighth when Zeider singled and romped home when Fischer banged out a double.

The Brookfeds started out auspiciously in the ninth, when Kauff walked and stole second. Myers hit for one base, sending Kauff to third. A double play followed, but on Fred Smith's single Kauff scored the sole tally credited to his club. The score:

PREMATURE PEACE TALK.

It is not surprising that court circles in Copenhagen should deny knowledge of any peace overtures by the German Emperor to Russia through the kind offices of Denmark. The intermediary would be little likely to point with pride to a service that had utterly failed. The story may be quite without foundation, but the present position of the Powers at war lends inherent credibility both to the report of the making and of the rejection of the overtures.

Germany is at the moment in a position to talk about peace. All the visible considerations are of a nature to make the moment propitious. On both frontiers she is on enemies' soil; her people would not be likely to grumble at any peace move she now made. There may be considerations not visible to the outside world which would suggest to her the present expediency of peace overtures. It was just after great victories over the Russian forces that Japan sought the aid of President ROOSEVELT to bring about a peace conference. The Mikado's empire, although his troops had been victorious, was approaching financial exhaustion. Possibly there may be conditions in Germany, known only there, that in Government circles may have given rise to the belief that now is the time for peace overtures—later conditions may be less favorable to Germany. That surmise is superfluous, however. The desire to detach Russia from her allies, as Germany tried a little less than a year ago to detach France from her allies, would be an all-sufficient motive for sounding Petrograd.

There are abounding and compelling reasons why no one of the Allies would now listen to German overtures for peace, whether made to one alone or all together. If we consider their ends and their interests, first as allies, each bound by solemn agreement to all the others to make no separate peace, and then from the point of view of each individual Power, we shall readily see why peace overtures would be by all of them considered premature. A peace concluded now would leave unattained the objects for which they went to war. They could put Germany under no restraint either for disarmament or for keeping the peace. The great empire would be more dangerous than ever. Peace would not be welcomed on the terms which would leave Europe exposed to further wars within a few years, wars against which each and all the allied Powers would have to make and maintain enormously costly preparations. The year's awful waste in human life and in treasure they would feel had gone for nothing.

Their separate interests are scarcely less compelling. England would fight to exhaustion before she would submit to the imminent peril of accepting Germany as a neighbor upon the Belgian coast. Nor could she feel secure unless guarantees were given against the maintenance, certainly against the increase, of Germany's military force on land and sea. Peace for England must have a more assured basis and promise of continuance than can now be secured.

France can have no peace so long as the German invader is on her soil. She might be asked to redeem in money the territory upon which the Kaiser's troops are now almost impregnably intrenched. If she would feel that the war has not been unprofitable, she must regain her lost provinces of Alsace and Lorraine, and she, too, never could consent, except under the compulsion of entire defeat, to see the frontier that was lately Belgium's become the German frontier.

Russia least of all, unless her spirit is broken, of which there is no evidence, would at the moment turn a listening ear to peace overtures from Germany. Not even the offer of bleak and wind-swept Galicia in exchange for that part of Poland taken by Germany would entice her. She would still be an ice-bound empire. And she would have to contemplate the imminent probability of further and unrebuked aggressions by Austria in the Balkans, where, as well as at Constantinople, she has indulged in dreams of great opportunity. Russia certainly would feel that the loss of 2,000,000 soldiers was an absolute waste. There would be no compensating gain. Italy has not yet won back her lost provinces, the regaining of which was her aim in going to war. She has been encouraged by success, and she has not yet felt, as France and England and Russia have felt, the terrible strain of the conflict. Serbia has held her own in a way that has surprised the world, but peace now would leave her no immunity from new attacks.

In the present temper of the Allies peace is out of the question. For the lasting good of Germany it might well be doubted whether a peace concluded now would be a boon. The supreme need of Germany is to rid horself of Prussian militarism, of the imperial rule. There are hopeful signs that her people, in increasing numbers, see and feel this truth, but an immediate peace would leave the German people wearing all their fetters, become more galling than ever. The imperial and militaristic spirit would be intolerable in its arrogance. The thrall would be unbreakable, and the German people, deluded by the exultant feeling of victory, would be less inclined than ever to attempt to break it.

OKUMA PREMIER AGAIN.

How much of obscure political intrigue or dramatic representation underlies the resignation of Count OKUMA, the Japanese Prime Minister, and his withdrawal of that resignation at the request of the Emperor? He resigned because of charges of improper use of funds and bribery at elections on the part of certain members of his Cabinet. The working head of that body was Baron KATO, Minister of Foreign Affairs, as he has been in several previous Cabinets, five years Ambassador to Great Britain, and hitherto regarded as one of the cleverest of the subtle race of Japanese diplomatists. That powerful little coterie, increasing in influence as it decreases in numbers, the Elder Statesmen, seems to have made Baron KATO a scapegoat for the "isolation" of Japan, for the Chinese boycott on Japanese goods, the result of what would seem a genuine Japanese policy as to China, a policy wherein the concessions and the "yielding" may perhaps be interpreted differently by statesmen in Tokio and statesmen in Washington.

Since the Elder Statesmen put forth the theory of "isolation" the Okuma Cabinet has pursued a policy of reconciliation and rapprochement with China, and Baron KATO has made a number of speeches in answer to his critics and in defense of his course. The notable thing, however, about the reconstruction of the Cabinet is that KATO is no longer a member of it. He "refused" to go to the Foreign Office again. One might think, considering too curiously, that the offer was made to "save his face," and the refusal stipulated in advance. But Count OKUMA, who takes temporarily the Foreign Affairs portfolio, is said to have offered it in vain to a number of distinguished diplomatists. Evidently the Foreign Office is no bed of roses at a time when there are so many opportunities of offending ticklish sensibilities in America, in Europe, in China, and in Japan.

As for OKUMA, the fine and mighty able old man, for nearly fifty years eminent in Japanese affairs, scarcely any, if any, figure of his nation is clearer or more salient to American eyes. He is neither anti-American nor pro-American—in spite of that "Life of Jefferson" with which his library was enriched by Mr. BRYAN. He has talked both ways, according to his occasions and political exigencies, and sometimes purely for home consumption. In office he can be depended upon to be perfectly "correct," always firm in the assertion of what he holds to be the interests and the honor of his country. In short, a man we can understand.

TRADE UNIONISTS' RESPONSIBILITY.

Mr. GOMPERS condemns the conviction of the President of the Colorado Miners' Union for reasons which will not carry the public with him. So far as he challenges the regularity of the proceedings he is within his rights if the facts are as he states them. If the process of the courts was prostituted by anti-union sentiment, if the State officials were suborned for capitalist purposes, the error should be remedied, not only for the sake of unionists, but for the sake of everybody. But Mr. GOMPERS sets up a claim that the courts shall be administered in the manner which he condemns. In his own words:

> For the first time in the history of our country an officer of a union has been convicted of murder because of violence which grew out of a strike—convicted even though he was not accused of personal participation in the violence. This is a principle of tremendous importance to the whole labor movement.

It would be equally correct to say that favor to unionists would be injury and injustice to all others, and that is what Mr. GOMPERS asks. On behalf of the unions he is dissatisfied with the law of conspiracy, and seeks to obtain for them unrestricted capacity for injuring others. The unionists are quick to see the wrong of a conspiracy against them, yet Mr. GOMPERS seeks a privilege of the same sort for them. They are of the belief that they have secured the passage of a law exempting them from the law against conspiracies, and they have done this in the name of benevolence and humanity. Yet these privileges have been exercised by unions in a manner which has called forth condemnation by men with greater command of public confidence than Mr. GOMPERS has or can deserve, so long as he argues as in this case.

There is a certain similarity between the cases of BECKER and of LAWSON. Neither did the shooting. The case of LAWSON is clearer than that of BECKER, for he ordered the miners to arm and prepare for trouble. Killing followed, and then the conviction. The cases are alike in that both men were held responsible for the acts of others. Why should not unionists be held under the general rule? In Chicago, in the case of 100 indicted for conspiracy and blackmail, the Clayton law was pleaded in bar of conviction. Now Mr. GOMPERS interposes not the law but the theory upon which the law was passed as a bar to conviction of murder. He calls the acts part of "a struggle to establish rights and "freedom as workers and as human "beings." What would society be reduced to if all were justified in arming and killing?

The attempt to represent the prosecution of LAWSON as an attack upon unionism does him no good and unionism much harm. When have unions repudiated either the leaders or their acts in crimes established by evidence and rivaling LAWSON'S? After the dynamiters were convicted they were elected to places of trust and responsibility in the unions. The boycott is imbedded in the constitutions of many unions, and avowed as one of labor's rights by Mr. GOMPERS. If unions applaud such deeds, how can unionism be acquitted of them? Mr. GOMPERS condones the crime, and even asserts that it is meritorious, and part of labor's program of uplift and benevolence. It is not possible to take such a position, or to admit it, without assuming some part of the moral responsibility.

YOUNG LANDS WITH CHILD HEARTS

Figures of speech are useful things if they are used only as figures. When one begins to use them as if they were mathematical statements, statistics, or dogmas, they are a danger to clear reasoning. It is convenient to personify a nation as a man, but when one soberly treats it as if the figure were a fact and discusses the nation's deeds as if they were those of a man he is not thinking straight. It is convenient to speak of this mannation as young or old, but it is perilous to treat it as if it literally went through the gradual experiences of a man from youth to age, as if its passions and intelligence followed the regular course of childhood and manhood and old age. For a nation is not a man, but is made up of men, and each of these men leads his own life and has his own experiences, just as do the men on the other side of the frontier.

The writer of the curious letter in yesterday's TIMES thought he had discovered the clue to Germany's actions in the fact that she was young, "with "the swift and vindictive passions of "childhood," "precocious, imperious, "self-conscious, and self-centred as "any child inevitably is;" that "her years determined her soul-quality." The acts of Germany are not the acts of a "magnified and non-natural man" born forty-five years ago; they are those of individual men living in Germany, some young, some old, each differing greatly in character from the others. Mr. FREDERICK'S argument sounds well so long as he uses his adjectives in relation to the thing he calls Germany; but suppose he were to say, "Admiral "VON TIRPITZ'S heart is stormed with "the swift and vindictive passions of "childhood; Chancellor VON BETH"MANN-HOLLWEG is precocious, im"perious, self-conscious, and self"centred as any child inevitably is; "Minister VON JAGOW'S years deter"mine his soul-quality; the com"mander of the boat which sank the "Lusitania is a child, cruelly torn in "heart by criticism for deeds whose "significance he does not realize."

Nations are not really old or young. If they were, then an imaginary line drawn between France and Germany makes Frenchmen responsible for their actions and Germans comparatively irresponsible. You cannot see the line; it was drawn by statesmen long dead. There is a village on each side of it. The villagers on the French side are grave, sober men, with the ripeness and wisdom that come with middle age, for their country is at least middle-aged. From where they stand they can throw a stone into the German village, and there everybody is irresponsible, lighthearted, childish in understanding, for Germany has existed only since 1870. Everybody on the German side has "the German child heart, "with an utter innocence of under"standing of aught save the passions "that rack him," but in five minutes' walk these untutored infants are on the French side, where everybody they meet is an adult and has put away childish things.

There is a reality behind the figure of speech; the comparative youthfulness of a nation accounts for many things. But the figure must not be stretched; we must remember that it is only a figure. A nation is never so youthful that it does not understand right and wrong; for it is not a man, but a society of men. Each one of them knows right from wrong and knows the consequences of his acts. When the German Empire was born forty-five years ago the mind of every middle-aged or old man within its borders was not suddenly wiped clean of all the knowledge his life had brought him, he did not begin as a child to learn all over again. It was not "an utter innocence of un"derstanding of aught save the pas"sions that racked him" that led VON JAGOW to propose to CAMBON the partition of the Belgian Congo; it was just such a proposal as FREDERICK the Great might have made, and he lived a century and a half ago. And if Mr. FREDERICK withdraws his theory about the youth of nations and insists that nevertheless there is and always will be something about a German that gives him permanently a child heart, though on the other side of the boundary men are for some reason born with the hearts of men, we deny that there is any such geographical miracle. The child heart of BISMARCK was not what led him to falsify the Ems dispatch, nor was it the child heart of FREDERICK that plunged Europe and America in war; in both cases it was the cold calculation of grown men, seeing very definitely just how the political advantage of Germany could be forwarded and ruthlessly resolved to stop at nothing in forwarding it.

THE IMPROVING CROP PROSPECTS.

The saying that all signs fail in a dry season may now be altered to read that all predictions of crop failure are doubtful in wet seasons. It has been said that yesterday's crop report ought to be bad, because there have been so many private reports of rain damage. As matter of fact July added 3,000,000 bushels to the prospects of the record wheat crop, and the billion-bushel promise is better in August than in June. Only once has there been a 3,000,000,000-bushel corn crop, but there is a possibility of another this year, even though there are a few bushels lacking in present indications.

There is no telling what a hot August may do to a corn crop with a good stand in saturated soil. At least there will be credit as a buttress against possible crop disaster through hot winds this year. It is certain that the crop gained 100,000,000 bushels during July. Under no ordinary conditions of seasonal deterioration can either of these two leading crops fail to surpass last year's yield. For the forage crops the outlook is brilliant. Hay and oats will be wonders. There will be 300,000,000 bushels more of oats and 5,000,000 more tons of hay. These figures are as eloquent of meat as of cereal abundance.

The only trouble about the cotton crop is that it is too large for the convenience of those charged with selling it and collecting. However, as to that there are compensations; the calamity of too much cotton is not so great as last year. Altogether there never was an August with a better crop prospect, either in itself or in the prospect of easy marketing. But for the United States the world would be hungry in this year of misery for others and of such abundance for us that exultation may well be tempered with something of shame and an impulse to share with the needy and deserving.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Denouncing Men of Principle.

In one of the books written by the late Professor WILLIAM SUMNER of Yale, that very able scholar and philosopher carried his well-known delight in putting truth in startling, even shocking, form to the extent of solemnly asserting, in effect, that of all dangerous citizens, quite the most dangerous was the much-praised "man of principle."

That statement, of course, is in utter disaccord with common belief—with what is supposed to be common knowledge—for there is nothing of which we are all prouder than of having "principles," and of standing by them through thick and thin, regardless of consequences. Professor SUMNER contended, however, that what are called "principles" are iron rules of conduct that take no account of changing conditions and circumstances and are based on the fallacy that rightness and wrongness are absolute, not relative. Men of principle he held to be dangerous because they were not free to act in emergencies as reason dictated, but blindly followed a line of conduct fixed long ago, before the requirements and necessities of the present and the future could possibly be known.

The British officer, supposed to be in a Lancashire regiment, who sent to The London Chronicle the letter we printed yesterday, bitterly denouncing the way his own countrymen are meeting—or rather are not meeting—the situation created by the war, showed that he, too, has reached the same opinion as to "principles" that was held by the Yale professor. The grievance he so angrily presented, after his months of trench fighting with inadequate forces and imperfect equipment, was that the English are opposed "on principle" to conscription. A year ago he shared this antagonism and was proud of it, but now he has come to the conclusion that while conscription may be a bad thing in some respects and in some circumstances, in others—in those now existing—it was not only a good thing, but the only thing, that would save Great Britain from a defeat that would mean national ruin if not extinction. Therefore he asked, "Will you not leave your dear old principles for a moment, and look at things from another point of view?"

That, of course, is just what "the man of principle," as Professor SUMNER defined him, will not do. His decisions on all subjects were made long ago, and were final. He insists on consistency at any cost. The pacifists are fine examples of the type.

Mr. Osborne's Friends and Enemies.

For people who lack time or opportunity to make any deep study of penology or personally to investigate the work and the effects of the work which THOMAS MOTT OSBORNE has been doing since he became Warden of Sing Sing prison, there is one fairly trustworthy means of finding out whether he is the sentimental and unpractical coddler of convicts that some have called him or whether he is the able and successful exponent of new and better ideas that is pictured by others.

All one needs for basis of intelligent opinion on the subject is knowledge of who opposes and who supports him and the changes he has made in the prison management, and that knowledge can be obtained day by day from the newspapers.

The first thing to be noticed is that the adverse criticism of Mr. OSBORNE is for the most part anonymous. Supt. RILEY and Governor WHITMAN have, indeed, expressed some dissatisfaction with the Warden's methods, or rather with certain details of their application, but neither has questioned his character or his intentions, and neither has denied—the Superintendent has long and often asserted—that the methods, in themselves, are vast improvements on those of which they took the place in this and other prisons.

Those who declare the Warden a failure—who say that the prison is without discipline and the lot of its inmates enviable to many a man outside—are almost all content to let their accusations circulate on no definite and responsible authority. They seem to be politicians regretful of lost patronage, and purveyors of supplies who are bemoaning the good old days when they could "do business" with the prison on terms better worth their while.

Mr. OSBORNE'S friends and supporters, on the other hand, welcome identification, and what they write about Sing Sing they sign. A good many of them, to be sure, do belong to the "reformer" class, but to sniff at reformers is neither as safe nor as fashionable, nowadays, as it used to be, and one observes that the men who are speaking up for the Warden and his works have not only given some real study to prison ethics and prison economics, but they have taken the trouble to visit Sing Sing and to find out whether it has become a den of disorder and iniquity or whether the prisoners are responding under enlightened trust and kindness with a convincing inclination to change from enemies of society to decent citizens. They admit that Mr. OSBORNE still has a thing or two to learn, and that he has made some mistakes, but they are unanimous in opposing his removal.

Alarming Speed in the Tunnel.

Not a few travelers through the tunnel under the East River have been alarmed by what seems to them the excessive speed of the trains. It is possible that the rate of motion is not what it seems. It may be that the reverberations in the tunnel exaggerate the appearance of speed where the usual tests of speed are lacking. No stationary objects are visible from the windows of cars in the tunnel. Yet the impression given is certainly of a speed greater than that of other trains in the open air, where the danger is less.

To be sure, the track through the tunnel is straight, with nothing to check the trains down under the river and up from it. Yet trains have been known to jump even straight tracks, and there is only reluctant imagination to depict the result of jumping a track in a tunnel. It may be that the stability of the big tube would be enough to withstand the shock of a ten-car steel train bumping over the ties and perhaps into the sides. Still, that is something nobody would like to see tried.

Apparently the trains run only as fast as their signals permit, for at some times they move more moderately than at others. Also it seems that the trains try to get headway on the downward run to take them up as far as possible on the rising grade, and it has been said that efficient motormen are those who can save current in that way. Economy is a virtue, but less so under such conditions as those existing in a tunnel. It is not assumed nor said that there is any real danger, but only that there is an appearance of danger. Publicity regarding the safeguards might reassure many unnecessarily timid, and perhaps even serve to moderate the readiness to take risks which comes from familiarity with conditions.

HIS IRISH MOTHER.

"Worra, worra! ochone! I'll be left by me lone!
Shure, yer father died fightin',
Yer brave brother, too,
Whin ye're kilt, Mickey, darlint,

"Arrah, Mither! I'm thinkin' that I'll not be killed,
But, faith, if I am, I'll die
Fightin' the pack
That shot Patsey an' Dad, an'—'twill be as God willed—"
"'Twas the Divil that willed

Will yez lave Mither, Mickey,

"I want brave lads for sons! Listen now, Mickey dear,
If ye're thrillin' for battle,
Ye must go to the War.
Niver let Kate O'Hara's soft words kape ye here!
Irish blood will die fightin'—
Shure! that's what ye're for!"

EMMA DUNNING BANKS.

Authorship Misplaced.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On a number of occasions I have noticed the statement that Edward R. Finch was the author of the so-called "signature law," having reference to the provisions of the election law requiring the signatures of electors at the time of registration and again on Election Day for the purposes of identification. On Saturday last your paper again made a statement to the same effect. It is not very important who drafted that provision, but for the sake of the record it should be noted that I suggested and drafted the signature provision now in the election law during the 1905 legislative session, when William Halpin was Chairman of the Republican County Committee and I was Chairman of the Law Committee of the Republican County Committee. Mr. Finch, if I am not mistaken, was a member of the Law Committee at that time. A. S. GILBERT.

THE TERRIBLE GERMAN EGO

As a French Lieutenant Saw It in Battle, in Defeat, in Prayer.

New York, Aug. 8, 1915.

A young Frenchman of great intellectual promise, who came to America a dozen or more years ago and rose rapidly in his profession, is now a Lieutenant in the French Army. In the fighting near Arras he was desperately injured, and he has since been in the hospital. The following extracts from a letter which I received from him a few days ago present a vivid picture of the reality of the war to those who are engaged in it, and reveal the intensity of French feeling. FRANKLIN H. GIDDINGS.

From the French Lieutenant's Letter.

I am indeed much better, though not very well as yet. I have been so near death, I have seen such terrible things, I have so often despaired of coming out of the struggle alive, that this new life here away from the battlefield seems a dream. In spite of the sufferings and great losses of men, we are full of hope and courage. We know we must triumph and victory will be ours. France will not die. It is necessary to the world, above all to the world of thought, your world and mine. This war is the enemy of thought, it is the enslavement of all the truly spiritual powers to a work of tyranny and destruction.

One day, I hope, I shall tell you some of the things I have seen and then you will understand that Germany has only begun to spell the words "civilization," "human," "personal dignity," "progress" based on principles of "liberty" and "justice." At first I could not be bitter toward the Germans. I thought the military party alone could be held responsible for the unspeakable cruelty of the soldiers. I said to myself: "The people are blind. They have been misled. They believe themselves attacked and threatened in their very existence. We must only free them, free Europe and her German people as well, from the German military cast." But facts do not allow me to make that distinction bona fide any longer. The Germans know what they are doing. They have been trained to think, to speak, to feel as their masters. They honor, venerate, follow them, and have one faith—the absolute goodness of the German Nation, the sacredness of its mission to a corrupted world, faith in a gospel of military strength which will make of all peoples either the slaves of Germany or willing subjects. We, all, must either love them or, through fear, respect and honor them. They will give other nations independence if it harmonizes with the interest of the empire, and, if not, that independence will be sacrificed on the altar of the German God. They have Germanized the very heavens. They have lent to the Being who has stood for love and justice sentiments unworthy of a Turk!

I am not speaking without knowledge. I have seen them victorious and defeated. I have seen them in battle and at prayer. I have seen them from Prussia and from Bavaria, and all breathe the same spirit of selfish and arrogant pride, of hatred, of domination at all cost and by all means. I have seen the maimed children, the slaughtered women and tortured old men. I have seen poor French prisoners crucified naked on the edge of the trench to frighten their comrades, and more and more. No mercy, no honor, no chivalry: all sacrificed that the Kaiser may rule over the land of our forefathers, and bring to it the blessings of superior morality and Kultur!

The United States! Where are they in this mighty struggle—the mightiest of all the ages for the salvation of the spirit of man? Do they want a retrogression of ten centuries? And are they not burning, your young men, that when nations such as Belgium and France have been threatened in their very existence they have not spoken and acted for their protection? I have been taught and I ha e believed (I believe it still, for I hope for better things) that the judgment of the United States was so clear, so straight, that it could not be involved in a futile diplomatic discussion—a discussion started merely to gain time, while Americans, innocent ones, too, were drowned by the Germans, when all laws, yes, all upon which our civilization rests, were ignored and violated by them, when acts of cruelty unequaled by anything I have ever read in history were perpetrated by them!

A few days ago an American doctor was telling me with tears in his eyes: "I thought I should never have to blush for my country—but Bryan is taking out all the stars from our flag, to leave us nothing but stripes."

When you mention the United States Government, you are met with a smile. Fortunately one feels, back of the Government, the great heart of the people, that heart which has sent to the suffering millions its deepest sympathy and abundant relief, under a thousand forms. But surely the Government has forgotten that this is not the time for a learned argumentation, often sterile in times of peace and absolutely baneful in times of war. What other proofs does Mr. Wilson want of the lack of honor, of good faith, of the honesty of Germany? Do you wish Germans to go to America and bombard New York? No, there is a time for action, there is a time when one must quickly decide, there are situations where intuitions are far safer to follow than long reasonings, and if the opportunity is lost, one loses the chance to draw clearly the line between himself and the camp of the cowardly, the dishonest, the indifferent to all that is noble and good.

I am not now speaking like a professor or as a moralist. I am the soldier only, but the soldier of what I deem to be, after what I have seen, the cause of civilization. And with all my love for the United States, my second Patrie, I know that unless they take a firm and noble stand in this present crisis, they must lose the chance of being heard with respect in the future, and that Germany will have nothing but contempt for the "easy" nation she has so skillfully engaged in conversations while she was strangling the nations that dared affirm their right to live.

Sentiments of Norway.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am a Norwegian born, and, although I have lived many years in this country, I still have many relatives and friends in Norway, from whom I receive letters frequently. I have heard of no pro-Germanism there—quite the contrary. I do not doubt there may be a few, like A. Nielsen, who cannot see right from wrong, but it is a dreadful accusation to say that the majority of the Norwegian people are blind to justice and fairness.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of Aug. 5 A. Nielsen makes the assertion that Norway is pro-German and is proud of it. I am of Norwegian descent and have relatives in Scandinavia, from Trondhjem to Copenhagen, some of them in high official positions. They and their Norway are decidedly not pro-German.

In my trip through Scandinavia two years ago I came in contact with the German travelers, and, if they were representatives of their country, I understand some of the reasons why the Norwegians are not pro-German. F. M. H.

In Lieu of Titles.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Is there any explanation as to why the American press has acquired the habit of directing attention to people's riches when they happen to be mentioned in the papers? I myself can think of no explanation beyond the fact that it has become a substitute for "Count," "Duke," "Earl," &c., since we have no such titles in our democratic country. Many are perhaps unaware of the frequency with which this adjective "wealthy" is used by the press. To me, and I have no doubt to many others, it has become nauseating and disgusting. One is reminded of the much used word "fashionable" in relation to churches, which always must give any true Christian a heartache when he sees how the thought is misdirected.

UNLOYALTY OF ENGLAND'S WORKING CLASS.

Some Things Democracy Has Yet to Learn—One Is to Banish Poverty Without the Blight of German Paternalism.

By MRS. ATHERTON.

It is rarely worth while to reply to "answers," these generally being not answers at all but a mere excuse to get into print on the strength of a name known to the public; yet I feel inclined to make an exception in favor of Mr. B. Peters of Plainfield, N. J. Like all English or pro-English, he is courteous at least, and there is nothing of the shifty disingenuousness that generally marks the effusions of the other side.

I can, therefore, only think him singularly lacking in powers of observation, if he never witnessed in London a parallel sight to the procession of miserable old women shuffling among the garbage cans of Gramercy Park in the gray morning hours. Never have I seen so many dilapidated females as in London, so many (generally professional) beggars; nowhere on earth are there so many slums as at the back doors of the famous streets of the wealthy class, or even those of the well-to-do. About ten years ago one of the British labor leaders made a trip to Paris in order to be able to return triumphantly and announce that the result of his personal inspection was that even Paris slums were better than London's. He was obliged to "eat his words," but his serene belief in the superior horrors of Whitechapel is significant.

It is perfectly true that the upper classes of England have done much to pauperize the lower by charities. Probably nowhere in the world are there so many. Nowhere do the people of wealth and rank feel such a sense of responsibility to the unfortunate, or give such really huge donations to charity. The result is the most ungrateful and the laziest poor to be found in any land, and no doubt it was as much with a desire to elevate this class as to benefit it that that most astute of politicians, Lloyd George, borrowed the workingman's insurance idea from Germany. No one will pretend to deny that Germany alone had solved the question of poverty, and that in the course of time, if she had behaved herself, her ideas would have prevailed far beyond her borders, even into countries far more monarchical than England. Now, there is the danger that all the fine fruits of her long years of endeavor for the betterment of human conditions will be taboo merely because made in Germany. She has dealt civilization a body blow in more ways than one.

Mr. Peters has given a very superficial attention to the working class of England during this contest if he believes that it could be driven into the fighting ranks by any method short of conscription. I do not deny that many workingmen have volunteered. I am talking of the mass, who have proved themselves quite as selfish as their employers in their apparent indifference to the fate of England. It is all very well for our workingmen to strike for better conditions at this moment—it is indeed their psychological moment—but would we have any sympathy for them if they held up supplies while we were at war with a powerful country and our existence as an independent nation threatened? That is what the British workingman has done again and again, and, what is more, he has spoken up in meeting, according to that time-honored privilege emphasized by Mr. Peters, and said he couldn't be worse off under German rule. Of course he could and would, but he speaks by the light of what intellect he has. It is just four years ago that I was in England and heard these questions discussed constantly, for every intelligent person outside of the British Government seems to have expected this war.

One bachelor I knew, feeling it was time to do something for his country besides living on his income and enjoying the opportunities she had accumulated during centuries of security, made it his business to go daily among the laboring class and reason with them upon their notorious lack of patriotism. The answer was invariably the same: "Let the Germans come. We don't care. We can't be worse off, and we hear there are no poor 'uns in Germany."

Now there is no shallower reasoning than that which attributes this tremendous breach between the laboring and the governing classes in England to selfish indifference on the part of the aristocracy and the upper middle class. The unwritten laws of caste (which would soon obtain among a thousand anarchists stranded on a desert island) must always breed envy and hatred, but the real secret of England's hesitation to follow the example of Germany—who practically says: "Don't you dare be poor and lazy. You have no excuse, for I'll do all the thinking," lies in the fact that she is the author of two collocations which are a part of the religion of the United States of America: "Hands off!" "Mind your own business!" Nobody minds his own business as well as an Englishman, and even when he pours out his money in charity he is almost apologetic if obliged to come into actual contact with the beneficiaries. The women who devote so much of their time to the poor exercise the utmost tact, for no one knows better than the charitable public spirited men and women of England the irritable independence of the working class, particularly when it works;—before the war, or at least four years ago, it was estimated that there were a million and a half unemployed in England.

England has exemplified this profound knowledge of the average Briton's sensitiveness in her later-day treatment of her colonies—like all countries she has learned many and bitter lessons, but she has learned them; that is the point. She sends them representatives of the Crown who maintain a state befitting their rank and the mother country, and no more. The colonies do the governing. Moreover, they know that if they should suddenly demand their complete freedom, while several years might be wasted in palaver, they would not have to shed a drop of blood to get it. (Lest any one feel disposed to rush in with a denial, quoting India, I will merely reiterate here that India is not a British colony.)

This, therefore, is the reason for Britain's seeming indifference to the poverty within her central empire. She has fought the great fight among nations for all she has, let her own fight for what they want or hold their peace. Britain, it must be remembered, is an empire only in name, her sovereign a figurehead. She is still a democracy in the throes it is true, but she is far more of a democracy, in spite of Court and titled class, than she is a kingdom—the word empire may be applied to her in its generic sense as long as she holds her vast outlying possessions.

Of course only time and history will prove whether she—and we—are right in practicing and encouraging the spirit of democracy as against the—so far—successful paternalism of Germany. If England is defeated in this war no doubt many will argue that it is quite as much because she has permitted every man to do his own thinking as to the inefficiency of her government during the crisis; just as they will argue that France will owe her defeat to her low birth rate; it will be a temporary triumph at least for the German machine. But although there is no doubt that there would be a widespread loss of confidence among the nations of the world in which the democratic tide was mounting so irresistibly before this war, and they would apprehend that to survive they must adopt the triumphant method, I do not believe this morbid spirit would persist throughout one generation. No man in whom has been bred a sense of personal independence would submit for long to the bureaucratic machine.

Those that do the most thinking may reform conditions world without end, but the improvement must be imposed with tact, not rammed down the throat. Democracy is a beneficent virus whose first effects may be poisonous, like the first effects of education imposed upon the masses, but I do not believe the antitoxin exists that for good or evil can exterminate it; if only because it increases a man's self-respect—or, should I say, exalts his ego? It is an ideal at all events, and ideals have a way of surviving material defeat. For that is what the German conquest would be—purely material; and it is quite possible that her own depleted veins would prove hospitable to the virus I have mentioned while she was still too weak or too busy to rush in her antidotes.

It seems to me that the great lesson for us in this war is to study deeply the case of England and profit by it before it is too late. There may be ways of binding our unionized working classes to us, of, in fact, manipulating our diverse units into a homogeneous nation while avoiding a blighting paternalism on the one hand and a menacing individualism on the other.

GERTRUDE ATHERTON.

THE TEACHERS' SIDE.

An Appeal from One Who Has Grown Old in School Service.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your paper is known for its honesty and fairness to those who feel they are oppressed. There have been talks in the papers upon the teachers in our public schools. I have been one of these teachers for nearly a generation, and I now find myself in a difficult position, and I want to ask your advice with that of others who are interested in the matter.

We teachers have been accused by public officials of working only five days of the week and five hours a day, being overpaid and underworked. I wish these well-paid officials could know something about what a conscientious school teacher has to accomplish. We have to be on hand in the morning at twenty minutes before 9, and our school is supposed to end about 3 o'clock. Then comes consultations with girls for whom we are appointed advisers, consultations with classes, its class representatives, and class entertainments. In fact, I have been chaperone for years for the whole class, and then I take home my daily and nightly work of papers and reports, so I average about ten hours a day, six or seven days in the week. Naturally I am worn out, completely exhausted, when the school year ends. I have been in the service over thirty years and am entitled to my retirement and pension, and when I come to ask for it I am told that the pension funds have been squandered and that certain officials have tried to reduce our salaries, and it is indefinite when I can get my retirement or get my pension; that possibly I might get my retirement for one year on half pay, but after that, when I shall be older than I now am, I shall have to go back to my work again.

A representative of the teachers on the Board of Trustees of the Pension Fund informs me that we should have to wait for a long while before there would be a chance of any more pensions being paid, and apparently he has protested against the decision of the local officers of the City Government, through whose council our money has been dispersed. One party interested said that if they had the money they would bring suit against the city, but you know what that means and what it would cost. I have not got the money, and I do not know what will happen to me if I am turned out of my position, for I am getting no younger each day, and I am refused the pension to which I have looked forward all these years past.

New York, Aug. 6, 1915. TEACHER.

JOYS OF MILITARY WORK.

Men Do Not Join the Guard for the Uniforms or Entertainments.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Sutcliff's letter printed in THE TIMES leaves, I think, a big loophole for the shirking of duty by some National Guardsmen. Some, as he says, may have been attracted to the N. Y. N. G. by the uniforms and the social life; but I believe there are not many such.

Do you know of any who would not step forward if war occurred, no matter where, married or not? Uniforms are becoming less and less conspicuous. To the uninitiated, it may sometimes be very difficult to discern the differences in uniform between a private and a Brigadier General. One star, and leather instead of canvas puttees, is the only difference. Dress parades are becoming less and less frequent

WEBER AND FIELDS COME BACK HOME

FIRST TIME SINCE 1897

Joe Weber and Lew Fields have found their way back to the vaudeville stage. Yesterday afternoon, between the efforts of a prima donna from Canada and the staging of a very modern song and dance act, they went on and did their turn at the Palace. It was the first time they had appeared in the varieties since 1897. In that interval of eighteen years they had opened and closed their famous little music hall and subsequently gone their separate ways, one as producer and the other as star. Now they are in the bill at the two-a-day. The Palace is a reasonably large theatre, but it was not big enough yesterday to hold all those who wished to welcome Weber and Fields back home.

For this occasion the old, familiar costumes were fished out of some dusty trunk and the old make-up fondly donned. When Fields stalked onto the stage with the littler partner half trotting, half waddling at his side, there was an uproarious greeting from the other side of the footlights, and it was some time before the hubbub subsided sufficiently for Fields to let his hands stray toward Weber's expectant eyes.

For those theatregoers whose memories reach back beyond season before last, the pleasure of that quarter hour was in large measure the pleasure of memory. Weber and Fields did nothing new. There was no need to teach these old dogs new tricks. The old ones were what the audience wanted—and got. From time to time Meyer would "expression" his overweening affection for Mike by means of violent assault and battery, and Mike submitted warily to Meyer's teaching him a game of pool. Then they did a clog in honor, perhaps, of the old museum days when they had to do their turn no less than eight times a day. And finally they were caught in a laudable attempt to pass themselves off as a piece of marble statuary. It was all very good fun.

The Keith offices announce that for this they are paying the handsomest salary ever achieved in vaudeville. It is doubtless a painfully large sum—a considerable increase from the $6 a week paid for the team when Joe Weber and Lew Fields, late of the Allen Street School, consented to entertain in black-face the patrons of the Chatham Square Museum. But that was thirty-nine years ago.

They are the headliners of an uncommonly good bill. Houdini remains, and yesterday afternoon extricated himself from a punishment coat brought up from the audience and strapped upon him by four seemingly bona fide men in khaki. Nellie V. Nichols, a prime favorite at the Palace, contributes handsomely, and Joe Jackson has dropped some new things to do with that absurd bicycle of his. Mme. Donalda pleases with her singing. Vaudeville is able to pay royally for abundant talent, but it has no more amusing act than that contributed by the team called Weber and Fields. One would venture to predict that they have a future in the two-a-day.

'GIRL FROM UTAH' RETURNS.

With the same three stars at the head of its company and with at least two new songs to brighten its score, "The Girl from Utah" came back to town last evening to reopen the Knickerbocker Theatre for the season and to spend three weeks there before taking to the long, long road. Julia Sanderson dances ever so daintily and sings in her best sugar-sweet manner, Donald Brian trips through the polka as if he had invented it, and Joseph Cawthorne has thought up several new German atrocities with which to surprise the English language. Which means that all's well at the Knickerbocker.

The original score could boast no songs more engaging than the two which have been added to it during the Summer vacation. The melody of "I Want to be the Captain" will scarcely enrapture New York, but it is the excuse for some vaudeville byplay that is extremely amusing. However, it is "Molly Dear, It's You I'm After" that is so fetching, a saucy little song that Miss Sanderson sings very prettily.

Last night's audience seemed charmed to hear the "Same Sort of Girl" once more and even bore up very well under that strange lyric, "They Didn't Believe Me." Great hilarity greeted Mr. Brian and Mr. Cawthorne when, with simple earnestness, they tried to sing some swipes with Julia Sanderson and altogether it was a festive occasion. As becomes a Frohman star, Marie Tempest beamed on the proceedings from a box.

FILM CENSORS OVERRULED.

Pennsylvania Judge Removes Ban in First Appeal of Kind.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Aug. 9.—For the first time in the history of Pennsylvania a motion picture play was exhibited today in a courtroom as testimony in its own behalf. The exhibition was before Judge John Patterson of Common Pleas. After a hearing which followed the picture in the Mayor's private room, the court reversed the State Board of Motion Picture Censors that had forbidden the public showing of the picture, and the photo play will be released immediately in Pennsylvania.

The case was of unique interest in the picture industry, as it was the first appeal ever taken from the censors, whose powers were heretofore quite arbitrary. The photo play is Blanche Sweet in "The Secret Orchard," by William C. De Mille, from the play by Channing Pollock, based on the novel by Agnes and Egerton Castle. It was produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

The censors had disapproved because, they said, public morals were jeopardized. Mr. Pollock, William Ashurst, librarian of Philadelphia, who said the novel had been in the Public Library since 1901, and Arthur Friend of the Lasky Company testified. Judge Patterson said the photo play taught a good lesson.

BOURBON PRINCE TO WED.

Philip of Sicilian Branch to Marry Duke of Vendome's Daughter.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 10.—The Times announces that a marriage has been arranged between Prince Philip of Bourbon-Sicilies, son of the Count of Caserta, and Princess Marie Louise of Bourbon-Orleans, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Vendome and Alençon.

Prince Philip is the ninth child of Prince Alphonse Marie Joseph Albert, Count de Caserta, of the branch of the House of Bourbon, which formerly ruled the two Sicilies. This branch of the Bourbon family is known as the second branch of the two Sicilies. Prince Philip was born in Cannes, in 1883, and is an honorary Lieutenant of the Ninth Cavalry Regiment of the Spanish Army, which is known as "The Princess's Hussars."

Miss Beatrice Claflin Engaged.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTHAMPTON, N. Y., Aug. 9.—The engagement of Miss Beatrice Claflin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur B. Claflin, to Robert Potter Breese, son of Mr. and Mrs. James L. Breese, was announced yesterday. No date has been fixed for the wedding. Miss Claflin, with her parents, is spending the Summer at the Irving House.

THE WEEK IN THE THEATRES.

Four new plays and one of last season's successful musical comedies will be added to the list of Broadway attractions this week. Only a few plays remain from last Spring and Winter. They are "It Pays to Advertise," which will register its three hundred and ninety-eighth performance in Cohan's Theatre this week; Ziegfeld's "Follies" in the New Amsterdam; the Behman Show, which will end its run in the Columbia Saturday night, and "A Full House," a hot weather farce, in the Longacre.

In addition to Weber and Fields the new Palace bill includes Nellie V. Nichols in a program of character songs given in costume; the Schwarz Brothers in their familiar comedy sketch, "The Broken Mirror"; Joe Jackson and his dilapidated bicycle; Houdini in some of his clever tricks, and Mme. Donalia, a prima donna from the opera houses of Europe, who sings selections from some of her roles.

Fritzi Scheff, who had to cancel her engagement at Brighton the New Brighton Theatre some weeks ago because of illness, returned there yesterday. Miss Scheff's repertoire embraces songs from light and grand opera. Jack Donahue and Marion Stewart presented a comedy skit called "Him and Her." Mlle. Vadie gave her ballet dance, and "Odd Nonsense" is what James Mullen and Alan Coogan call their comedy offering.

A playlet by Tom Barry entitled "Twenty-Odd Years" is acted by Harry Beresford and company in Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre as the feature of the new program. Ryan and Lee present a comedy sketch. "You've Spoiled It," by John Hyams and company offer "The Danger Line," a playlet.

"From Out the Big Snows," a picture taken in the Canadian Northwest, is the feature of the Vitagraph's new program. The story contains some stirring incidents, which are doubly effective because of the wild and picturesque background. "The Dawn of Understanding," a two-part picture, has Leah Baird and Maurice Costello for its stars; "The Siren" and a chapter of "The Goddess" are other numbers.

A picture version of "The Secret Orchard," a play by Channing Pollock based on Agnes and Egerton Castle's book of that title, is the feature in the Strand Theatre. Blanche Sweet acted the principal role for the film. The program embraces new travel and scientific pictures.

"Sold," a five-part picture from the studios of the Famous Players Company, is the new feature in the Broadway Theatre. Her it Pauline Frederick acted the principal role.

"The Birth of a Nation," the spectacular film based on Thomas Dixon's story "The Clansman," is being shown in both the Liberty Theatre and the Brighton Beach Music Hall.

Hugh Norton and Company in "After the Honeymoon" head the new vaudeville program on the American Roof. A program of Scotch music is given by the Kinkaid Kilties.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Rehearsals will begin today of a dramatization of W. B. Maxwell's novel, "The Ragged Messenger," under the direction of John Cort. Walker Whiteside will play the principal role, that of John Morton, a street evangelist who falls heir to a fortune, and in his support will be Lillian Cavanaugh, Maud Milton, Maris Pettis, Josephine Morse, Stephen Wright, J. Palmer Collins, and Allan Thomas. The first performance will be given in Buffalo on Aug. 30.

The opening of "Under Fire" has been postponed to Thursday night in the Hudson to allow more time for rehearsals.

Herbert Wilke gave the impersonation of the Kaiser in the tableau in Ziegfeld's "Follies" in the New Amsterdam last night. The part was originally taken by the late Melville Stewart.

Lillah McCarthy will return to America in the Fall and will play her original parts in "Androcles and the Lion" and "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife" when the plays are presented on tour by Granville Barker and Percy Burton. O. P. Heggie will have his original role, and the rest of the cast will be practically as it was when the plays were given in Wallack's.

Amelia Bingham has obtained a play entitled, "His Passion's Waterloo," by Leonard Judson, a Columbia graduate, and will introduce an episode from it in her vaudeville offering.

Montgomery and Stone and the "Chin-Chin" company have begun rehearsals for the return of the musical comedy to the Globe next Monday.

SEEK MOTHER OF DEAD BABY

Woman Who Left Child in Another's Care Disappears.

The police are trying to find the parents of a seven-weeks-old boy who died in the Flushing Hospital on Sunday. The child was brought to that institution by Miss Margaret Keating of 100 Congress Avenue, Flushing. Miss Keating told the hospital authorities that the child's name was Anthony Carli, and that he had been left at her home by a woman who said she was Mrs. Loretta Carli of Bay Shore, L. I.

Miss Keating has a permit from the Board of Health to take babies to board. She asserted that one month ago the woman, who described herself as Mrs. Carli, and a man called at her home and asked if they could board the child there. She consented, and they gave her $3 and a box of clothing of excellent quality. Miss Keating asserts that she received two letters from Mrs. Carli, who gave her address in care of William McAnulty, Bay Shore.

A day after the baby arrived at the Keating home it was taken sick and removed to the hospital. The police have been trying to find the Carli woman, but without success. No man by the name of McAnulty could be found at Bay Shore.

MUST HAVE OUR OWN SHIPS.

Seattle Merchants Tell Trade Commission the Need Is Imperative.

SEATTLE, Aug. 9.—Building of the American merchant marine is an imperative need, Judge Thomas Burke, President of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, told the Federal Trade Commission at the opening of a two-day meeting of that body here to-day. Other witnesses supported Judge Burke's arguments.

"Let this commission," said Judge Burke, "can suggest to Congress legislation which will place American shipping on an equal basis with its competitors, it will be rendering a service of incalculable benefit to the citizens of the United States.

"But one ship flying the American flag sails from Seattle," Judge Burke said, "and soon this will be hauled down," he continued.

"We are ready for business, but are powerless to go further without ships. The markets of the world are open to us as never before, but we cannot take advantage of these opportunities because we have no vessels in which to send our goods."

CROWD THREATENS AUTO'ST

Man Run Down Suffers Fractures of Legs, Ribs, and Lung Is Punctured.

Louis Satkina of 350 Thatford Avenue, Brooklyn, was struck by an automobile last night as he tried to cross East Broadway at Montgomery Street, and was tossed fifteen feet. Dr. Gamble, who took him to Gouverneur Hospital, said both his legs had been broken, his collarbone was fractured, and three ribs had been broken, the end of one of them puncturing a lung.

The car was driven by Angus Cameron of 452 West Forty-ninth Street, and belongs to his cousin, Reuben Cameron, of 429 West Forty-eighth Street, who is said to be an inspector in the State Department of Health.

A crowd surrounded the car and threats were made against its occupants, but Policeman Romano arrived and took the cousins to the Madison Street Station, where they were locked up, charged with felonious assault.

TWO BATHERS DROWNED.

Three Women Rescued at Rockaway —Quicksand Holds Boy.

The sultry weather yesterday took many persons to the beaches, and there were several rescues and two drownings. Two bodies were recovered of persons who had been drowned for several days.

Miss Jane McLucklie of Madison, N. J., was swimming at Rockaway Beach when the undertow overpowered her. Her screams were echoed by Mrs. John Williams of Bloomfield, N. J., and Miss Rose Green of Newark, and Thomas O'Day, a New York fireman, and Michael Flood, a policeman of Newark, went after the distressed bathers. The two men brought the women all ashore, and Dr. Victor took them to the Rockaway Beach Hospital, suffering from shock and submersion.

Twelve-year-old Seymour Berg and his brother, Harold, 14, the sons of Samuel Berg, a builder, of 655 Georgia Avenue, Brooklyn, were swimming with a crowd of other small boys in Fresh Creek, an inlet of Jamaica Bay at Canarsie, yesterday afternoon when Seymour, diving, came up with cramps and yelled for help. Harold swam to him, and the drowning boy dragged the other down. Both were out of sight when Samuel Feinsticker of 392 Hegeman Avenue and Abraham Horowitz of 340 Thatford Avenue ran up in response to the yells of the other boys.

The young men, knowing that the bottom of the creek was quicksand, got a rope and then dived for the boys. Feinsticker got Harold, put the rope around him, and hauled him to the surface, but the body of Seymour had already disappeared in the sand. Dr. Mayer of the Bradford Street Hospital resuscitated Harold and carried him home. The police of Harbor Squad A grappled for Seymour's body last night and finally got it.

William Corcoran, 33 years old, a driver of 752 Second Avenue, was drowned yesterday while swimming in the East River off Fortieth Street. His body was recovered off East Forty-third Street. Dr. Salzberg of Flower Hospital worked over him with a pulmotor, but the man was dead.

The body of a man found in the Harlem River on July 24 was identified as that of Daniel Read, 39 years old, a salesman of 970 Lenox avenue. The identification was made yesterday by Cassius Read, father of the drowned man.

A park employe yesterday recovered the body of Sidney Glickson, 9 years old, of 945 East 167th Street, the Bronx, who was drowned last Friday in the lake in Crotona Park. The boy had gone to the lake with several companions, who left him there playing alone. Nothing more was heard or seen of him until his body was recovered yesterday. The police were about to drag the lake.

A two-day conference by representative suffragists from four States in which suffrage amendments are to be voted upon next Autumn will be held on Thursday and Friday in East Orange, N. J. At 7:30 a banquet will be given at the Essex Country Club, Hutton Park, West Orange. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt will speak on "The Suffrage Campaign of 1915," and Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, President of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, will also make an address.

SUFFRAGE MESSAGE ON SEA.

Boat at Coney Advertises "Votes for Women" Campaign.

The latest scheme the suffragists have for advertising their cause and emphasizing that November will be a momentous month to them is a strange, square-rigged craft, a boat of hitherto unknown type, that runs from Coney Island to Brighton Beach and back again every Saturday and Sunday afternoon. It bears a ten-foot-long sign of bright yellow oilcloth, framed and mounted on uprights, so as to be seen by all and bears on it in big black letters the injunction: "Vote for Woman Suffrage November 2nd." The suffragists say it is greeted with many cheers and dripping fingers point the sign out to newcomers on the beaches.

When off a afternoon patrol the boat is beached near the giant coaster baths, where its message is plainly visible to all. It has been hired to carry the suffrage message all through the Summer to the bathers.

FLOWERS AS SUFFRAGE BAIT

To be Handed to Commuters with Invitations to a Meeting.

OCEANSIDE, L. I., Aug. 9.—Suffragists of this place have arranged a novel scheme to draw a crowd to Terrell Hall tomorrow night, when Dr. Katharine B. Davis, Commissioner of Correction of New York, is to make a suffrage speech.

Every train arriving in the early evening at Lynbrook, East Rockaway, and Rockville Centre, three points of which Oceanside is the geographical centre, will be met by feminine suffrage emissaries, who will present the commuters with cards announcing the meeting. With the invitation will be a boutonière of some yellow flower, the suffrage color. Local gardens have been ransacked for yellow nasturtiums, oxeyed daisies, golden rod, and sunflowers. Mrs. Richard M. Bent will preside.

BAR HARBOR EXPRESS HAS A NARROW ESCAPE

Just Misses Collision With a Switching Engine at Groton, Conn.

Special to The New York Times

GROTON, Conn., Aug. 9.—Passengers aboard the Bar Harbor Express, many of them week-end visitors en route from Bar Harbor and intermediate points in New England to New York, did not realize how narrowly they escaped a wreck in this borough when the heavy passenger coaches whizzed through at 4:29 A. M. today.

A yard man signalled to one of the trains on the siding to go ahead, and the switching engineer thought the signal was for him to advance to the main track, over which the Bar Harbor express was due to pass in two minutes. Not until the switching engine had run over the frog and was well out upon the main track did the yard men realize the gravity of the situation, and there was some lively work to get the engine back on the siding. The express came down from Pequennock under the little overhead bridge and brushed by the switch engine as the latter was backing at full speed to safety on the side track.

TO INDICT FOR EASTLAND.

Federal Grand Jury, It Is Said, May Accuse Fifteen Persons.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—Indictments against ten persons, possibly fifteen, are expected to be returned by the Federal Grand Jury tomorrow afternoon when it resumes consideration of the cause and responsibility for the capsizing of the steamer Eastland in the Chicago River July 24.

United States District Attorney Charles F. Clyne, who is said to have been in conference with Attorney General Gregory on the subject of the investigation, will return to Chicago tomorrow.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Solicitor Thurman of the Department of Commerce and Supervising Inspector General Uhler of the Steamboat Inspection Service returned from Chicago today, and gave Acting Secretary of Commerce Sweet a general résume of the proceedings of last week in connection with the investigation of the Eastland disaster. No official report was made.

General Uhler brought to the department the official report of the Illinois authorities, headed by Lieut. Gov. O'Hara, who conducted an inquiry into the disaster. This report makes several recommendations in regard to legislation for the control of excursion vessels, and also in regard to changes in the regulations, so as to take out of the hands of one or two local steamboat inspection officials the authority to change the limit of the number of passengers such vessels may carry.

The most important recommendation, in the view of the officials of the Department of Commerce, is that which proposes that the plans for vessels that may be employed for excursion purposes be submitted to a board of competent naval architects for its examination and approval before such craft can be built and used in domestic waters as excursion steamers.

COUNT OF MYSTERY DIES.

Leaves Denver to Puzzle Over His Mysterious Past.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., Aug. 9.—Richard Von Millar, concerning whose past there is much mystery, died this morning at the County Hospital. He eluded a Deputy Sheriff on Wednesday last and, twelve miles from this city, leaped from the observation platform of a train traveling fifty miles an hour, while being brought back from Salt Lake City for passing bogus checks.

It has been learned that Von Millar was a companion in Milwaukee of Paul Schwab, nephew of Charles M. Schwab, and that he was entertained by German families of prominence in that city. He was accepted as a Count.

According to information received here, Von Millar left Milwaukee without paying for an automobile which Paul Schwab assumed responsibility, and left also other financial obligations which caused a search to be made for him by detectives.

It is asserted by all who knew Von Millar that there is little doubt that he was formerly an army officer, and that he was a man of education. He came to Denver with letters of introduction to well-known persons and was accepted readily. He had been absent from Denver four days when he was arrested at Salt Lake City at the request of the Brown Palace Hotel management, which charged that he owed $500 for board and that two of his checks were worthless.

A CHANGED ROCKEFELLER.

Death of His Wife Makes a Difference at Cleveland Estate.

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 9.—There is a changed master at Forest Hill, the East Cleveland estate of the world's richest man. That is what John D. Rockefeller's closest friends were saying today after visits to Forest Hill, to which Mr. Rockefeller returned recently from Pocantico Hills.

The old attendants who have cared for the lawns and groves of Forest Hill say they know why their master has changed. It is because their mistress has gone, they say. For the first time, Mr. Rockefeller tramps and drives about his estate without the companionship of his wife. Mrs. Rockefeller died in February. The attendants tell, too, how the changed master broke down and cried at his first breakfast at Forest Hill after his return, because of the vacant chair.

Mr. Rockefeller used to play golf on his Forest Hill course with keen delight almost every day. He plays but seldom now, and without the old-time zeal.

John Condon Dead.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—John Condon, widely known as a race track owner, died today at his home here from an attack of paralysis following a long period of illness. He was 60 years old and had been blind for many years.

Although he amassed several fortunes during his lifetime, it is not known whether he died rich or a comparatively poor man. His property consists chiefly of race tracks in the United States and Canada.

WOMEN MAY SAVE GIRLS' SHIP HOTEL

ASK AID OF ARBUCKLE HEIRS

If Latter Grant Use of the Jacob A. Stamler the Fund for its Support Is to be Obtained.

Forty-five young business women employed in the office of Corporation Counsel Frank L. Polk, their sympathies aroused by the news that the Jacob A. Stamler Deep Sea Hotel for Working Girls was to be abandoned, decided yesterday to start a whirlwind campaign to raise $1,500 to maintain the hotel if the continued use of the boat itself could be procured.

The boat has been moored at the foot of East Twenty-third Street for several years, since it was purchased by the late John Arbuckle and opened as a hotel where girls who earned small wages could obtain a comfortable home and good food at minimum cost. The heirs of Mr. Arbuckle a few days ago announced their intention to close the hotel on Aug. 28, and the tenants made a tearful plea for aid. The young women in Mr. Polk's office said last evening that they expected to learn today whether the Arbuckle heirs would consent to the continued use of the boat itself provided the operating cost of the hotel, above the small income derived from what the girls pay for their board, were paid by subscription. As the boat is said to be still seaworthy, it is feared that the heirs have planned to sell it or make some other use of it.

The present campaign was started because Miss Lillian L. Deaver, head of the Woman's Department of the Morris Plan Company, read of the sorrows of these girls in the newspapers. She dropped work for the time and soon had the young women in Mr. Polk's office interested. A committee was organized and if the continued use of the boat itself can be procured the public will be asked to make contributions. Miss Minnie A. E. Walsh consented to act as Treasurer and to receive contributions at Room 1,739 in the Municipal Building, one of the suite occupied by the Corporation Counsel.

Others in the office who promised to give time and effort to the campaign yesterday were Misses Anna L. Martin, Mary B. Faulkner, Elizabeth A. Vibbard, Estelle R. Daley, Theresa Assenheimer, and Alice E. Willis. They have asked women employed in other establishments to aid in the movement by obtaining contributions. This request is a general one, made to all who are interested in the effort to save the ship for its guests.

Miss Deaver said she thought there would be little trouble in raising $1,500 if permission to use the ship could be obtained from the Arbuckle estate. She said:

"In these days when millions of dollars are being spent for war munitions and other such causes it seems strange if we in New York cannot raise $1,500 for so good a cause as this."

Miss Deaver was associated with Mrs. J. Borden Harriman during the public hearings of the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations and is deeply interested in social welfare work.

Captain Sheeley, skipper of the Stamler, has stated that $1,500 a year would make up the deficit and keep the hotel open. He also said there was no danger of the boat sinking, as it was in good condition, although built in 1867. The present plan is to raise enough money to keep the hotel open at least for one year more, and, if it is found practical, to take steps later to obtain funds to prevent the dismantling of the big boat after that time.

Captain Sheeley received several letters yesterday offering aid. One was from Joseph E. Sainsbury of 118 Adelphi Street, Brooklyn, who promised to contribute $5 a year, and another from Frederick C. Knight of Great Neck, L. I., who promised $30 a year. Miss Anne Chase wrote from Great Island, Mass., asking for further particulars, and promised to aid in the work.

Mrs. R. W. Morrison of 34 East Twenty-second Street, who before her marriage was one of the guests of the deep sea hotel, told a Times reporter yesterday that she had called on Miss Belle De Costa Greene, librarian for the late J. Pierpont Morgan, and had been assured that Miss Greene would do what she could to help save the hotel.

The fifty girls now guests at the hotel joined fervently yesterday in the appeal for funds, and were greatly cheered by the news that steps were taken to save the hotel which promised to be successful. The girls had written to Miss Anne Morgan in an effort to interest her in their home, and appeals had been sent to other persons who have in former times visited the hotel and indicated that they were in sympathy with its philanthropic mission.

The fact that several of the guests at the hotel are out of work because of the war has added to the fear with which some of these young women face the future. A number of the girls say that they did not know where they would go. While on the ship the girls who have been lucky enough to keep good positions have aided their unfortunate companions, and the happy family has been kept together.

The committee of young women organized to save the ship expect that the campaign will be well under way by this evening. Every business woman is asked to aid, and the contributions received will be acknowledged in the newspapers.

WANT AMERICAN COLORS.

The Bradford Dyers Are Ready to Take All We Can Send Them.

R. K. Williams, formerly Vice Consul of the United States at Bradford, visited the local office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Custom House yesterday. He reported that there is a very keen demand in England among textile manufacturers for American dyestuffs. In fact, the shortage is so pronounced, he said, that the Bradford Dyers' Association is ready to give a guarantee of a steady order covering a period of five or more years to any American color manufacturer who will furnish dyestuffs.

"Textile manufacturers in the Bradford, Leeds and Huddersfield districts will take large quantities of dyestuffs in any price within reason," Mr. Williams added. "They depended, of course, on Germany for their supplies, but are anxious to open relations with the American market, as they say they will never buy of Germany again. The British Government has subsidized a large concern making dyes in Manchester, but this can only supply its regular customers. The result is a virtual color famine.

"Hesitation has been evidenced by manufacturers here as to their ability to compete with foreign-made dyestuffs after the war. The offer of the Bradford Association will give them assurance of a market for their product for a long period and will enable them to reach a point where competition will be possible. Delay may mean the loss of the opportunity; for however certain manufacturers now are that they will not trade with Germany after the war, they will probably be forced to seek the market where they can fill their needs."

Relative to the cloth market in Bradford, Mr. Williams said that exports of textiles from there to the United States showed big gains immediately after the German trade was cut off by hostilities. He pointed out that, while foreign consumption of the English products had not reached so high as the total before the war, business in the Bradford district had increased because many of the textile firms, particularly in the Leeds district, were employed in filling contracts for army goods.

Mr. Williams will be at the local bureau, room 409, Custom House, today between 2 and 4 o'clock, and will be glad to meet merchants interested in filling English orders for dyestuffs. He will also discuss textile conditions in the Bradford market. He has been transferred to a post in Santo Domingo, for which he will leave tomorrow.

GIRL HUNCHBACK FIGHTS FOUR MEN

Shrill blasts from a police whistle brought Policeman O'Connell, Gracbner, and Harty of the West Forty-seventh Street Station racing to the restaurant of Tove Mapas at 561 Eleventh Avenue last night. On the sidewalk outside lay nineteen-year-old Paula Parunka, the cashier, a little hunchback. Inside the store the policemen saw Mapas struggling with four men.

The showcase where cigars were kept was broken. Tables were overturned, their marble tops smashed, and broken crockery and food was scattered over the floor. The policeman jumped into the fight with their nightsticks and presently had three prisoners, the fourth man escaping.

Then Mapas and the girl, though badly beaten and almost senseless, told how three of the men had entered the store and ordered something to eat, while the fourth had waited outside the door as though on guard. When the three had finished they walked to the cashier's desk, said the girl, and one of them tried to grab the money from the cash drawer. There was $80 in it.

Miss Parunka slammed the door shut and it locked automatically. One of the men grabbed her by the hair and hauled her from her stool. Another struck her in the face and she was dragged across the store, over the sill of the door and out onto the sidewalk, where one of the men pounded her head on the pavement, calling on her to open the cash drawer for him. She shouted until she was nearly senseless, and the man continued to beat her until cries from within called his attention.

Mapas had grabbed a club from a corner, and with this had felled one of his assailants. He was trying to fight off the other two when the first man revived and joined the fight, and it was then Mapas blew his police whistle.

The prisoners said they were Daniel J. Smith of 586 Eleventh Avenue, Michael McEnroe of 524 West Fifty-third Street, and John Morris of 505 West Forty-fourth Street. They were charged with assault, malicious mischief, disorderly conduct and intoxication.

EDITOR AT 83, BACK TO WORK

H. A. Reeves Consents to Use Auto, but Refuses to Wed.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENPORT, L. I., Aug. 9.—Henry A. Reeves, editor of The Republican Watchman of this place, who is more than 83 years old, has sufficiently recovered from an operation, performed in a New York hospital, to be back in his office in active work. Mr. Reeves has been in the hospital for nearly three months, and at one time his recovery was in grave doubt. He is Supervisor of his town as well as editor of one of the county's oldest weeklies.

The octogenarian has made two concessions to his physicians' demands. He has agreed to resign the Presidency of the Eastern Long Island Hospital Association and he has ordered an automobile in which to ride, as his accustomed long walks have been prohibited. Friends told him that he would be better off if he would marry, but he replied that when a bachelor had reached the age of 83 he was somewhat "set" in his ways, and it might be difficult for a young woman to put up with him.

WALTER C. KELLY INJURED.

Vaudeville Performer in Hospital After Row with Fuberton.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 9.—Walter C. Kelly, a vaudeville performer, is in the City Hospital here with several cuts about the face and R. A. Fuberton, a salesman, of New York City is under arrest, as the result of a fight between the two men today. Their quarrel originated many months ago when both men were passengers on the Cunard liner Lusitania.

The police say there was a row on the steamship in midocean. Last night Kelly and Fuberton met on the boardwalk. There was a continuance of the quarrel, but friends separated them. The second meeting was on Pacific Avenue today. Kelly alleges that the salesman used a knife on him.

Richard Horton, a life guard saw the row and arrested Fuberton who was released in bail tonight. He has been charged with disorderly conduct.

Michael Whelan of Hoboken Gets Estate of Australian Brother.

Michael Whelan, a truant officer of Hoboken, who has been living at the American Hotel, on River Street, in unpretentious style, is in receipt of information from Australia that a fortune of not less than a million dollars awaits him. Whelan had a brother, Patrick, in Kalgoorlie, Australia, engaged in the brewery business and owner of considerable real estate. He died recently.

A week ago Michael received a cablegram from a firm of lawyers in Kalgoorlie stating that Patrick had made him sole heir. The estate includes two large breweries and many parcels of real estate. Ex-Mayor George Gonzales of Hoboken verified the report yesterday that the truant officer had fallen heir to the fortune of his brother. Whelan is about 50 years of age and of excellent reputation in Hoboken.

TAKES WIDOW IN TROUSERS.

Unromantic Policeman Puts End to Jersey Woman's Lark.

Policeman Bauman of the West 100th Street Station saw a young person approaching him at Broadway and Ninetieth Street at 9:30 o'clock last evening clad in a suit of latest cut, but the suit was the only thing about the figure that looked mannish, so Bauman investigated.

She was Mrs. Sarah Davidson, a young widow of 10 Maolis Avenue, Bloomfield, N. J., the young person admitted, and she had donned the garments just for a lark.

"It'll be no lark," declared Bauman, who thinks he has troubles enough without importing them from New Jersey, so he took Mrs. Davidson to the station, where she was held for arraignment in Night Court. The temporarily exclusive use of the reserve room was given to her to change into her proper garments, which she carried in a parcel under her arm.

SAMUEL REA IN HOSPITAL.

President of Pennsylvania Railroad to Undergo an Operation.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 9.—Samuel Rea, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who has been ill at his home in Gladwyne for several days, was taken to the University of Pennsylvania Hospital for an operation today. There was a report in the financial district that Mr. Rea's condition was serious, but this was denied at the Pennsylvania Railroad offices. There it was said that Mr. Rea would undergo only a slight operation.

All inquiries at the Rea home as to the condition of the railroad President were referred to the railroad office, where, aside from the bare admission that Mr. Rae was ill, all information was withheld.

SEABOARD AIR GAINS 416 MILES OF TRACK

Consolidates Tributaries and Adds Two Seaports to the System.

$22,000,000 IN BONDS SOLD

Syndicate of More Than 25 Banks Takes Up 6 Per Cent. Thirty-Year Issue.

The Seaboard Air Line Railway, at a special meeting of the Board of Directors in Baltimore yesterday, adopted a new financial plan which consolidated some tributaries of the road, thereby adding 416 miles of track and two seaports, Charleston, S. C., and Georgetown, S. C., to the system. The consolidated road will be known as the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company and will execute a new first and consolidated mortgage authorizing an issue of $300,000,000 bonds. The plan was worked out and proposed by S. Davies Warfield, Chairman of the Board of the Seaboard Air Line.

A syndicate of bankers headed by the Guaranty Trust Company, the National City Bank, the Chase National Bank, the Bankers Trust Company, and including twenty-five banks in as many cities in all parts of the country, has purchased the greater part of the first issue of the new bonds, amounting to about $22,000,000. They are 6 per cent., thirty-year bonds and are a first lien on the 416 miles of main-line track between Hamlet, N. C., and Savannah, Ga.

The total authorization at this time will be $25,643,000, but a part of these bonds will be exchanged for underlying bonds of other companies and an additional $2,750,000 will be kept in the treasury of the company. The proceeds of the bonds sold to the syndicate will be used to meet 1916 maturities and to build an extension of eighty-five miles from Charleston to Savannah. This new line will become a part of the consolidated system.

The road which will be consolidated with the Seaboard Air Line is the Carolina Atlantic & Western Railway. This, in turn, is a consolidation, recently effected, of the North & South Carolina Railroad, the Charleston Northern & South Carolina Railroad, and the Georgetown & Western Railroad.

"By the consolidation," said Mr. Warfield yesterday, "the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company will have a low grade line from Hamlet, N. C., to Savannah, Ga. By this new line the Seaboard will reach Georgetown, Charleston, and Savannah; it will tap a rich and fertile country highly productive in cotton and tobacco; it will admit of the Seaboard's running time in the South being shortened; the consolidation will create a line with a maximum grade of only one-half of 1 per cent., as compared with 1½ per cent.—the maximum grade of the present line to Savannah—and will permit the increase of the full train load 127½ per cent.

"There will be issued presently under the new first and consolidated mortgage $22,893,000 6 per cent. thirty-year gold bonds. A part is to be used in exchange for underlying bonds of constituent companies. The balance has been sold, the proceeds to be used for the construction of the new line from Charleston to Savannah; for the retirement of equipment trust obligations falling due during the year ended June 30, 1916; for the retirement of $6,000,000 three-year notes due March 1, 1916; for the acquisition of certain new property, and for improvements."

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Appraisers Hold That Sample Rugs Have Commercial Value.

J. Friedenburg & Co., were sustained yesterday by the Board of General Appraisers in contentions dealing with the classification of marble mantels, benches and vases, all of which were assessed for duty under the present Tariff act at the rate of 50 per cent. ad valorem, as manufactures of marble. The board decided that some of the articles were produced by a professional sculptor without the assistance of any mechanical process, and should be admitted free of duty as "original sculptures." The balance of the importation was held dutiable at 15 per cent. ad valorem as "reproductions of sculptures."

Scheuer & Co., imported table centres from which threads have been omitted, drawn, punched or cut, while the remaining loose threads are adjusted and grouped, by means of additional threads inserted by hand, so as to form patterns or figures. Collector Malone held duty under the tariff at the rate of 60 per cent. as drawnwork. Duty at 30 per cent. as plain cotton fabrics was the claim. In overruling the claim, Judge Cooper said that the patterns formed in the goods in controversy are more elaborate than those in the tidies and bureau scarfs passed upon some time ago by the Customs Court. The General Appraiser held that that decision applies in the present protest and accordingly overruled the protest.

Schofield & Walter, were sustained in most of their claims that union towels imported under the tariff are properly dutiable at 35 per cent. ad valorem as towels of which cotton is the component material of chief value. The action of the Collector in returning the goods at 35 per cent. as flax chief value was reversed.

Wyman, Partridge & Co., Detroit, failed to substantiate their claims that so-called "sample rugs," are of no commercial value. Appraiser Sague reported that the samples appeared to be the material out of which rugs are made, varying in size from 9 by 11 inches, to 11 by 18½ inches. Although the goods were invoiced at 15c. the shippers are having a value, the importers have denied that the goods had any worth. As the testimony was regarded by the Board as inadequate, the Collector was affirmed in taking duty at 35 per cent. as manufactures of wool.

MRS. PROBST AVOIDS TRIAL.

Atlantic City Court Frees Her on Her Promise to Leave Town.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 9.—Mrs. James Probst, wife of the former proprietor of the Hotel Broztell at 3 East Twenty-seventh Street, New York, escaped trial on charges of disorderly conduct and malicious mischief today by promising the court to leave town.

She was arrested in her apartment on the Board Walk on Sunday night on a charge of disorderly conduct, after neighbors had complained to a policeman. She was released on bail of $10, but was later re-arrested on the charge that, angered because of her arrest, she had smashed furniture in her apartment. This time heavier bail was required.

Her lawyer arranged today that the charges should be dropped upon her promise to leave Atlantic City immediately. No witnesses were called, and the cause of the original charge of disorderly conduct was not disclosed. Mrs. Probst, who had been confined to his bed by illness, was removed to the railroad station and said that he refused to be identified with the case.

PATIENT BITES 3 NURSES.

Miss Ruth Carter's Condition Critical from Blood Poisoning.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 9.—Three nurses at the St. Elisabeth Hospital are suffering from blood poisoning, and one, Miss Ruth Carter of Arlington, is in a critical condition as the result of infection that followed wounds inflicted by Mrs. Andrew Kalisch of Carteret. In a fit of insanity, Mrs. Kalisch, a patient, attacked Miss Carter, seizing the nurse by the left hand and burying her teeth deep into the flesh. Two other nurses who hurried to Miss Carter's assistance were bitten also.

Efforts to prevent the infection from spreading were successful, except in the case of Miss Carter. Hospital physicians said today that her entire system had become affected by the poisoning.

Dr. A. S. Rose said that Mrs. Kalisch for several weeks prior to her symptoms of insanity had shown an especial fondness for Miss Carter. Mrs. Kalisch has been removed to the State Hospital for the insane at Morris Plains.

COMMODITIES MARKETS.

WHEAT.

The wheat market advanced ¾c. to ⅞c. early in the day on scattered buying, prompted by a show of strength abroad, where the trade is apparently somewhat anxious regarding supplies in the immediate future, and on rains in portions of the Southwest. Toward the close there was more or less covering for over the Government report, and prices experienced a partial rally, closing with net losses of ½c. to ⅝c. The visible supply in the United States increased 794,000 bushels, compared with an increase of 4,580,000 last year. In the local cash market No. 2 red Winter wheat was quoted at $1.21, cost, insurance and freight, New York spot; No. 2 hard at $1.26½, cost, insurance and freight, New York to arrive; No. 1 Northern Duluth and No. 1 Northern Manitoba, $1.11½, cost, insurance and freight, Buffalo.

CORN.

Prices in the corn market were easier, closing with net losses of ⅜c to ½c. Weather conditions were more favorable for the growing crop, and offerings of old corn from the country showed a material increase. The visible supply increased 823,000 bushels, compared with a decrease of 491,000 bushels last year. In the local cash market No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at 89c, lake and rail, Aug. 20 shipment.

OATS

Offerings in new oats from the country were larger, as a result of more active harvesting operations, and prices were lower, closing with net losses of ⅝c@1¼c. The visible supply decreased 313,000 bushels, compared with an increase of 3,628,000 bushels last year. The farm reserves were 55,607,000 bushels, compared with 62,467,000 bushels last year. PROVISIONS.

The market for hog products was only moderately active, but after moving within a narrow range during the first part of the day prices hardened on a little more aggressive buying influenced by a growing belief that prices were low enough, notwithstanding the very large supplies. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 25,000, estimated for Tuesday 13,000; Kansas City received 5,000 and Omaha 6,000.

Raw Silk Advances Again.

The Yokohama market, according to A. P. Villa & Bros., has advanced again, owing to a large demand from Europe and America. On account of the heavy buying movement, the visible stock has not increased, remaining stationary at 5,000 bales during the past few weeks. Canton is gradually recovering from the effects of the flood, and the latest cables state that prices are going up. Shanghai is a trifle more active for Tussahs and the better grades of Tsatlee. Steam filatures are bought for near-by and forward deliveries at an increased price. Italian exchange has advanced about 3½ per cent. and business has become more quiet there. In New York business is quite active.

In Quest of Information.

There is no mid-Summer dullness at the branch office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Custom House, according to E. C. Porter, agent in charge. Last week the visitors numbered 270, and on Thursday seventy-three callers were recorded, this being one of the biggest days since the bureau was established a year ago. Mr. Porter said yesterday that it is remarkable how the interest has been maintained throughout the Summer in foreign trade matters. The agent added that it is significant that a majority of the callers are in quest of specific information, rather than data of a general character. Many of the visitors represent important concerns interested in foreign markets.

Silks Are Doing Well.

In comparison with August of other years, this month is proving an exceptionally busy period for the silk manufacturers. While it is characteristic of trading at the present time that orders are placed for smaller quantities, it is also true that purchases are made more frequently. The retailers whom the silk salesmen have visited expect to do a nice Fall business, and the outlook is generally regarded as quite favorable. Taffetas are being ordered liberally in the "afternoon" shades and are also being taken freely for use in evening frocks. Deliveries for so far ahead as October are being taken on this fabric. Ribbed weaves, such as failles and gros de Londres, are fulfilling expectations and will probably show increasing strength as the season advances.

Against Restricting Styles.

The manufacturers who make a practice of restricting certain of their designs to one customer in a city or town, are rather hard put to it at times to convince their patrons that they are acting in good faith. Style piracy has become so common a thing that every house of repute has its string of followers. The firm that originates a style may be bound up in a contract which may mean a serious loss to it if its idea is exploited by a merchant in a given territory, other than the one to whom the style is restricted. The retailer himself may employ underhand methods and buy the styles of this house for another party. So difficult has style restriction become that the idea has been abandoned in some quarters.

Trade Prospects in the Azores.

J. W. White, who was formerly stationed at St. Michaels, Azores, but who has been transferred to Buenos Aires, said yesterday that the inhabitants of the Azore Islands were anxious to get supplies from this country, but that freight rates at the present time are prohibitive. He instanced a case where an attempt was made to sell American cement. The steamship lines refused to carry it for less than 75 shillings a ton, and later asked 100 shillings. Mr. White said further that the American Consulate is endeavoring to establish a line of sailing vessels to the Azores, which will overcome this difficulty. The ultimate consumers in the islands are partial to American goods, he added, as many of the inhabitants have lived in the United States at one time or another.

A Market for Gas Appliances.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Room 409, Custom House, has received an interesting report in regard to the municipal gas plant of Nottingham, England. In connection with this report, it is mentioned that there is a constant increase in the use of gas for industrial and heating purposes, and that there is an increasing demand for gas appliances, such as cookers, hot plates, boiling burners, gas fires, copper utensils, boilers, and greenhouse heaters. It is stated that on March 31 last there were 34,113 gas cookers in use in Nottingham. The bureau has on file a number of catalogues showing the kinds of gas appliances used and the selling prices for the same. Manufacturers who are interested may see these by calling within the next few days at the local office.

Large Exports of Hosiery.

Manifests of vessels leaving this port reveal the fact that American hosiery is now finding markets in every quarter of the world. Steamers leaving here for England and France are carrying large quantities of hosiery in the form of Government orders, but manifests of ships for South America, West Indies, South Africa, and even Asiatic ports show consignments of goods. Most of these peaceful orders are for goods to take the place of German hosiery no longer available. Orders from the most remote places are now being filled, and many of the manufacturers are hopeful of retaining a good part of this trade after the war closes. It was said yesterday at the Custom House that August will show the heaviest exports of hosiery out of this port ever recorded in a single month.

Clothiers Buying Freely.

Although the Fall season has not proved an active one for the clothiers so far, they seem to be buying lightweight goods freely. This rather disposes of the idea that the manufacturers must be doing a brisk business before they are in the proper mood to buy. At this time, however, the situation in dyes has been dwelt upon at length, and the question of preparedness has become an important one. The clothiers realize, better perhaps than do the mill selling agents, that the retailers will insist upon fast dyes if there are any to be obtained. This, no doubt, has caused the manufacturers to buy their Spring goods while they can still get fabrics with fast colors. The wool market is also showing evidences of further advances, and to put off buying apparently means only to incur additional expense.

Uniform Appraisals for Zinc.

The Treasury Department has issued an order to customs officials to the effect that zinc ore is to be appraised, under the provisions of Paragraph L, Section 3, of the present tariff, on the basis of the zinc contents and the average value of spelter during the week of arrival of the ore in the United States. It has come to the attention of the department that some customs officers are appraising the zinc contents of the ores strictly in accordance with the terms of the contracts of purchase and that such appraisement results in a considerable discrepancy in the value of the same class of ore imported at about the same time. This is due to the fact that some contracts make no provision for a variation in the price of spelter in the United States, while in other contracts the purchase price is dependent upon the varying market value of spelter at the time of importation.

Gray Goods Show Little Change.

The local gray goods market showed little change yesterday from the closing days of last week. There was some business done on goods for immediate and nearby delivery at prices a little under the market, this being true of 39-inch eighty squares. These goods sold an eighth off the listed figures. For the most part, however, the position of cotton held the goods market pretty steady. No great amount of sheeting or drills business was done, but fancies continued to move well. Because prices have not broken any worse than they have over the long period of quiet that has prevailed, the more optimistically inclined sellers see better business for the near future. They maintain the position that users of gray cloths cannot go on indefinitely without buying goods, and that the latter are beginning to realize that they are not going to have the market all their own way. Nominal prices on staple printcloths were:

Investments

It is often assumed that a security which returns a high yield carries with it a proportionate risk. This is not always so. Some securities are selling at low prices because they are not thoroughly distributed, or for other reasons which, similarly, do not affect the real value of the security. Stocks and bonds in this position are desirable and discriminating investors look for them. Correspondence is invited.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Resume Rise, Railroads Following Slowly Lead of Industrials—Bountiful Crops.

Having halted for one session, the rise in prices was resumed on the Stock Exchange yesterday. The industrials led and the railroads followed haltingly and, with some exceptions, yet to sufficient extent to show for one thing the sentimental effect upon the railroad issues of the market prosperity among the industrials, and for another the steady spread of the belief that the railroads are likely to fare better in the future than in the past so far as the effect of public regulation is concerned. It has never been in doubt, of course, that the railroads would share handsomely in real industrial prosperity if regulation did not stand in the way.

The rising market in stocks has in part been based on, and in its more spectacular phases have been controlled by, war orders and rumors of war orders, but deeper down the rise in the value of stocks has been predicated upon the change for the better in underlying conditions following the disturbances caused by the war and upon the prospect of favorable general factors. One of these, and one of the most important of these, are the crops. For them the outlook last Spring was peculiarly favorable, but unfavorable weather ensued and there was much talk of deterioration. Wall Street was prepared to have deterioration from the first of July prospects, shown in the Government's August report, but what was actually recorded in that report, issued yesterday, was not deterioration, but actual improvement in the crops whose fortunes have the largest measure of effect upon market sentiment—wheat and corn. The outlook for both of those crops on Aug. 1 was better than on July 1, despite the excess of rain which in the interval had caused some misgivings. The harvesting of a crop of wheat much in excess of last year's, which means much in excess of the previous high record, is better assured now than it was a month ago and the outlook for corn is a little better than last month's very favorable prospect. The same is true of oats. With the time for deterioration greatly reduced, the outlook at the beginning of August confirms the earlier prospects of the year in respect to this year's farming. This is more solid ground for hopefulness regarding the business outlook than is supplied by any number of war orders. Its effect is less spectacular, but more far-reaching.

A further recession in foreign exchange rates carried a fresh reminder of the difficulties which exist in the way of foreign purchases in this market. The stock market showed no concern over the war news, but the fall in exchange may well have been an aftermath of the war news of the last few days—the further success of the German arms with no offsetting success so far by the Allies. The fall in sterling, particularly—demand reached a new low point for the year at 4.75½—puts a further premium on the establishment of credits here, but the problem is not an easy one to deal with in comprehensive fashion. It would be easy enough to establish a banking credit here for Great Britain, but a credit obtained for a short period only, which would have to be repaid during the war, would not supply any real solution of the existing international exchange problem. It may fairly be said that the problem is primarily Europe's problem, but it is also, for if we are to continue to sell goods to Europe we have a natural concern in her ability to pay us on terms not too onerous for herself. What is really to be desired, and the urgency of the matter will increase as time goes on, is the restoration of a more normal relationship between imports and exports.

LONDON TRADING DULL.

Money and Discount Rates Steady —American Securities Firm.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—Money and discount rates were steady today.

The stock market was generally dull. The new war loan was active and firm, and Mexican rails advanced a point on reports of the proposed conference on Mexican affairs held in New York. Oil shares were firm, and Kaffirs advanced on local buying, but home rails continued weak.

American securities were quietly steady throughout and closed firm.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—The Stock Exchange will be closed Saturday, Aug. 14.

Prices Steady on Paris Bourse.

PARIS, Aug. 9.—Prices were barely steady on the bourse today. Three per cent. rentes 68 francs 75 centimes for cash. Exchange on London 27 francs 35 centimes.

WHEAT CROP NEARS THE BILLION MARK

Washington Forecasts Production of 966,000,000 Bushels, a Record Harvest.

GREAT CORN YIELD ALSO

Estimated Production of Nearly 3,000,000 Bushels—Bumper Prospects for All Food Crops.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—The Government crop report issued today predicts a harvest of nearly a billion bushels of wheat—966,000,000 to be exact—2,918,000,000 bushels of corn, and 1,402,000,000 bushels of oats. Bumper crops of rye, white and sweet potatoes, tobacco, rice, and hay also are predicted for the prosperous farmers, who have planted 310,546,000 acres, or 10,000,000 acres more than last year to their chief products.

The wheat crop, the greatest ever grown in this country, and nearly equalling the crop credited to Russia in 1913 of 1,027,650,000 bushels, will be worth more than $1,000,000,000, while the corn crop's value may reach $2,500,000,000. The Russian production is credited to sixty-three Governments of European and twenty-five Governments of Asiatic Russia.

The estimates of the chief crops, announced today, are based on conditions of Aug. 1. They show that all crops will be greater than last year. Interest centred on wheat and corn. Both showed improvement over July conditions, though excessive rains and cold weather in the Central States interfered with threshing. Oats also suffered in those States, but in other districts the improvement more than offset this.

Corn prospects increased almost 100,000,000 bushels, the chief gains having been Illinois, 30,000,000 bushels; Kansas, 24,000,000, and Texas, 10,000,000.

Kansas showed a loss of 72,000,000 bushels in Winter wheat; Oklahoma, 6,000,000; Nebraska, 4,000,000, and Missouri, 3,000,000, while Ohio and Indiana showed an increase of 3,000,000 bushels each.

White potatoes promise to exceed their former record production by 103,000,000 bushels and sweet potatoes by 4,000,000 bushels. Other increases over record crops indicated include tobacco, 28,000,000 pounds; flax, 4,200,000 bushels; Hay, 2,000,000 tons, and rye, 1,300,000 bushels. Corn prospects fell 204,000,000 bushels and oats 16,000,000 bushels below the records. The detailed report with comparisons follows:

AT ODDS OVER COLORADO.

Industrial Commission May Make Three Rockefeller Reports.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—Friction developed today when the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations attempted to adopt a report after two years of investigation. Members of the commission said the greatest disagreement developed over consideration of the Rockefeller interests in connection with the Colorado coal strike. It was said three reports might be compiled.

Professor John R. Commons of the University of Wisconsin prepared a lengthy report, in which Mrs. J. Borden Harriman concurred. Commissioner Harris Weinstock had another report, while Basil M. Manly had a third, in which, it was reported, the greatest number of the members of the commission concurred.

Members of the commission attempted to compose their differences in executive session, but admitted that a wide divergence of views existed.

"The fact is," said Commissioner Weinstock, "that we agree on many important and essential matters. It is equally true that we disagree on important and essential matters. You can't thrash out a situation like that with which we have to deal and expect immediate unanimity on all points involved."

Several members of the commission contended that the sessions should be open, and a vote was taken, with the result that all consideration of questions involved will be behind closed doors.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Pressure is slightly below normal in New England and the Middle Atlantic States, and there were general thunder showers over this area. Elsewhere pressure is above normal, although relatively low in the Southwest, resulting in a continuation of the thunder showers in Eastern Colorado, New Mexico, Western Texas, and Arizona, and their extension into Arkansas and Northeastern Texas. There were also scattered thunder showers in Tennessee, the Ohio, and the Upper Mississippi Valleys, and Western Nebraska. Elsewhere fair weather prevailed.

As a rule temperatures are still below the seasonable average east of the Rocky Mountains, except in the Northwest, while west of the mountains they were generally high with a maximum of 116 degrees at Yuma, Arizona, equaling the August record at that station.

There will be thunder showers Tuesday and probably Wednesday in the Gulf and South Atlantic States, while from the lake region and the Ohio Valley eastward the weather will be generally fair. Temperature changes will not be decided.

Winds for Tuesday and Wednesday along the North Atlantic Coast will be moderate west; Middle Atlantic Coast, moderate southwest and west; South Atlantic Coast, moderate, mostly south and southwest, except east off the Florida Coast.

MRS. OGLESBY HELD TO BE INCOMPETENT

BROTHER ATTACKS HUSBAND

Mrs. Mabel Clare Oglesby, now at the Manhattan State Hospital for the insane, where she was committed on application of her husband, Dr. James Van Pelt Oglesby, of 428 West Twenty-third Street, was declared by a Sheriff's Jury last evening to be incompetent to manage her affairs. The jury also found that Mrs. Oglesby was perfectly competent at the time she alienated certain property, including the signing of notes for $24,000, which was collected by the physician.

The verdict was regarded as a victory for Dr. Oglesby, who had applied for appointment as committee of the person and estate of his wife. His application was opposed by his wife's relatives, including a sister, Miss Lee Wood Oglesby. She is no relative of the physician, whose wife's maiden name was Oglesby.

Mrs. Oglesby's father was Zenas W. Oglesby, President of the South Georgia & West Coast Railroad and President of the First National Bank of Quitman, Ga., when he died last March. She came into one-seventh of his estate of about $425,000. She is a sister-in-law of Congressman W. R. Oglesby of Westchester County.

Committee to Take $5,700.

The Sheriff's jury's verdict held that $5,700 remaining in Mr. Oglesby's hands, as the remainder of the $24,000 proceeds of the notes, should be turned over to the committee when the latter should be appointed. The physician had maintained that whatever property was turned over to him by his wife came to him before she became incompetent. Her sister contended that such property was turned over to the physician when Mrs. Oglesby was incompetent, and that her condition was caused by the use of morphine, which had been given to her by his advice. The trial yesterday was the second proceeding of the kind, a Sheriff's jury on July 12 having disagreed.

The commission before whom both trials were conducted consisted of Daniel P. Hays, ex-Congressman Henry M. Goldfogle, and David Welch. Vincent L. Leibell appeared as attorney for the relatives, and Dr. Oglesby was represented by William A. White.

There was a lively tilt between Congressman Oglesby, when he took the stand, and Mr. White. The lawyer had been trying to make much of the fact that the Congressman had been removed as trustee of his father's estate, but Mr. Oglesby made it clear that his removal was due merely to the legal technicality that he was not a resident of Georgia, the legal residence of his father. Mr. White also endeavored to bring out the fact that Dr. Oglesby had obtained a warrant of arrest against the witness, who is his brother, but the Congressman pointed out that the warrant never was served.

Condemns Own Brother.

Mr. White asked the witness whether he held any ill-feeling toward the physician. The Congressman answered that he was much "mortified" to see the doctor in court, acting as he did, and that he had paid for the doctor's education. "He was reasonably respectable until he came under your influence," he added sharply. "Now he is going from bad to worse."

Mr. Leibell interjected a remark that family hostilities caused the whole trouble.

Dr. Oglesby admitted on the stand that he held a stock account. This was in opposition to his testimony at the last trial, when the attorney was trying to discover whether the physician had used some of the moneys collected on the notes for stock speculation. A long wrangle betwcen the attorneys ensued. Mr. White explaining that the doctor had testified at the previous hearing against advice of counsel.

The physician further admitted that he administered morphine to his wife to relieve pain. He denied he ever had sent her any of the drug through the mails, but admitted that he had sent her hypodermic needles at one time when she was in Florida.

Other relatives present at the hearing were Mrs. Mozelle Oglesby Peters, Mrs. Lilla Leake Oglesby, widow of Zenas W. Oglesby, Jr., and Mrs. W. R. Oglesby.

All the contesting relatives expressed their opinion that Mrs. Oglesby ought to be maintained at some sanitarium other than the State institution, because of the doctor's means.

City Officials Fight Civil Service Amendment at Albany.

Dr. Henry Moskowitz, President of the Municipal Civil Service Commission, said yesterday that city officials are conducting a State-wide campaign against the adoption by the Constitutional Convention of the proposed amendment to the Constitution giving preference in civil service appointments to Spanish War veterans and volunteer firemen.

Every delegate to the convention known to the protesting city officials is being urged in person and by letter to vote against the proposed amendment. Some of the officials are Commissioner Katharine B. Davis, Commissioner Kingsbury, President Seaman of the Board of Assessors, Park Commissioner Ward, Police Commissioner Woods, Fire Commissioner Adamson, and President Churchill of the Board of Education.

LONELY WOMAN A SUICIDE.

Mrs. G. T. Brown Found Dead by Daughter in Mount Vernon.

The body of Mrs. George T. Brown was discovered in her home, where she lived alone, at 416 Highland Avenue, Vernon Heights, Mount Vernon, yesterday morning by her daughter, Mrs. Edmund Bartnett of 8 Chester Place, Sherwood Park, Yonkers.

Mrs. Brown had been dead since Saturday night and according to Coroner William H. Livingston of New Rochelle she had committed suicide by turning on the gas in her bedroom after writing several letters. The letters were addressed to her husband, who is a lawyer in a sanitarium in Northern New York, to her daughter and to her mother, Mrs. Henry P. Lockwood of 10 East 130th Street, Manhattan. The letters said she intended to end her life because she was lonely.

Brief Detention for Rheumatic.

William A. Anderson of Vancouver, B. C., who arrived in the first cabin of the White Star liner Lapland on Sunday from Liverpool and was sent to Ellis Island for medical examination because he had rheumatism in his right leg, was released yesterday afternoon and left for Toronto by the night train. He said the most extraordinary part of his detention by the Public Health Service doctor who went to the Lapland on Sunday was that no one on Ellis Island appeared to want to see him when he got there yesterday. Dr. Williams finally told him he could leave for Canada at once.

New York, August 7, 1915.

The New York Times,

We wish to express to you our great gratification with the results obtained from the advertising campaign we recently conducted in connection with the auction sale of 400 lots and 7 houses at Edgemere, L. I.

We received a larger volume of answers directly referring to our Times advertisements than we have ever received from any advertising campaign for an auction sale, even where we used a great deal more space.

We believe that this not only demonstrates the value of newspaper advertising for such a sale, provided the campaign is judiciously planned and the copy carefully prepared, but also demonstrates especially the value of The New York Times as a medium for reaching a particular class of people—in this instance, the business men who read your daily business page.

(Signed) M. MORGENTHAU, JR., President.

GIRL LIFE SAVERS GIVE A WATER SHOW

Summer Students at Columbia Practice on Their Teacher in the Tank.

HE SPUTTERS WITH PRIDE

Again and Again Fair Swimmers Dive for Supposedly Drowning Man and Never Fail in Rescue.

If the Summer school at Columbia University has accomplished no other purpose—and it is generally admitted that it has high standing as an institution of learning—it has developed a corps of women life savers, who, if they keep at their chosen profession, are sure to be heard from in time to come. That was the conclusion reached yesterday by a TIMES reporter—he was one man among many women—and all of the spectators joined with him in applauding and saying, "They are most wonderful young women in every way."

This all came about because a reporter was invited yesterday afternoon to attend the exhibition of swimming and life saving by the young women students in the thirty-foot tank in the Thompson Building of the university, a spot generally looked upon as more exclusive, if possible, than ever was Cleopatra's bath. The reporter was introduced to Professor G. T. Holm, master of swimming, who led the way to a chair set at an inconspicuous point on the edge of the tank about ten feet from the springboard. The audience applauded as the life savers came marching in.

Now all these life savers—there were twelve of them who entered the contest—were very graceful and many of them were graceful swimmers. All of them hope some day to teach the art of swimming and life saving for Young Women's Christian Associations. Professor Holm held forth the promise of a great future for them. He said with evident pride when the contest was over that some of them when they entered the Summer school couldn't even swim, and that they had only two lessons—lectures he called them—in life saving. The professor had a very persuasive way about him, it was explained, and in that firmness lay his success. When a pupil held back and said she was afraid he pushed her in gently and she was soon swimming. Well, the professor weighs 185 pounds and is so strong that he is muscle bound.

Excess Clothing Barred.

Apparently one of the first things life savers learn is that excess clothing, such as skirts and stockings, is an impediment when swimming. It was also explained that to graduate from Barnard College one must be able to jump into the water fully clothed and save one's self even to the point of getting rid of one's surplus clothes while in the water. But Barnard is not part of the Summer school, so that has nothing to do with this story.

For fifteen minutes, when the exhibition opened yesterday, Professor Holm showed you how to swim, while the lifesavers grouped themselves gracefully on a raised platform and joined with the other spectators in applauding. He demonstrated the breast stroke, the underarm stroke, the trudgeon, the English overhand stroke, the back stroke, and others, and mixed comedy with grace in a manner that won much applause. But that was all in the way of a preliminary program. Everybody knew that.

Miss Esther M. Sandquist was the first to show what she could do, and it was her duty to save Professor Holm from drowning. She went through the air like an arrow—a perfect dive—and yanked the struggling, choking expert to the shore. Just as she got him there she gave him a kick that sent him spluttering under the water again, an event for which the professor was entirely unprepared.

The audience, thumbs down, yelled for the strangle hold, and Helen Ware, a tall girl of athletic build, tumbled into the water. She topped the professor by four inches, and made short work of him. She was asked to pose for a picture and in the excitement forgot that she was playing and not in deathly earnest until the professor gasped and got blue in the face. When his lungs began to perform their functions again he smiled and made no complaint. That was part of his business.

Broke Drowning Man's Grip.

"Break the grip!" yelled someone in the crowd, and the professor, taking a deep breath, swam to the middle of the tank. This time it was Miss Emma Ragland, who made up in enthusiasm what she lacked in size. The professor grabbed her round the head.

"Hand under chin, foot to the body," he sputtered. "Now, don't be afraid of me."

Thanks to Miss Ragland's very powerful leg action the stunt was accomplished successfully, if the professor's comfort is left out of the reckoning. She caught him in the solar plexus and he never had a chance, even though she didn't wear bathing shoes. Before he had time to recover, she yanked him to the side of the tank. Then she kicked him under the water, and watching where the bubbles rose, dove down and pulled him out again. Miss Ragland, the professor explained, was a very promising pupil.

After that Muriel Rogers yanked the professor about by the hair and all the girls took turns lifting him from the bottom of the tank by whatever means they thought were best. They didn't jump on him or kick him in the face, but they never gave him a chance to drown in peace, which seemed something of a pity. When it was all over, the professor was proud but puffing. The life savers, laughing and apparently as fresh as ever, gave another exhibition of their proficiency in the various strokes and then disappeared into the dressing rooms.

HUNT KINDRED IN CANADA.

Absconder's Insurance Policy, Worth $3,200, Is Canceled.

Detectives in the search for Edward C. Kindred, the clerk who got away with $22,000 from the Booth & Flinn Corporation, have found no clues to the whereabouts of the fugitive. They have learned that he had many women friends and acquaintances. They are trying to learn the identity of a young French-Canadian, whom Kindred visited when she lived on 135th Street, between Broadway and Amsterdam Avenue. He paid this woman $1,300 through a lawyer named Goodwin, the police say.

Another woman who has figured in the police investigation was a Miss O'Connor, whom Kindred represented as his wife, so the police say. The detectives were unable to find this woman at the address in West 156th Street where she had lived for some time.

A former teller of a New York bank who went on hunting and fishing trips with Kindred, sometimes to Cranberry Lake, in St. Lawrence County, said yesterday that Kindred told him he was born in Oakland, Cal. He left his home in California, said the teller, and spent several years in Canada, where his hunting enabled him to accumulate $3,000. With this money Kindred opened an office as a stock broker in British Columbia.

With this information as a new clue the police have requested the Canadian authorities to watch the camps and hunting districts, where it is thought Kindred may try to conceal himself in the guise of a Summer tourist.

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 9.—At the home office of the Travelers Insurance Company of this city it was said today that the $5,000 combination accident and health policy held by Edward C. Kindred had been canceled "on moral grounds." In insurance vernacular this is known as the moral hazard, and every company reserves the right by the terms of its contract to cancel a policy for any moral hazard by profiering the unpaid return premium.

This the Travelers did today by sending to Kindred's New York address on its books a check for $33. At present the policy is worth to Kindred about $3,200. Alfred E. Howard, special agent of the Travelers, whom Kindred is reported to have known intimately, is staying at the Woodhaven Hotel, Weekapaugh, near Westerly, on the Rhode Island shore.

PUSHES WAR ON GAMBLING.

Louisiana Governor Considers Action Against Parish Sheriff.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 9.—As a sequel to the raid made by troops, acting on the orders of Governor Hall, on the Joe Hyland gambling place on Saturday night, the Governor may begin action to have Sheriff L. H. Marrero of Jefferson Parish impeached.

The Grand Jury this afternoon returned a verdict of manslaughter in the case of the saloonkeeper, William Rapp, who eight days ago killed Patrolman George Bouchon, who was endeavoring to enforce the Sunday closing law. The Governor had asked for an indictment for murder. It was this shooting that led to the renewal of the protest against lawlessness.

It was reported today that the Jefferson Parish officials would take legal steps looking to the removal of the gambling paraphernalia and safes seized by the troops in the Saturday night raid. The paraphernalia is stored in the armory of the Washington Artillery and is closely guarded.

The State officials and the Jefferson Parish officers are on bitter terms, and predictions of further trouble are made. The Hyland gambling resort still is closed, but it is said that lotteries and similar institutions are running wide open just beyond the city limits of New Orleans.

ADMITS HE FIRED MILL.

Laborer Was Angry Because Employer Had Spoken Harshly.

Tony Costa, 42 years old, of 120 Fremont Street, Jersey City, a laborer, was arrested on a charge of arson on Monday, made by Detective Alexander Gallagher of Jersey City Police Headquarters, and confessed, the police say, that on last Wednesday morning he set fire to the John F. Boyle Paper Mill at Fremont, Mercer, and Montgomery Streets. The confession was made to John F. Boyle, the President of the company.

Costa said at first he accidentally caused the fire by dropping a match in loose paper stock, but he later admitted that he entered the mill at a second-story window and touched a match to dry paper stock. Costa has been employed at the Boyle Paper Mill as a laborer at $12 a week. He did it, he said, because Mr. Boyle had spoken harshly to him.

The Boyle Paper Mill was damaged to the extent of $10,000 by a fire on June 20, 1914, and since then it has had four other fires, including a blaze on June 9 last which caused a loss of $21,000. The total loss by the five fires was $40,264. Costa was locked up on a charge of having caused all the fires.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 9.—Orders forbidding the admission of all outsiders to the plant of the American Chemical Company of Springfield are so strict that guards stationed about the company's property this afternoon refused to allow the local Fire Department to assist in extinguishing a fire that for more than two hours threatened to destroy the factory.

The American Chemical Company announced a few weeks ago that it had accepted several large war orders from the Allies. With the doubling of the working force night shifts were decided upon and twenty guards kept outsiders from the factory grounds.

The flames were first discovered from a train of the Rahway Valley Railroad that passes close to the factory buildings. The Fire Department answered the alarm, but the firemen were stopped at the entrance to the factory grounds. Captain Roscoe Ruby stated tonight that unless the chemical company explained satisfactorily its position to the local officials, he would refuse to respond to their alarms in the future.

LOADS BOY INTO DOG WAGON

Elizabeth Dog Catcher Arrested for Assaulting Lad.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 9.—Richard Ryan, of 546 Broadway, Elizabeth's official dog catcher, was arrested this afternoon on charges of assault and disorderly conduct and held for the action of the Grand Jury. Ryan told Judge Owen P. Mahon that Adolph Neuhauser, 12 years old, attacked him with a club this morning when he was about to take charge of a bulldog upon which there was no license tag.

Emil Neuhauser, the boy's father, says he arrived in time to see Adolph being loaded into the dog catcher's wagon with the huge net encircling his head and shoulders. Ryan admitted that he was forced to use the net on the father too, when an explanation of the boy's predicament failed to prove satisfactory.

SIXTEEN GIVE SKIN FOR BOY.

Nurses and Doctors Save Child in Grafting Operation.

Ten nurses and five doctors in the Beth Israel Hospital, Newark, recently submitted to skin-grafting operations to save the life of Irving Fink, 5 years old son of Mr. and Mrs. Max Fink of 124 Chestnut Street, Irvington, N. J.

As a result of the operation, which was performed by Dr. George A. Rogers of the visiting staff, Fink will be able to leave the hospital in a few days. The boy was scalded about a year ago and left the hospital before his wound healed.

Mrs. Wood Injured in Auto Spill.

NEWTON, N. J., Aug. 9.—Mrs. Robert Wood is suffering from a broken collar bone and lacerations on her head and is perhaps hurt internally as the result of an automobile accident late yesterday. While on the way to Middletown with her husband and some friends, the car, which was driven by her husband, skidded and hit an embankment. Mrs. Wood was thrown out of the car, but the other occupants escaped injury.

SUES FOR LIFE PENSION.

Estate of B. Guggenheim, Who Died on Titanic, Asked to Pay $7,500 a Year.

Mrs. Amy T. Lucrati, who says that her home is in San Remo, Italy, through her attorney, John S. Wise, Jr., of this city, yesterday started suit in the Surrogates' Court here to compel the estate of Benjamin Guggenheim to pay her $7,500 yearly for life. Mr. Guggenheim was lost with the Titanic on April 15, 1912.

The suit took the legal form of asking that the executors, Isaac, Daniel, and Morris Guggenheim, brothers of the decedent, be compelled to file an accounting. Mr. Wise filed an application that a citation be issued by Surrogate Cohalan directing the executors to show cause on Sept. 24 why the accounting should not be filed.

In her application Mrs. Lucrati recited that she was a creditor of the estate "by reason of an agreement in writing, dated May 4, 1907, between your petitioner and Benjamin Guggenheim, deceased, wherein Benjamin Guggenheim agrees and binds himself and his estate to pay your petitioner $7,500 per annum in semi-annual installments on June 30 and Dec. 31, in each and every year until the death of your petitioner, beginning June 30, 1907."

Three years had elapsed, the petition stated, since Mr. Guggenheim's death, and the executors had rendered no accounting of the estate.

No mention of Mrs. Lucrati was made in Mr. Guggenheim's will. That instrument left an aggregate of $115,000 to charities and divided the estate up into several parts for the benefit of relatives. The widow, Mrs. Floretta S. Guggenheim, who lives at the St. Regis Hotel with her three daughters, the Misses Benita R., Marguerite S., and Barbara H. Guggenheim, received $50,000 in cash, the town house, all the testator's jewelry, and one-third of the residuary estate, the latter item being left in trust for the life benefit of the widow, who has power of disposal at her death.

There was also provision for a trust fund of $275,000 for the benefit of near relatives of the decedent, and the rest of the two-thirds of the residue went in equal shares to the three daughters.

At the law offices of Seligman & Seligman, attorneys for the Guggenheim estate it was said yesterday that nothing was known of Mrs. Lucrati. In her petition she recited that she was born Amy Goldsmith, was formerly Amy Tuska, and that her present husband was Agostino Lucrati of San Remo.

The petition filed yesterday was signed before a notary in Paris on July 23, 1915, by Mrs. Lucrati.

KILLED AS HE GRABS WIRE.

"Iron Man" Haller, Baseball Motorman, Thrown Twenty Feet.

"Iron man" William Haller, star pitcher of the Public Service League in New Jersey, was killed yesterday afternoon in Union Hill, when he seized a wire on Bergenline Avenue. He was 25 years old and lived at 202 Seventeenth Street, West New York, with his wife and their baby boy.

Haller was a motorman and yesterday when he ran his car to the end of the run he noticed a wire dangling close to the ground. He failed to notice that it was touching a feed wire, and as he took hold of it, he was thrown about twenty feet, and when picked up was dead. It is believed that about 2,000 volts passed through his body.

DOGS ATTACK POLICEMAN.

Owner of Unmuzzled Animals Had Dared Bluecoat to Arrest Him.

Patrolman James McNamee of the West 135th Street Police Station had a narrow escape from death last evening, when he was attacked by three bulldogs in the areaway of a tenement inhabited by negroes at 44 West 133d Street, between Fifth and Lenox Avenues. He did not have time to draw his revolver and was forced to battle against the dogs with a nightstick. But for the aid of several negroes, who helped him fight the dogs off, he would have been dragged down and overpowered. He was severely bitten on the left leg, left arm, and right hand, and was attended by a surgeon from the Harlem Hospital.

The dogs are owned by Harry Seaton, a West Indian, who lives at 58 West 131st Street and acts as janitor for the apartment at 44 West 133d Street. The patrolman saw the negro leading the dogs, unmuzzled, through the street and threatened to arrest him.

"You can't arrest me," said Seaton with a jeer, and backed into the areaway.

McNamee, angered by the insult, followed the negro, and the dogs sprang at him. After the fight McNamee, although weak from shock and loss of blood, took Seaton to the station house, where he was held on charges of violating the sanitary code in permitting his dogs to go unmuzzled and resisting arrest. He was taken to Night Court pending a further hearing, and McNamee, despite his wounds, insisted in appearing against him. The dogs were caught and will be examined by the Board of Health. McNamee will also take the Pasteur treatment.

PRESIDENT GIVES ORDER

Decides to Return to Capital When Informed of Dangerous Anti-Foreign Sentiment.

CONFERENCE HERE TODAY

Will Call for a General Convention of Mexicans and Suggest a President.

CARRANZA SHOWS ANGER

Washington Officials Credit Him with a "Rule or Ruin" Policy —He Appeals to Argentina.

Carranza Tells Argentina Conference May Cause War; Reassuring Reply Is Sent

BUENOS AIRES, Aug. 10.—President De la Plaza has received a telegram from General Carranza which asserts that the Washington conference, should it decide to interfere in Mexican affairs, would commit an unpardonable error.

"Argentina," says the dispatch, "has made herself an accomplice in a crime against our race, which possibly may help to bring on a war between two American nations."

José Luis Murature, the Foreign Minister, replied to Carranza on behalf of the President, saying that Argentina was taking part in the conference with the intention of respecting Mexican sovereignty. He added that the conference had dismissed every factor that tended to interfere with Mexican internal affairs, especially every plan looking to armed intervention.

He added that the conference was working with the idea of maintaining Pan-American solidarity, and that instead of being alarmed the Mexican people should look upon the conference as a sign of friendship and proof of its desire for the greatness of Mexico.

Carranza Appealed to Other Powers.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 10.—Many persons in this city are wiring to First Chief Carranza congratulating him on his message to the A B C Presidents and pledging loyal support.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—The Mexican situation has assumed a new and dangerous phase, with complications threatened that may require the use of force by the United States. Efforts to incite the population of Vera Cruz against Americans and other foreigners have been made by street orators, and conditions there have become so critical that the United States battleships Louisiana and New Hampshire have been ordered to proceed southward, and will probably continue to the Mexican port unless the anti-foreign demonstrations there cease. They sailed from Newport, R. I., this evening.

The United States gunboat Marietta has also been ordered from Progreso, Mexico, to Vera Cruz. The United States armored cruiser Tennessee, which sailed from Philadelphia early this morning with 800 marines for service in Hayti may be instructed by wireless to proceed to Vera Cruz.

Officials of the Government are greatly concerned over the situation. They expressed the fear this evening that if information reached Vera Cruz that the American naval forces there were to be augmented, reprisals might be attempted against Americans and other foreigners.

One of the worst features of the situation is that the efforts to arouse feeling against foreign citizens and subjects appears to have been undertaken with the connivance of the Carranza Government. The Carranzistas are very angry over the purpose of the United States to bring peace to Mexico through co-operation with six Latin-American countries. Carranza is believed to suspect that his elimination is contemplated by the United States, and it is feared he is now proceeding to develop a "rule or ruin" policy.

More Warships Asked for.

The advices concerning the dangerous turn of affairs at Vera Cruz came to the Navy Department this morning in a dispatch from Commander Luke McNamee of the cruiser Sarcamento, the senior American naval officer at that place. Commander McNamee reported that a very ugly feeling existed at Vera Cruz toward all foreigners, and speeches had been made in the public square and on the streets, stirring up the populace against them. He asked for reinforcements, and it was in consequence of this request that the Louisiana, the New Hampshire, and the Marietta received preparatory orders to proceed to Vera Cruz.

As a result of telegraphic exchanges over the Mexican situation between President Wilson and Secretary Lans-

ITALIAN RAILWAY MEN REFUSE A WAR BONUS

ROME, (Via Paris,) Aug. 10.—The example of the railroad employes of Milan, who refused 3,000,000 lire ($600,000) offered by the Government for extra work done by them in connection with the mobilization of the army, has been followed by the railroad men of Rome, who have issued a statement declaring:

"We would feel ourselves humiliated if we were not willing to give our toil while others give their lives to their country."

SAYS POPE APPEALED TO WILSON ON PEACE

ROME, Aug. 10.—Pope Benedict has determined to make a new appeal for peace, according to the newspaper Roma, which says the Pontiff is resolved to use every means within his power to bring about the desired result. He will ask the help of the episcopate, and, the newspaper asserts, is even considering the convocation of a universal council of the Church at Rome.

The Roma, which does not give its authority, asserts that it has been informed that the Pope will forbid all representatives of the Church in belligerent countries, under pain of excommunication, from offering prayers for victory, from asking blessings for the combatants, or even administering the sacraments to those responsible for a continuation of the war.

The same newspaper claims to have information to the effect that the Pope has made a personal appeal to the President of the United States and the Presidents of Switzerland and the Central and South American republics, as well as to the Kings of Spain and the Scandinavian countries, asking them to join with him in an effort to obtain at least a truce, preparatory to the opening of peace negotiaions.

PEACE INSURANCE RATE PROHIBITIVE

Eighty-five Per Cent. Against Risk of Peace Not Being Declared This Year.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—The Times says: "The peace talk so far has had no effect on insurance rates, which, except for far distant dates, remain on a level prohibitive for ordinary business purposes. Inquiries for rates are constantly being received, but evidently the high quotations prohibit business.

"At present as much as 85 per cent. is being quoted against the risk of peace not being declared by the end of the year, while races for later dates are, by the end of March, 1916, 75 per cent., the end of June, 50 per cent., the end of September, 35 per cent., the end of December, 1916, 20 per cent., the end of December, 1917, 5 per cent.

"Already a certain amount has been paid away by underwriters, for in the early days of the war the risk of peace not being declared by the end of March and June last was written at 50 and 20 per cent., respectively. At the same time there was also a certain amount of insurance placed at 20 per cent., providing for the payment of the claim should peace not be declared by the end of September."

GERMAN PAPER HITS THE "CHANT OF HATE"

Catholic Organ Would Exclude Lissauer's Song from Books for Youth.

From a Staff Correspondent.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 10, (via The Hague.)—An interesting campaign has been launched to put a quietus on Ernst Lissauer's "Chant of Hate" against England.

"A Christian can't today read Lissauer's hate song without having it go against his grain, despite all England has done to us.

"The object of these lines is to start a popular agitation to keep the Lissauer song out of all books which are destined for school children. The German press is asked to give this agitation the widest publicity."

The Volks-Zeitung comments editorially as follows:

"One must give unqualified approval to the suggestion to keep this hate song out of all books, destined for the youth of the country. The world war has been conducted with bitterness enough, without nourishing the youth of the country on feelings of passionate hatred which would have consequences for the future."

The Berliner Tageblatt adds editorially:

"We read Lissauer's successful hate song at the time of its appearance with unconcealed disapproval, for it is utterly devoid of real patriotism, and merely, like the rubber stamps of 'Hurt Strafe England,' ('God punish England,') panders to certain instincts which unfortunately come to the fore in excited times. A close investigator knows that the brave men in the trenches are nearly always free from this 'hate,' and it is chiefly preached by persons whose heroism varies with their distance behind the front. That the hate song and similar products are to be kept out of books for the young is a necessity. We could wish, however, that the grown-ups would be spared these forms of enjoyment, for it seems to us that the German people doesn't require this sort of poetry or prose in order to win the victory."

As a matter of fact, Lissauer's song has been passée for a long time. I haven't heard it recited or mentioned during the last three months, nor have I heard "Gott Strafe England" used.

Herr Lissauer, author of the "Chant of Hate," (Hassgesang), was decorated by Empe or William with the order of the Red Eagle of the fourth class, after his song was published in a Munich illustrated weekly.

SEVEN CARLOADS OF ENGLISH GOLD REACH NEW YORK

SENT IN A BATTLE CRUISER

COMES HERE IN STEEL TRAIN

800 Boxes of Coin and $17,000,000 in American Securities Guarded by 40 Armed Men.

A special train carrying $52,000,000 in treasure, two-thirds in gold and one-third in securities, which had been shipped by the Bank of England from London via Halifax to this city, arrived this morning at the terminal of the American Express Company at Thirty-third Street and Tenth Avenue. The train consisted of seven steel cars garrisoned by forty armed men.

The treasure crossed the Atlantic in a British battle cruiser accompanied by a flotilla of torpedo boat destroyers.

Robert E. M. Cowie, the President of the American Express Company, said last night that he had heard that the fleet was commanded by Vice Admiral Sir David Beatty, winner of the naval battle on Aug. 28, 1914, off Heligoland Bight, in which two German cruisers and two German torpedo boat destroyers were sunk and a third cruiser set afire and left sinking. Admiral Beatty later commanded the British fleet which defeated the Germans in the North Sea, sinking the Bluecher.

The cargo of treasure thus brought across the ocean was probably the greatest which has ever been trusted to one bottom. It was also a cargo which was doubly important to England because the purpose of the shipment was in part to strengthen British financial prestige in New York markets.

The gold, which is worth about $35,000,000, weighs approximately seventy-five tons. The cost of shipping it to this country, in the upkeep of the naval forces, in the elaborate guard maintained on its railway journey and in loss of interest, is said to amount to about $250,000.

Precautions to Balk Enemies.

From the beginning secrecy surrounded the shipment, and the greatest precautions were taken against the possibility of the German secret service in this country or England discovering the plan, which might have resulted in a submarine attack or in an attempt to cause trouble on the railway journey.

When the armed train left Halifax it was preceded by a pilot engine for the purpose of testing bridges and trestles and to frustrate any attempt to wreck the treasure cars by dynamite. This precaution was suggested by the exploit of Werner Horn, the German reservist, who attempted to blow up the St. Croix River International Bridge on Feb. 2, to stop shipments of munitions for the Allies from this country to Canada over the Canadian Pacific Railroad.

News of the arrival of the greatest cargo of treasure ever carried by a single ship did not get out of Halifax because of the rigor of the British censorship. It was learned today, however, that before the treasure had been landed one day's delay ensued, for the reason that Admiral Beatty had orders to deliver the shipment directly to the American Express Company, which had no offices of its own in Halifax, and was represented there by the Dominion Express Company. Admiral Beatty cabled back for instructions, and was ordered to make the delivery to the Dominion Express Company.

Armed Guards in Train.

In this case one day's delay means a cost of thousands of dollars. The interest on $35,000,000 in gold at 5 per cent. would be $4,800 a day, which was lost. The cost of keeping the fleet on the errand for an extra day, and the expense of maintaining the express company's train and guard was also a heavy one.

For the mission of protecting the treasure on its way from Halifax to this city, the American Express Company selected its most experienced guards from various stations in the East and sent them to Halifax. On the trip to the Canadian border, the Canadian Government had armed agents of its own with the train, and these were replaced at Vanceboro, Me., by additional guards of the American Express Company. Vanceboro is the town where Werner Horn was caught after his attempt on the bridge at St. Croix.

The undertaking to deliver the shipment from the Canadian border to this city was the largest single risk which was ever undertaken by an express company. Forty men is twice the number which the American Express Company had ever before placed on a gold train, were sent to guard this train. Twenty armed men were sent out by the company from Ottawa recently when a shipment of $10,000,000 of gold was sent to this city.

Nothing could be learned from J. P. Morgan & Co. yesterday as to the nature of the securities in the shipment, but it is understood they were American issues, which were returned to be held as security for loans raised in this country to buy supplies and munitions of war for the Allies.

Exchange Remains Weak.

One of the effects of the unprecedented quantity of gold in a single shipment was intended to be an improvement of the exchange situation, the English pound sterling having depreciated, because of the increase in imports and the falling off of exports by

Says Fifty German Submarines Have Fallen Victims to the Allies

Army and Navy Journal Makes the Statement on the Authority of a British Admiralty Official — More Than a Dozen Captured.

The current issue of The Army and Navy Journal asserts that about fifty German submarines have been destroyed since the beginning of the war. The largest estimate from England—which officially never announces her successes in the submarine warfare, except where the capture of survivors makes it necessary—has been thirty-two.

"We have it on authority which would carry conviction were we at liberty to mention it," The Army and Navy Journal's announcement says, "that nearly fifty German submarines have been sunk, captured, or destroyed by the Allies up to the 20th of July."

Colonel William C. Church, editor of The Journal, yesterday told a NEW YORK TIMES reporter that he had written the paragraph quoted and that he had trustworthy information upon which he based his statement. It came from an official high in the British Admiralty. Colonel Church felt constrained to keep his name a secret and believed that it would be unwise if more detailed information were made public.

THE NEW YORK TIMES London correspondent, on Feb. 28, in speaking of the submarine blockade, commented on the fact that it was the ninth day that it had been in effect, and said that, while the Admiralty had made no announcement of preparations to resist the undersea raiders, the public had been assured that it would be difficult for them to operate safely along the English and Irish coasts. Previous to this it had been announced that the German Government was worried over two submarines that were long overdue at their base. "It is feared they have been destroyed," the dispatch ended.

The partial text of a secret report from Cuxhaven to the German Admiralty on March 11 admitted that twelve submarines had been sunk or were missing, and it was added that many of these were of the latest type. It was said further that a meeting was to be held on the next day at which it was to be decided whether or not the submarine warfare should be discontinued.

On March 5 it was announced in London that four submarines had been sunk, the sinking of the U-8 being announced on that day. The others were the U-15, U-18, and one rammed by the British cruiser Badger.

On March 24, in an air raid on Antwerp, a British aviator destroyed one submarine and badly damaged another, according to a special cable dispatch to THE TIMES from Rotterdam. A dispatch from Paris, published on April 1, announced that the Ministry of War had issued a statement telling of the destruction of a submarine by a cruiser. Five days later it was announced, also from Paris, that a German submarine had been trapped in steel nets off the harbor of Dover. It was announced that these nets had been placed at the mouths of most of the important British and French harbors, and this was the first intimation of their use.

The loss of seventeen submarines was reported to have been the cost of the blockade to Germany up to May 20, and it was said that these had all been lost since Feb. 18, the day the blockade became official.

There have been many reports of individual losses since, and an American arriving recently from Paris told of the successes won by swift motor boats armed with small rapid fire guns against the undersea boats. Some of these pursuing boats, the American said, would travel fifty miles an hour.

"Potting submarines," said he, "is considered exciting sport among some of the sportsmen I have talked with, who don't mind the danger so long as there is a chance of getting a crack at a periscope. Of course a well-aimed shot from a 3-inch rifle will put a submarine out of business just as effectively as a ton of metal from a 16-inch gun."

The Army and Navy Journal's announcement coincides with a hint conveyed by a well informed English newspaper man in a letter to a friend here, received a few days ago.

"By the way," the letter said, "if anybody tries to talk submarines to you, just laugh at them. I don't know just how kind the Censorship has been to the United States in this respect, but from all I hear you have underestimated the numbers of German submarines sunk, and though they will continue to get a few merchant vessels, there have been probably more German seamen put out of business by their submarines sinking, than there have been passengers and crews of their victims."

Curtiss Machine Carries Three Passengers to Record Height Near Buffalo.

DESIGNED AS SERVICE TEST

Machine Is the First of Two Hundred Aircraft Ordered for the Allied Armies.

Special to The New York Times.

BUFFALO, Aug. 10.—Describing a fifteen-mile circle in a spiral climb over the roofs and spires of Buffalo, the Tonawandas and the farmlands of the Niagara frontier, Raymond V. Morris, this afternoon established two new American flying records for altitude with passengers. He used the new Curtiss military tractor biplane, designed for the British Government.

In the first flight, Pilot Morris, with Lieutenant William M. McIlvain of the Marine Corps, and C. W. Webster of the Curtiss Aeroplane Company rose 8,200 feet. The ascent was made in 27 minutes and the descent in 5½ minutes. The previous American record for altitude with two passengers was held by Stephen T. MacGordon in a Heinrich machine. He ascended 5,187 feet.

The second flight established another new American record. Morris carried three passengers—Lieut. McIlvain, who made the official observations, C. W. Webster and E. E. McCleish of Buffalo. Their total weight was 800 pounds. He ascended 8,300 feet, when the barograph stopped recording. After climbing steadily for five minutes beyond that mark he descended, shooting to the earth in a spiral sweep at the rate of ninety-four miles an hour. The descent was made in five and one-half minutes.

The army experts who saw the flight and the pilot and Lieut. McIlvain were confident that the war machine could have climbed with its load another 4,000 feet. The world's record for altitude with three passengers is held by Vros Lossl, an Austrian aviator, who ascended 15,650 feet in 1914.

A 25,000-foot barograph is on its way to the Curtiss plant, and when it arrives tomorrow Pilot Morris, carrying Lieutenant McIlvain, will challenge the world's record of 21,000 feet, which was made in 1914 over Johannisthal, Germany, by a pilot flying alone. Later the many, by a pilot flying alone. Later the Curtiss Company will try to establish an altitude and duration record with five passengers.

This war machine is being put to severe tests to satisfy the designer, Glenn H. Curtiss, that he has met all the demands that aerial warfare has made on the airship designer. This machine is equipped with an eight-cylinder Curtiss motor, developing 160 horse power. It is of the tractor type. The observers ride in a cockpit in front of the pilot, who sits back of the planes. It is capable of carrying 1,500 pounds dead weight, which would include a machine gun and probably fifty bombs.

The army experts were satisfied that today's flights demonstrated that the need for a heavy war machine capable of rising rapidly to a great height from the ground had been met. The machine has the sustained power and speed for carrying its load at high altitudes. So perfect was the control today at the 8,000-foot mark that the pilot removed his hands from the wheel while driving at 94 miles an hour.

A full report of the record-breaking flights was telephoned from Buffalo last night by Lieutenant McIlvain to Henry Woodhouse, Secretary of the Aero Club of America. Mr. Woodhouse later gave the details of the flights to a representative of THE NEW YORK TIMES, explaining their significance as related to aeroplane warfare in Europe.

"The biplane used this afternoon," he said, "is a type of the first three-passenger aeroplane manufactured in America and I am reliably informed that it has been especially constructed at the Curtiss plant as one in an order for 200 to be delivered as soon as possible to the Allies. It has an engine that will develop 160 horsepower, and is known as model R.

"The machine is very fast in the air and is intended to be used as a speed or scout aeroplane, the purpose of which is to drive off or destroy hostile aircraft while bombs are dropped from friendly, slower-flying machines."

ZEPPELINS KILL 14 IN ENGLISH RAID

One of the German Airships Is Later Destroyed by Attack of Allied Aviators.

SET FIRES IN COAST TOWNS

Fleet of Allied Aeroplanes Meantime Assails Bavarian Cities, Killing Eight Persons.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—Fourteen persons were killed and fourteen others wounded by a Zeppelin raid on the English coast late Monday night and early yesterday morning. It is believed that four or five airships were employed.

A dispatch from Holland says that five more airships passed over that country, going in a northwesterly direction, yesterday morning, so that another air raid on England is expected.

The continual bad weather which has been prevailing in England would, it is believed, prevent Zeppelins from coming on Monday night, but their appearance indicates that weather is not a deterrent to them. There was a big storm on the East Coast yesterday, however, and this might make it dangerous for airships to visit that locality now.

The attack by German airships on the English coast on Monday night and yesterday morning was announced yesterday by the Official Press Bureau in the following statement:

A squadron of hostile airships visited the east coast last night and this morning between the hours of 8:30 P. M. and 12:30 A. M.

Some fires were caused by the dropping of incendiary bombs, but these were quickly extinguished, and only immaterial damage was done.

The following casualties have been reported: Killed—One man, eight women, and four children; wounded—Four men, six women, and two children.

One Zeppelin was seriously damaged by the gunfire of the land defenses and was reported as being towed into Ostend. She has since been subjected to continual attacks by aircraft from Dunkirk and has been under heavy fire, and it is now reported that after having her back broken and her rear compartments damaged she was completely destroyed by an explosion.

The night was extremely dark and was accompanied by thick fog in places, which rendered night flying by aeroplanes very difficult.

It is regretted that Flight Sub-Lieutenant R. Lord, who was one of the pilots sent up to engage the enemy, was killed on landing in the dark.

Later a revised list of casualties resulting from the raid was given out by the Official Press Bureau as follows: Killed, one man, nine women, and four children. Wounded: Five men, seven women, and two children.

The dispatch, indicating the likelihood of another raid, was sent to the Central News from Amsterdam. It said that five Zeppelins were sighted yesterday morning off Vlieland, near the entrance to the Zuyder Zee. They were taking a northwesterly course, in the direction of the Scottish coast.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—The Daily News in an editorial article on the east coast Zeppelin raid says:

"We are not told the numbers of the invading squadron. The Dutch reports of a fleet of five may or may not be well founded, but the annihilation of one of the raiders loses nothing in significance by its relation to the total numbers engaged. Whether they were two or half a dozen, it remains a grave material loss to Germany. If the destruction of human life and the destruction of silk and steel are to be counted as commensurate, the results of the raid leave a heavy balance to our credit."

The Daily Telegraph says: "Since the last raid the Government have informed the House of Commons that in all the fourteen attacks which had then been made by German aircraft on this country twenty-four men civilians had been killed, with twenty-one women, and

ALLIES PRESS BALKAN POWERS TO ACT AS NEW DARDANELLES ATTACK BEGINS; GREECE ASKS DELAY OF EIGHT DAYS

Bulgar Support Is Counted On by Berlin; Unnamed Sofia Official Quoted as Authority

From a Staff Correspondent.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 10, (via The Hague.)—The Balkan situation is continuing to occupy diplomatic circles to the exclusion of almost all else. The return of the Imperial Chancellor to Berlin has been followed by numerous important conferences.

The Vossische Zeitung's well-informed Sofia correspondent wires that a prominent political personage there gave him the following summary of the standpoint of the Bulgarian authorities with whom lies the decision:

"Even if the Quadruple Entente were now in a position to give us not only all of Macedonia, but Kavala to boot, with immediate possession, which is of course impossible, we would still refuse to join the Allies, for with Russia dominating the Dardanelles, we would have only a short lease of life. We would rather remain Bulgarian without Macedonia and Kavala but preserve our independence. Premier Radoslavoff's final answer cannot be anything but 'No.'

"Moreover, Bulgarians are unwilling to accept a territorial increase as a gift. They are too proud to beg alms of the Powers. They would rather take what they feel entitled to. For this reason Bulgaria will not remain passive, but strike at the right moment, and on what side there is no doubt, since the Bulgarian-Turkish negotiations in Constantinople already have been signed."

LOMZA CAPTURED FROM RUSSIANS

Czar's Troops Prepare to Abandon Vilna Also as Germans Press Closer.

TEUTONIC ARMIES UNITING

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—The Austro-Germans are slowly closing in on the portions of the Russian armies which remain on the Polish salient. Their wide, outflanking movement in the northern part of the Baltic provinces has been brought to a standstill, but further south they are approaching the forts of Kovno, and the Russians are reported to be evacuating Vilna, which lies directly east of Kovno on the main railway line. They have captured Lomza, and southeast of this place are approaching the River Bug, which other Teutonic forces have reached from its mouth to a point south of Ostorv. These points are not far from the main railway line, which is the German objective.

The armies of the Teutons, which are advancing east of Warsaw, and those which have crossed the Vistula at Ivangorod and Field Marshal Mackensen's forces are now joining hands and making another effort to catch and destroy the Russian armies. The Russians, however, are believed in military circles here to be now fairly safe.

A Reuter dispatch from Petrograd says that the first steps for the evacuation of Vilna have been taken, by the removal of some of the public institutions and the contents of the public library and museums.

The railroad from Vilna southward, the dispatch says, has been the object of active attention by German Zeppelins. Twelve bombs, five incendiary, have been dropped on Bialystok, while a simultaneous visit was paid to the Kovel depot. The damage was slight and traffic was not interrupted.

Petrograd Railroad Menaced.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—The Daily Chronicle, summarizing the Russian news this morning, says:

"According to a Petrograd message, the contents of the public institutions in Vilna have been removed, an unmistakable indication that the tide of battle is within reach of that ancient Lithuanian town. Vilna is an important railway junction on the main line that runs from Warsaw to Petrograd.

"In the Russian official communique issued Monday evening it was reported that on Saturday night and Sunday the enemy attacks on Kovno were of an extremely desperate character. It was added that the assaults were everywhere repulsed with enormous losses to the Germans.

"Now Kovno is about fifty mils due west of Vilna on the railway running to Konigsberg. If the public authorities so meant to quit Vilna, then the fighting since Sunday in the Kovno region must have been to the advantage of the Germans and it is to be feared that the trunk railway from Warsaw to Petrograd is now in imminent peril.

"The desperate offensive of the huge German forces collected by von Hindenburg in East Prussia aims at taking in the rear some of the Russian forces retiring from the Warsaw triangle. If the railway were to be cut at Vilna, the Russians would be gravely embarrassed, though it by no means follows that Hindenburg's grandiose scheme of envelopment will succeed.

"Still the situation is grave, and its seriousness is only partly mitigated by the Russian successes in the Gulf of Riga."

Expect Blow in Baltic Provinces.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 10.—The next serious blow of the German forces is expected to fall in the Baltic region. Since the capture of Warsaw the German operations in that district have been of chief interest here. Apparently the invaders are not anxious to crowd the Russians out of Poland, but rather are expending their efforts in strengthening their extending wings.

The naval attempt to gain control of the Gulf of Riga, simultaneous with the pressing eastward of the land forces toward Friedrichsstadt, forty-six miles southeast of Riga, and the only railroad outlet from that port, has convinced Russian military authorities that the

NEW ALLIED GAINS AT DARDANELLES

They Advance 200 Yards Near Krithia and Take Crest Near Sari Bair.

TWO NEW LANDINGS MADE

One on the West Coast of Gallipoli, the Other on the Gulf of Saros.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—Troops of the Entente Allies in the Dardanelles made a gain of 200 yards on a front of 300 yards east of the Krithia road on the Gallipoli Peninsula, it was officially announced here today. A footing has been gained on Chunuk Bahr also, and another landing effected elsewhere, the statement adds. The announcement reads:

Sir Ian Hamilton reports that fighting at several points on Gallipoli Peninsula has taken place during the last few days. Substantial progress has been made.

In the southern zone 200 yards on a front of 300 yards has been gained east of the Krithia road, and has been held in spite of determined counter-attacks, which have been repulsed with heavy loss to the enemy. Repeated attacks by the Turks elsewhere in this zone were beaten off.

Several attacks by French corps have been made, and their wholehearted co-operation has proved of the greatest assistance.

In the Ansac zone a footing in the Chunuk Bair portion of Sari Bair also been gained and the crest occupied after fierce fighting and the successful storming of strongly held positions. Here, too, the enemy's losses have been considerable. The advance was commenced at night under cover of a searchlight from a destroyer.

Elsewhere a fresh landing has been successfully effected and considerable progress made.

Six hundred and thirty prisoners have been taken, together with one Nordenfelt, two bomb mortars, nine machine guns and a large number of bombs. Scattered about are quantities of the enemy's rifles, ammunition and equipment.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—The allied forces have resumed their attacks upon the Turkish positions at the Dardanelles with great vigor during the last two days, and have made sensible progress on the Gallipoli Peninsula, according to a Havas dispatch received from Athens. The Turkish losses have been heavy.

Turks Say Landing Was Repulsed.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 10. (via London.)—Turkish troops completely dispersed forces which the Entente Allies landed near Karachali on the north of the Gulf of Saros in Dardanelles operations on Saturday night, according to an official statement issued by the Turkish War Department yesterday. Troops landed north of Ari Burnu made a slight advance under protection of the Anglo-French fleet, the statement adds. The bulletin reads:

In the Dardanelles on Saturday night under the protection of the fleet, the enemy landed a part of his new forces in the environs of Karachali, on the north of the Gulf of Saros and the remainder on two points north of Ari Burnu. We dispersed completely the enemy forces which landed near Karachali, which left behind some twenty dead.

North of Ari Burnu the troops which landed made a slight advance under the protection of the fleet. We repelled attacks and took some soldiers and officers prisoners.

We achieved considerable success near Sedd-el-Bahr in beating back attacks.

DARDANELLES ATTACK VITAL

Landing at Saros, However, Regarded as a Feint to Disguise Big Moves.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—The beginning of new and greater efforts to force the Dardanelles and thus bring succor to the Russians, who are still being hard pressed by the Austro-Germans in Eastern Poland and the Baltic provinces, and at the same time to influence the Balkan States is the important feature of the latest war news.

For some time the advices from the Dardanelles has, from the British standpoint, been more cheerful. While no details of the operations there have been given out, the public has been allowed to learn that the hope for a successful issue in the fighting on the Turkish peninsula was brighter.

The renewed attempt against the Turkish positions which apparently is in full swing, seems to be a concerted one. Attacks are being made at the tip of the peninsula, along the Krithia road, where a gain of 200 yards on a front of 300 yards has been made, and at Sari Bair, where an important crest has been occupied, according to General Sir Ian Hamilton, commander in chief of the British forces.

Landing Surprise to Turks.

"Elsewhere," General Hamilton's report continues, "a fresh landing has been successfully effected and considerable progress made." This landing evidently was a surprise to the Turks, as 630 of their prisoners, a number of guns, and a quantity of material are declared to have been taken.

A Turkish official report supplies the localities of two landings. According to this forces were put ashore in the environs of Karachali, a town on the road which skirts the north shore of the Gulf of Saros opposite the neck of the Gallipoli peninsula, and near Ari Burnu.

At Ari Burnu the Turks admit that the landing was successfully carried out, but they claim to have dispersed the troops which came ashore near Karachali. It is believed in military circles here that the landing at Karachali was only a feint to disguise the real intention of the Allies, although it is said that the putting ashore of a strong force at this point might result in their working around and cutting the Turkish main line of communications with the Gallipoli Peninsula above the Bulair line across the neck of the peninsula.

The forcing of the Dardanelles is realized by the military critics here to be of the greatest importance, for they assert that it is the only way that the Allies can render immediate aid to Russia and repay her for the great sacrifices she has made for the common cause. In addition, it is believed by the military observers that a success here would bring the Balkan states definitely over to the side of the Quadruple Entente powers in the war. Italy is understood to be prepared to lend a hand in the Dardanelles operations.

JOINT NOTE TO SOFIA BY QUADRUPLE ENTENTE

Athens Asks Eight Days' Delay—Teutons Massing Troops on Serb Frontier.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—The correspondent at Saloniki of the Havas Agency telegraphs that diplomatic representatives of France, Russia, Great Britain, and Italy have delivered a joint communication to the Bulgarian Government with a view to procuring the collaboration of that nation with the Allies, as part of a common understanding with the Balkan States.

This action was taken in conjunction with the presentation of similar communications to Greece and Serbia, as recently made known. It is in response to Bulgaria's request on June 14 for information from the Quadruple Entente powers concerning the advantages she might expect in exchange for her active co-operation with them.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—The Balkan situation is still chaotic. Dispatches from Saloniki say that the Austro-German plan to strike again at Serbia already has found expression in a concentration of Teutonic forces along the Serbian frontier. It is said 100,000 men have been massed near Orsova, Hungary, which may be the forerunner of the predicted campaign through Serbia for the relief of Turkey.

Italy has not yet declared war on Turkey, but Athens reports that Italian Consuls are leaving the Ottoman Empire, intrusting their affairs to their American colleagues. If this be true it probably means that impending developments in the Balkans dictated the action of Italy.

Frequent Cabinet meetings are being held at Athens, according to a Reuter dispatch from the Greek capital, in connection with the reply which will be made to the collective note of the quadruple entente powers regarding a proposed agreement among the Balkan States in relation to the war. Premier Gounaris has had several conferences with King Constantine on the subject.

Bulgaria has demanded a portion of Greek Macedonia as part of her price for entering the war on the side of the Allies, but Premier Gounaris has been quoted as saying Greece would not cede an inch of territory to Bulgaria.

Greece Consults with Serbia.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Aug. 10.—It is considered here that the time has arrived when the Balkan question must be decided one way or the other. It is said in political circles that the Quadruple Entente is making the greatest efforts to force a solution. Much lies in the counterproposals of Bulgaria, but the key of the situation is held to be in the hands of Greece, who has asked eight days in which to reply, sending meantime a note to Serbia, asking whether that power is ready to treat.

The Tribuna says:

"The argument at present between the Quadruple Entente and Sofia is as to what guarantees the powers can give for the fulfillment of the promises of Serbia and Greece in case they are made. The Quadruple Entente can safely guarantee such promises to Bulgaria as these powers eventually will be able to compel any recalcitrant country to carry out its agreement."

The delay of eight days requested by Athens, covers the period in which the new Greek Parliament will open and ex-Premier Venizelos again come into power. The Parliament is scheduled to meet on Aug. 16.

SAYS BULGARIA'S PRICE IS SERBIAN MACEDONIA

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Aug. 9, (via Berlin, Aug. 10.)—Bulgaria will send her armies marching against Constantinople in twenty-four hours if Serbia will cede Serbian Macedonia to her.

V. Radoslavoff, Prime Minister of Bulgaria and the man who more than any other today holds the destinies of Europe in his hands, made this frank statement to me today.

In an exclusive interview granted The United Press, the Bulgarian Premier for the first time revealed to the world exactly what Bulgaria demands for remaining neutral and what she asks of the Allies for driving the Turk from Europe, an operation that admittedly would prove the turning point of the war for the Allies.

Of equal importance was his reply to the report circulated in European capitals that Bulgaria, having won Constantinople, would demand the Ottoman capital as her prize.

"That fear is groundless," he said with emphasis. "The international, commercial and political responsibilities attaching to a city occupying the geographical position of Constantinople are too great for a nation that must always remain small—like Bulgaria.

"We will fight but for one end. That is to extend our frontiers until they embrace the peoples of our own blood, but that end must be guaranteed to us beyond all doubt. If we are asked to fight alone, we are ready. If we are asked to fight with Greece, Serbia, and Rumania in a new Balkan alliance, on the side of the Allies, our willingness remains the same. To the Allies we say: 'Give us back Serbian Macedonia, and we will fight in the way we can serve you best.'"

V. Radoslavoff is the storm centre of the greatest diplomatic swirl the world has ever seen. Because Bulgaria holds the key to the world war, the diplomatic agents of every great power involved swarm here, their pressure centring upon him.

Wants Guarantee of Aims.

"Bulgaria is fully prepared and waiting to enter the war the moment she receives absolute guarantees that by so doing she will attain that for which other nations already engaged are striving, namely, the realization of her national ideals," said the Premier.

"The bulk of these aspirations lie in Serbian Macedonia, which, with its 1,500,000 of Bulgarian peoples, was pledged and assigned to us at the close of the first Balkan war. It is still ours by right and the principle of nationality. When the Triple Entente can assure us that this territory will be returned to Bulgaria and our minor claims in Grecian Macedonia and elsewhere realized the Allies will find us ready to fight with them. But these guarantees must be real and absolute. No mere paper ones can be accepted.

"Unfortunately our aspirations are not attainable by direct force of our arms. We cannot go and take the territories which we feel are rightfully ours. Instead, they must be ceded to us by others in compensation for the participation of our arms in the general conflict. We have, therefore, frankly and openly accepted the offers of both groups of powers in negotiations to that end. Only by dealing with both sides do we feel we can secure the best guarantees that what we desire will be attained.

Tells What Both Sides Ask.

"On the part of the Allies we are asked for the direct participation in the war of our entire army, whose valor the whole world knows. On the part of Germany, Austria and Turkey we are only asked for a continuation of our neutrality until the end of the war.

"Candidly, this latter request we are loath to grant. We cannot foretell what the future holds for us. To discount it entirely and tie our hands by a solemn pledge of continued neutrality would be impolitic indeed. We might agree to remain neutral for a shorter period. But whether we remain neutral or whether we fight, our end and the motives governing our decision will remain the same.

"We have no disposition to play for time in these negotiations. We seek only to gain guarantees that will insure the absolute realization of our national ideals, and just what these are, it seems essential to me, the world now should know.

"There are now living outside the borders of Bulgaria nearly 3,000,000 Bulgarians. The bulk of these inhabit districts contiguous to us and constitute the majority of the population of these districts. We aspire to have them united in one Fatherland. Of this total number, 500,000 inhabit Russian Bessarabia. Another 300,000 are in Rumania. Others are in Thrace, but the greater number, about 1,500,000, inhabit Servbia and Grecian Macedonia. It is there, we frankly admit, that the bulk of our national aspirations also lie.

"Already we have over 600,000 refugees, largely from Serbia and Grecian Macedonia. Indeed, half the population of Sofia consists of refugees. They are our brothers—of our own blood. Simply caring for them can never be a real solution of the great problem. Only a united Bulgaria can solve that.

Whole Nation Is Prepared.

"While Bulgaria is quite ready to participate in the war, she does not underestimate the cost. She knows that Turkey is strong—far stronger than Europe yet realizes.

"The fatigue which our army naturally felt at the close of two successive wars has passed away. Our troops are in better condition and better equipped than ever. They have been organized on the Russian military system. Their officers have studied in the leading military schools of Europe.

RUMANIA TO EXPORT WHEAT.

To Lift Ban as Soon as Germany Removes Last Year's Purchases.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUCHAREST, Aug. 10.—The question of the exportation of cereals to Germany and Austria-Hungary will apparently be settled, in consequence of a decision by the Rumanian Government to permit the exportation of wheat as soon as the amount of maize purchased after last year's harvest by the German Government, but still detained in this country, has been sent beyond the frontier.

Of this, about 40,000 carloads were sold at high prices last year, but still await exportation. Last Autumn Germany offered as much as a thousand dollars a carload for maize, but the price has now fallen to nearly a third of that figure.

In any case the quantity of cereals exported to Central Europe will not be large, owing to the difficulty of providing railway cars. Germany declines to send cars into Rumania and is prohibiting the passage of her own cars over the frontier.

The delay caused by unloading and reloading at the frontier has reduced exports to small dimensions.

The prohibition on the export of wheat and other cereals last year was necessitated by the prospective great rise in the price of bread.

TURKS LOSE IN CAUCASUS.

Russians Capture a Pass and Take Prisoners and Cannon.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 10, (via London, Wednesday, Aug. 11.)—The War Office tonight issued the following statement regarding the fighting in the Caucasus:

"In the Passine Valley Sunday we repulsed Turkish attacks along the whole front. There was a desperate struggle for the possession of Merghe Mir Pass, which our troops captured in spite of furious attacks by the enemy, who withdrew in disorder to the south.

"In the direction of the Euphrates River our troops, pursuing the retreating Turks, took possession of Palantchen after fighting, capturing two cannon, a quantity of cartridges and arms, and a caravan of camels, and making prisoner the commander of a regiment of infantry besides four other officers. Our pursuing columns are making fresh prisoners ceaselessly."

A CONCESSION BY TURKEY.

American Ship May Call at Vurla to Take Americans and Italians.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ATHENS, Aug. 10, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—The Turkish Government has agreed to allow an American ship to call at Vurla, Asia Minor, in order to take away Italian and American subjects.

NORWEGIAN STEAMER AND 3 TRAWLERS SUNK

LONDON, Aug. 10.—A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Copenhagen says that the Norwegian steamer Geiranger of Bergen has been sunk.

The crew were landed by a Dutch fishing boat.

The members of the crews of all three were saved except two men on the Benardna.

The Geiranger was a vessel of 1,081 gross tons. She was built in 1907.

NEW TEUTON TROOPS ON ITALIAN FRONT

One Report Has Them as Coming from Pola, Another from Russia.

85,000 AUSTRIAN WOUNDED

ROME, Aug. 10.—Information has reached Udine to the effect that General Cadorna, the Italian commander-in-chief, has decided not to resume the offensive on a large scale until his troops are well settled and organized in the positions lately occupied.

The losses of the Austrians in wounded alone are reported to have reached a total of 85,000. They are in need of fresh troops and, not wishing to weaken their armies on the Serbian and Russian fronts, have brought in three army corps from Pola to the Isonzo front.

A cause of great suffering to the Austrians on Carso Plateau is lack of water. Until recently water has been obtained from Doberdo Lake, but this supply has been cut off, as Doberdo is under the fire of Italian artillery.

GENEVA, Aug. 10.—The appearance on the Italian front of Austrian troops released from the Russian campaign is announced by The Tribune, in a dispatch from Laibach, Austria. These troops, to the number of 30,000, which are equipped with artillery sufficient for two army corps, attacked the Italians yesterday outside of Gorizia. The Italians brought up additional artillery and after a battle of fifteen hours, the dispatch says, forced the Austrians to retreat into Gorizia, leaving 2,000 dead on the battlefield.

The Italians are said to have gained an important point, strategically, by joining forces between Romane and Doberdo, south of Gradisca. The Austrians endeavored in vain to prevent this junction, losing heavily in the effort.

ROME, Aug. 10, (via Paris).—An official statement issued tonight at the headquarters of the Italian General Staff was as follows:

The general situation is unchanged. Our artillery, however, has caused serious damage to Tagliata and Ruaz, near Livinallonga.

On the Carso Plateau we easily repulsed the now habitually small night attacks with which our adversary seeks vainly to hamper us, strengthening our positions and preparing for further advances.

Daily artillery combats on the southwest front continue in the district of Gorizia, near Plava; the bombardment at times is very violent. Three Italian attacks against our western salient on the Doberdo Plateau and an attack near Zagora, southwest of Plava, were repulsed.

Elsewhere there have been no important developments.

"It is learned from an authoritative source that the Austrians have had 85,000 men wounded in the war with Italy alone. As the proportion of killed is usually represented as one-third of the wounded the Austrians cannot have lost less than 27,000 men killed. Add to this figure the 25,000 Austrians made prisoners by the Italians and you have the following data: Austrians killed, 27,000; Austrians wounded, 85,000; Austrian prisoners, 25,000; total casualties, 137,000."

ASKS AID FOR HOSPITALS.

American Red Cross in Italy Appeals to Friends Here.

The American Red Cross Society in Italy has sent out an appeal for aid from Americans, in order that the work of the society may not be impeded by lack of co-operation from its friends here.

It is stated that the American colony in Florence, which has been appointed the central base hospital city of Italy, is equipping and will maintain a convalescent home for soldiers, for which supplies from America are urgently needed.

In answer to inquiries as to the articles most in demand, the headquarters of the society has sent out the following list:

Machines for rolling bandages, rubber gloves for surgeons' work, single rubber finger protectors, rubber tubes of various sizes, surgical instruments for various kinds of operations, tincture of iodine, carbolic acid, pieces or "bolts" of white and gray flannel, pieces of white cotton for bandages, night shirts of white cotton or flannelette, dressing gowns, and slippers.

Information as to the required shapes and measurements of articles to be sent to Italy may be obtained from Miss Mabel Boardman of the American Red Cross, Washington, D. C., to whom money contributions may also be sent.

TWO BRITISH WAR CRAFT SENT TO THE BOTTOM

BERLIN, Aug. 10, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The British auxiliary cruiser India of 7,900 tons has been torpedoed off the Norwegian coast. Eighty members of the crew were saved.

The India belonged to the Peninsular and Oriental Line and was built in 1896. She was probably on her way to or from Archangel.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The British torpedo boat destroyer Lynx was sunk in the North Sea yesterday as the result of striking a mine, according to an official announcement this evening by the British Press Bureau.

Four officers and twenty-two men of the crew were saved. Her complement in normal times is 100.

British M. P. Wounded in Flanders.

BRITISH STRENGTHEN POSITIONS AT HOOGE

GERMAN GAS ATTACK FAILS

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The British have abandoned some trenches to the south of Hooge, but without materially affecting their general position, according to Field Marshal Sir John French, who reports that his troops have consolidated their gains of Monday.

Last night, in a violent bombardment of Le Prêtre trenches, the Germans used asphyxiating bombs without making any gains. German bomb attacks near Souchez were also repulsed.

The report of Field Marshal Sir John French says:

Northwest of Hooge and in the ruins of the village itself we have consolidated the ground gained yesterday, repulsing one weak infantry attack during the night. Yesterday afternoon there was no infantry fighting, but there was a violent artillery engagement, as a result of which all the trenches in the open ground south of Hooge became untenable by either side, and we have now slightly withdrawn the position of our line which lay south of the village.

This makes no material difference to our position.

The total number of prisoners captured by us yesterday was 150.

The day has passed quietly. There have been only artillery engagements in Artois, in the Valley of the Aisne (region of Troyon,) on the border of the Argonne Forest and in the forest of Apremont.

Four of the aeroplanes which took part in the bombardment of Saarbrücken (Rhenish Prussia) failed to come back to our lines. One of them is said to have landed in Switzerland, near Payerne, in the district of Vaud.

Following is the afternoon bulletin from Paris:

In the Artois district, to the north of the Souchez railway station, the Germans last night delivered two attacks in which they made use of bombs. They were driven back to their trenches by our fire.

In the Argonne, in the eastern part of the forest, last night witnessed a cannonade and rifle firing, but with no infantry engagements. There was also fighting with bombs and hand grenades at Vauquois.

In the forest of Le Prêtre the enemy, after a violent bombardment, attacked at about 8 o'clock yesterday evening our trenches in the vicinity of La Croix-des-Carmes, but they were checked by a curtain fire from the French troops. During the night a further attack, accompanied by a bombardment of shells containing asphyxiating gases, also was checked by our artillery.

The night passed quietly in the Vosges.

Mine explosions in the neighborhood of the hamlet of Beausejour, in the Champagne, were without result.

After the destruction by our artillery on July 30 of the viaduct west of Dammerkirch, the French threw a bridge across the Harg south of Mansbach. This bridge, which was completed a short time ago, was destroyed yesterday by a few direct hits from our artillery.

On the border of the Harz forest, west of Verdun, a French observation balloon was shot down. Between Bellingen and Rheinweiler a French aeroplane was forced to land by the fire of our anti-aircraft guns. The aviator and observer were taken prisoners. An enemy aviator was forced to land on Swiss territory.

HEAVY GERMAN LOSSES IN HOOGE TRENCHES

British Artillery Wrought Great Havoc — German Prisoners Dazed and Demoralized.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—The Daily Chronicle's correspondent at British headquarters in Flanders telegraphs under date of Monday:

"The trenches at Hooge captured by the enemy on July 30 were retaken this morning with additional ground, amounting all to a length of 1,200 yards. The loss of our trenches was an unfortunate episode, but it was confidently expected that the position would be recovered without great difficulty. That expectation kept us on tenterhooks several days, and last night, when at some distance from Hooge there was a sound of heavy gunfire, there were many men in many billets who listened silently, with a sudden indrawing of the breath, because they knew the work was beginning.

"On one little spot in Flanders there was a group of people staring up into the sky. Around them for miles was a great panorama of the war zone, with Ypres as a centre, and into the darkness leaped sharp swords of light and bursting stars which left reddish clouds above the black woods and fields. That bombardment, in a night of infernal beauty and terror, was not the direct attack on the German position at Hooge, but the French artillery on our left bombarding the enemy. The main attack for the recovery of our lost ground began with a preliminary bombardment shortly after dawn, answered by the enemy to the east, west, and north of the Ypres salient. So for many miles and over a wide territory there was the bursting of great shells and storm clouds of shrapnel.

"At 4 o'clock our fire was concentrated upon the lines at Hooge, and from all our batteries at long and short range there was flung forth a torrent of fire. When the foes were frightened the order was given to the infantry to take the trenches. The condition of the enemy's lines must have been terrible beyond words, and their death roll was very heavy in those destroyed dugouts and behind the broken parapets. Our own casualties are so far reported as slight, for the artillery had done most of the work and overcome the enemy's response. The prisoners who were taken—about 150 in all up to the time of writing—were in a dazed and demoralized condition.

"The enemy has not yet prepared a counterattack, and our men are consolidating their positions after a victory which cannot yet be told in detail."

German Resistance Weak.

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, Aug 9, (via London, Aug. 10).—By an attack on Hooge this morning the British not only recovered all the trenches which they lost before the flaming German gas attacks on Aug. 1, but more, taking in front of a thousand yards all together, this has been the most important offensive action in weeks.

The British guns preceded it by shelling the German positions on a part of the line in the Yser Canal region, north of Ypres, yesterday afternoon, to which the Germans replied in kind, including the heaviest shelling received by the ruins of Ypres for two months.

At 2:30 o'clock this morning British guns loosed their thunder on the German trenches at Hooge in front of Ypres, and for two hours this continuous roar was kept up until at dawn, British infantry rushed the German trenches at Hooge.

British officers said the resistance was surprisingly slight, and either the artillery preparation was most successful or the German line must have been weakly held.

All through the day the artillery of both sides continued covering the region of Hooge with shells, which were visible over the flat country to the Associated Press correspondent, while the British were busy consolidating their gains and preparing against any counter-attack.

The British took 250 prisoners and two machine guns.

NEW FRENCH SERUM SAVES MANY LIVES

Soldiers Who Are Fearfully Mutilated Completely Restored by Its Use.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—What are described as remarkable cures of wounded French soldiers have been effected by the new polyvalent serum, the discovery of which was announced last March. Complete recovery is announced of men who were terribly mutilated and for whom all hope had been given up before the serum was employed, so badly infected were their wounds.

Drs. Leclainche and Vallee, the discoverers of the serum, have been unable up to the present to make more than 2,000 flasks of it a month, most of which goes to the base hospitals, where the worst cases are to be found. When it can be made in sufficient quantities to supply the firing line, where it could be used preventively, as anti-tetanus serum is now used, it is hoped that thousands of lives can be saved.

The new serum, which may be roughly described as a combination of a number of serums against different varieties of bacteria, has been put to practical use only recently. Experiments with it were made previously in Dr. Paris's laboratory. It was then used by Dr. Bergeron in the Buffon Hospital and afterward more widely distributed.

QUEEN MARY BUYS AMERICAN FLAG

She Pays $1,250 for Embroidery at Lady French's Red Cross Sale.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Among the articles sold was an American flag consisting of a piece of white silk a yard square, with the Stars and Stripes richly embroidered on it. Some years ago Lady French bought it for $35 from a Paris dealer in embroideries. The first bid was $150, and after three other bids it was bought by Queen Mary for $1,250. This was the highest bid of the day. Her Majesty purchased no other embroidery.

TO DROP SWOBODA CASE.

Official Urges Ending of Proceedings Against Alleged American.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—Major Jullien of the Permanent Court-Martial has closed his inquiry into the case of Raymond Swoboda and has recommended to the Military Governor of Paris that the proceedings be dropped.

Swoboda, who says he is an American citizen, was first taken into custody on suspicion of being responsible for the fire at sea aboard the French Line steamer La Touraine, and later was accused of espionage. He was cleared of the first charge, and no convincing proof was found against him on the second. His release from custody will probably be ordered soon.

MAXIM INVENTS DEFENCE AGAINST POISON GAS

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—The Times says that Sir Hiram Maxim, who has been engaged for some time in devising means of combating the poison gas of the Germans, has designed a very simple apparatus, which the Government is now testing.

The object of the apparatus is to cause large and rapidly spreading fires by means of specially designed incendiary bombs in the path of the advancing gas at a distance of several hundreds of yards from the Allies' trenches, and by this means, since the heating of the air must cause an upward rush, to drive the gas out of harm's way.

"Chlorine gas at one atmosphere of pressure is twice and a half as heavy as air. Escaping into the air, it very quickly becomes mixed with a large quantity of air, so that by the time it reaches our trenches it is, as a rule, less than 1 per cent. heavier than the surrounding air; that is, it is extremely light as compared with air, but it is quite strong enough to prove fatal.

"It occurred to me some months ago that if a fire could be produced between the gas and our trenches the rapid upward movement of the air would take the chlorine along with it, and this is quite true. The bombs that I made were to be thrown by hand, but it was found that in order to be thrown any distance they had to be made quite small, and, moreover, they could not be thrown as far as the officers wished to throw them.

"I delivered 100 to the Government for experimental purposes. A few of these have been tested, and it has been found that the fire should be greater and further away, so I have designed a very much simpler and larger form. The firm in London who propose to make them have designed a machine for throwing them with great accuracy a distance of 300 yards, which will be quite enough."

SAYS FRANCE IS UNDAUNTED

Mrs. Chanler Finds the People Determined and Sure They Will Win.

Mrs. William Astor Chanler, one of the organizers of the Lafayette Kit Fund, to provide comforts for the French soldiers in the field, returned yesterday on the Rochambeau, after spending three months in France, during which time 40,000 kits were distributed. Mrs. Chanler saw the conditions in France at the beginning of the war and was better able to judge of the changes since last August.

"The French people are sure they will win," said Mrs. Chanler, "and the spirit everywhere is a revelation to strangers who had regarded the French as a frivolous people.

"No one speaks of peace, because all realize that the fight is being made for freedom. There is no truth in reports of differences between French and British commanders. I visited the line from Nieuport des Bains to Belfort, and found the Allies confident of each other and of success."

Mrs. Chanler said the cost of living had not gone up in France, but that some things were cheaper. The Lafayette Kits are much appreciated by the soldiers, she said, and the distribution will go on as long as the war lasts. Mrs. Chanler will go over again after Christmas.

Miss Emily Sloane, Secretary to the Lafayette Fund, who was with Mrs. Chanler, said a big doll show would be given here in the Fall for the benefit of widows and orphans of the war. There will be 100,000 dolls, made by the women and children of France and by wounded soldiers, also a number of dolls designed and dressed by noted French artists.

SURE RUSSIA WON'T YIELD.

Paris Papers Comment on the Reported Peace Offer.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—The newspapers discuss editorially the reported German peace proposals to Russia. They point out that the question involves a fundamental difference between Germany and the Allies. In suggesting a separate peace Germany makes the identical error in psychology to that which led to the war.

The Germans imagine, the papers say, that other European nations have the same contempt as themselves—which Prussian history has shown from the day that Frederick the Great attacked Silesia—for treaties the moment they involve sacrifice or discomfort. As England was ready to fight to defend an old treaty regarding Belgium, so Russia with France and Serbia—who, it is asserted, also received overtures of peace—will not break her recent treaty with England, whatever the cost.

Writers of the Bernhardi and Treitschke school, it is declared, have persuaded Germany that national expediency is more important than honor, but they will find that the Allies hold the opposite view. Despite the German offers and the Pope's appeals and neutral peace leagues, the Allies intend to fight till Germany is beaten thoroughly.

Peace without victory, it is asserted, means a worse struggle for future generations. The Allies are fighting to save them.

Germans contemplate early resumption of the campaign in this region. The swampy nature of the country immediately to the south of Riga renders control of the approaches from the east essential for success. The Russians, in force, are opposing stubbornly the advance of the Germans in this direction.

On the other hand, the advance of the Germans toward Vilkomir, on the roads leading in the direction of Vilna, in the Government of Kovno, has given rise to the belief in some quarters that the invaders may attempt to press on to Vilna. According to the military critic of the Bourse Gazette, this theory is supported "by the aerial bombardment of Vilna, and by the beginning of the evacuation of that city" by the Russians. It is hardly expected that this movement will be forced, however, until the German positions at Poniowitz and Kovno have been made more secure from the danger of being flanked from these directions.

Riga is being bombarded by aeroplane almost daily. A civil guard of 3,000 men, similar to that organized in Warsaw before its capture, is ready to take over police duties should evacuation of the city become necessary.

Ivangorod Army's Peril Grave.

AUSTRIAN HEADQUARTERS, Aug. 9, (via London, Aug. 10.)—Operations in the southwestern angle of the battlefront in Poland eastward of Ivangorod are rapidly placing the Russian Ivangorod army in an embarrassing position. The victory of Archduke Joseph Ferdinaud's army at Lubertow enabled the Austrians to cut the natural line of retreat from Ivangorod eastward and throw a force across the turnpike from Ivangorod to Brest-Litovsk.

The Austro-Germans under General von Woyrsch who crossed the Vistula north of Ivangorod now have succeeded in breaking through the Russian defensive lines on the north, leaving the Russians only a narrow opening northeastward through a difficult country of swamp and scrub forests. A day or two will show whether they will be able to accomplish this without the heaviest losses.

OFFICIAL BULLETINS OF DAY'S OPERATIONS

PETROGRAD, Aug. 10.—This official statement was issued tonight at the headquarters of the General Staff:

On the roads to Riga Monday night, after hand-to-hand fighting, we successfully repulsed several German attacks, although they were supported by powerful heavy artillery.

After combats the same night and the following day in the direction of Dvinsk, in the region of Schoenberg, Ponemunck, and Vilkomir, (northeast of Kovno,) the enemy, yielding to our pressure, began to fall back, leaving in our hands about 100 prisoners, several machine guns, and ammunition chests.

In the direction of Lublin and Lukow, on the right bank of the Vieprz, the enemy delivered an offensive Monday afternoon which was stopped, notwithstanding the persistency of the attacks. On the roads to Vladova we successfully repulsed an attack made under cover of asphyxiating gases.

In the Dniester region, at the mouth of the Stripa, the Austrians made a local attack Sunday. The fighting here continues.

On the other sectors of the entire front there have been no important collisions.

Eastern theatre of war: On the front in the district of Kovno the attack was pushed forward, with continuous fighting nearer the line of fortresses. During these engagements we took about 100 more Russian prisoners and four cannon.

The troops of the army of General Falcke broke through the line of fortresses at Lomza yesterday afternoon and took Fort No. 4 by storm. At daybreak today the fortified town was occupied. South of Lomza the highroad to Ostrow was crossed. Ostrow is still being held by the enemy. Our troops have reached the Bug from Bojany, west of Brok, to the mouth of the river. Since Aug. 7 twenty-three officers and 10,100 men have been taken prisoners in this region.

East of Warsaw the army of Prince Leopold of Bavaria has advanced to a point near the Stanislawow-Novo Minsk Road.

Southeastern theatre of war: The army of General von Woyrsch, pursuing the enemy, has reached the district north and northeast of Gelechow. This army joined the left wing of the group of armies of Field Marshal Von Mackensen, who is advancing from the south.

On the front from Ostrow to the Bug the rear guards of the enemy were driven back toward their main forces.

VIENNA, Aug. 10, (via London.)—An official statement issued today at the War Office was as follows:

The pursuit of the enemy retreating from the Vistula district is proceeding. Troops under General Koeyess have reached the district southeast of Zelechow, (north of Ivangorod, about midway between the railway lines connecting Ivangorod with Warsaw and Lukow,) closely followed by portions of the army of Archduke Joseph Ferdinand advancing across the lower Wieprz. They bend down the River Wieprz near Kock, (between Lubartow and Lukow,) has been crossed at several points by our troops.

Further east, on the front of the Bug River, our allies have captured the line of enemy rearguard positions. On the Bug and Zlota Lipa the situation is unchanged.

Near Czernelica, on the south bank of the Dniester, (northeast of Bukowina,) Austrian troops and troops from the coastal district, together with Landwehr regiments, have captured the bridgehead position which until now had been stubbornly defended by the Russians, leaving in our hands 22 officers, 2,800 men, six machine guns, many cars and much war material.

USED 16-INCH GUNS AT KOVNO.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 10.—An official review was issued tonight concerning the assault on Kovno on Sunday. It says in part:

"The enemy began an attack on the front of our works from the village of Piple to the Eliisenthal front on the River Iessia. With siege artillery they began a bombardment at midnight, utilizing guns up to sixteen inches. The hurricane of fire lasted not less than two hours and our batteries answered energetically.

"About 3 o'clock in the morning the assaulting columns, in close formation, marched against our positions. By a concentrated fire, the explosion of mines and gallant counter-attacks by our troops the enemy was thrown back along the whole of the front. The weakened Germans, who suffered enormous losses, were hurled back into the neighboring ravines, where they apparently began to prepare a fresh assault.

"Sunday noon the enemy's fire increased with terrible intensity, but this protracted and destructive hurricane from most powerful guns failed to shake our troops, who firmly withstood the hail of projectiles showering upon them. Our artillery valiantly supported our heroes.

"This incessant cannonade lasted all day. At nightfall the enemy columns, which had been continuously massing in front of our positions, again rushed to the assault, the attacks lasting two hours, and succeeded in taking part of our trenches on the line of the advanced position which his fire had swept.

"But afterwards by the heroic efforts of our reserves, which had been brought up, the Germans were repulsed with heavy losses.

"The enemy retained only the works near the village of Piple, which were won at the cost of enormous efforts and losses."

TOOK PRAGA AT DAYBREAK.

Germans Crossed Vistula at Warsaw Within the City Itself.

BERLIN, Aug. 10, (via London.)—A special dispatch from Warsaw, dated Sunday, describes the German crossing of the Vistula at Warsaw. This was effected within the city itself, although the buildings on the eastern bank of the river were still occupied by Russians, who, from the shelter of the houses, could offer strong resistance to the passage of the waterway.

The Russians and Germans had maintained a vigorous fire across the Vistula during Saturday night. During the whole day bullets whistled through the streets leading to the waterfront of the Polish capital. Nevertheless, the Germans calmly worked their way down the quay and occupied in force houses and gardens commanding the spot selected for the crossing.

This spot was just down the stream from the railroad bridge. Pontoons were brought up under cover of darkness, and the crossing of the river was begun at daybreak. As soon as the Russians perceived this movement they hastily evacuated their positions and abandoned the entire suburb of Praga, firing the main railroad station and houses, and burning their supplies before departing.

About 15 civilians were killed and 200 wounded in the street fighting, many of them in the Jewish quarter. One shrapnel exploded over a street car.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—The London Times correspondent with the Russian forces, telegraphing via Petrograd, Aug. 9, says:

"The Russian abandonment of Warsaw marks the end of one of the most remarkable campaigns in the world's history. It would be both stupid and unfair for an impartial observer to minimize the German campaign and the determination and bravery of the German soldiers, whose unintermittent sacrifices during three months have placed them in possession of the goal for which in the space of a year they probably suffered not far from a million casualties.

"The capture of Warsaw undoubtedly represents the greatest German achievement in the war. This must be admitted, but on the other hand it would be equally stupid and unfair to magnify the importance of Warsaw. The city has been lost not through inferiority of the Russian army, but on account of one cause only, which, stated briefly, is the inability of the Russian empire to convert quickly its vast resources for the purposes of war.

"Personally I have been in and out of Warsaw constantly since the evacuation started, and I am able to state without reservation that never has there been the slightest confusion or panic on the roads as a result of the evacuation. They were neither demoralized nor discouraged, though they certainly were bitterly disappointed. None that I talked with wanted peace, but they said they must retake Warsaw and beat the Germans.

"If the enemy, on occupation of the city, captured anything valuable I shall be greatly surprised, as for two weeks an almost uninterrupted train of transport, carrying military effects, was strung out along the road in the rear, in case Warsaw ultimately should be given up. The bridges were blown up at 3 o'clock, and, to the best of my information, the Germans arrived on the Warsaw side of the Vistula at 6, which certainly would not indicate even close contact with the rear guard, much less the carrying of any part of the defenses by storm.

"The Allies can have the satisfaction of knowing that the Russians played their game practically up to the last minute and the last round of shrapnel, and then retired in perfectly good order, leaving the Germans to enter an undefended city.

"The armies throughout this movement acted on a symmetrical plan following a time table in conjunction with the whole of their forces from Sokol in Galicia to Lomza in the north, which enabled them to stay until last, taking a maximum toll from the enemy and still escape with the army intact and ready to fight again elsewhere on new chosen positions."

LOSE 65,000 IN ONE SECTOR.

GENEVA, Aug. 10.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Innsbruck, Austria, says that in the recent fighting along the sector of the eastern front running from the Pissa River to Ostrov, northeast of Warsaw, the Germans lost 65,000 men in killed or wounded, but succeeded in capturing the principal fortified positions of the Russians.

The engagements in the vicinity of Novo Georgievsk, the dispatch says, have been continuous for five days, and the Germans have occupied the northern portion of the defenses of the surrounded fortress. The Russian garrison depends mainly upon bayonet charges, as artillery ammunition is lacking.

North of the Lublin-Chelm railroad the battle continues to the advantage of the Austrians and Germans. In the region of Nova Alexandria, on the Vistula south of Ivangorod, the Russians are offering fierce resistance, inflicting heavy losses on their opponents.

AUSTRIA'S OFFERS SCORNED

Her Ambassador Said He Was Continually Told That His Proposals Were Made Too Late.

A new Red Book has been issued by the Austro-Hungarian Government, setting forth in greater detail than the first the diplomatic correspondence that passed between the Governments of Francis Joseph and Victor Emmanuel and their representatives in the period from July 20, 1914, to May 23, 1915; that is to say, from the day of the climax in the Serbian question to the declaration of war by Italy against Austria-Hungary. The collection includes 205 documents and an addendum, and contains several features not brought out in the earlier Austrian Red Book.

Russia, which arrogates to itself the right of meddling in our conflict with Serbia, has mobilized its army and its navy and is menacing the peace of Europe.

In accord with Germany I have decided to defend the rights of the Triple Alliance and I have ordered the mobilization of all my military and naval forces. We owe thirty years of peace and prosperity to the treaty which unites us and the identical interpretation of which by our Governments I confirm with satisfaction.

I am happy at this solemn moment to be able to count upon the co-operation of my allies and of their valiant armies, and I cherish the warmest wishes for the success of our arms and for a glorious future for our countries.

I have received your Majesty's telegram. I need not assure your Majesty that Italy, which has made all possible efforts to insure the maintenance of the peace and which will do all it can to contribute to re-establishing it as soon as possible, will preserve an attitude cordially amicable toward her allies, in conformity with the treaty of the Triple Alliance, its sincere sentiments, and the great interests which it must safeguard.

This telegram was regarded by Austria as virtually insuring that Italy would maintain a benevolent neutrality toward her allies and ultimately join in the conflict on their side, and Count Berchtold, the Austrian Foreign Minister, telegraphed on Aug. 2 to Herr von Mérey, the Austrian Ambassador at Rome:

I see from your Excellency's telegram of yesterday that the Italian Government intends eventually at a later time in the course of the present European war to intervene actively.

For your Excellency's personal guidance I add that the Duke of Averna [the Italian Ambassador at Vienna] has expressed to me in warm words his conviction that Italy, even if under the strict wording of the treaty of the Triple Alliance the casus foederis were not provided, would have a moral obligation to take her stand on the side of her allies. He said he had urgently advised his Government to this effect, but that he did not know whether decisive weight would be given to his voice.

Italian Neutrality Promised.

On the strength of a circular telegram the Italian Ambassador yesterday informed me, in accordance with his instructions, that the Italian Government had decided to remain neutral in the present conflict. I replied to the Duke of Averna that I saw in that a scarcely friendly attitude on the part of Italy—an attitude which, moreover, was not in harmony with the Triple Alliance treaty, after Germany had now been attacked by Russia, and after France had joined with Russia, whereby the casus foederis was furnished. Moreover, even aside from this circumstance, I told him I must consider it a very unwise policy on the part of Italy to separate herself at such a historical moment from her allies. Since the inception of the alliance it was the first time in which one great party had become engaged; if Italy remained on the side of her allies she would have a chance to realize far-reaching aspirations, such as Tunis, Savoy, etc., but if she swerved aside she would go empty-handed. I told him that it was a mistaken idea to fear an increase of power by Austria-Hungary in the Balkans. The Italian Government was aware that we were not striving for that at all, but that we only wished the maintenance of the existing status. For Italy, on the other hand, there was the prospect of an increase of power and expansion. Nothing lay farther from our minds than the desire to disturb the existing balance with relation to Italy. If such a view was really held in Italy, I begged the Ambassador to take care to meet such suspicions with the arguments which our conduct in all the thirty years of the existence of our alliance provided for him. I was unwilling to believe that the Marquis di San Giuliano intended to deceive us when at Abbazia he assured us repeatedly with emphasis that Italy desired, indeed, that Italy needed, a strong Austria-Hungary. How could this statement be reconciled with any policy he might now attempt to carry out that was directed in the last analysis against the preservation of the Monarchy in its present status? Especially strangely must such an attempt move us because there was selected for it a moment when there was becoming evident among us a change of sentiment in favor of Italy, a wave of warm sympathy for the allied kingdom. It had probably not escaped him, I said, what friendly demonstrations had taken place here very recently. The Government was also desirous of using this improved sentiment in favor of the Italian element of our population.

In an interview on Aug. 20, 1914, the Marquis di San Giuliano explained to the Austrian Ambassador at Rome that it was necessary for Italy to remain neutral, its military preparations on all frontiers, he said, had been made necessary on three accounts—the desire to reassure public opinion, the necessity of maintaining internal order, and, finally, the impossibility of restraining in any other way the thousands of Italian workingmen who had returned from abroad.

The negotiations in August concerned chiefly the interpretation of Article VII. of the Triple Alliance treaty concerning compensation and ended by Austria-Hungary's recognizing without reservation the Italian interpretation of the situation presented on Aug. 23. Although there was not yet any talk of ceding territory at that time, Austria even then had an inkling of what the Italian demands were tending to, as is shown by a telegram of Herr von Mérey on Aug. 5, in which he said that he feared Italy was aiming to compel Austria to continue the discussion of the compensation question and would finally even demand the ceding of Trentino.

"Sooner or later" he said, "Italy will probably abandon her neutrality. If our group has speedy and decisive success, Italy will probably turn toward it, and probably be modest in her claims for compensation; in the other event, an attempt will probably be made to strengthen moral blackmail by military threats against us."

The exchange of telegrams in September and October deals with the Italian expedition to Valona, which was designated by the Marquis di San Giuliano on Sept. 28 as "quite out of the question" unless Epirotic forces should take forcible possession of Valona, but which on Oct. 30 was carried out as a "provisional measure to safeguard the neutrality of Albania."

Italy's "National Aspirations."

In December Italy began to emphasize especially her "national aspirations." On Jan. 4 two reports of Prince von Bülow, the German Ambassador at Rome, were, according to instructions given to Count Berchtold by the German Ambassador at Vienna, reciting the details of the interviews Prince von Bülow had had with Sonnino and Giolitti. Both of these men, according to the reports, informed von Bülow that the view was generally held in Italy that Austria-Hungary, because of her internal conditions, could not carry on a war and was doomed to destruction, and that the Italian dynasty would be unable to maintain itself if Italy derived no territorial gains from the world war, and that, therefore, it was necessary for Italy to equip herself. Both Sonnino and Giolitti, according to von Bülow, at this time reaffirmed their friendly attitude toward the Triple Alliance.

The alleged offer of England to cover the costs of the war, territorial bait not being more definitely stated; the constant fear that they may after all be too late in the Orient; the molelike work of the Republicans and Free Masons in parallel lines with those of the entente, in which Minister Martini is more and more conspicuous; but in particular the daily shaking of the English fist, against which there is no energy in the Italian nature—this would explain the case if the weak Italian Government in the end should prove unable to make further resistance.

On April 13 Prince von Bülow had an interview with Baron Sonnino, which was reported to the Austrian Foreign Minister as follows through the Austrian Ambassador:

With respect to the Trentino, Baron Sonnino admitted that they had seized upon completely German districts, and he sought to explain this by saying that your Excellency likewise in proposal had left with the monarchy completely Italian districts. Prince von Bülow was under the impression that the Italians would consent to discuss this matter concerning a survey, as well as with respect to the Isonzo border. As concerns Trieste, he found the allegations very obscure as to what Baron Sonnino was actually striving for. To a remark that he had in mind a status not unlike that of Hamburg, Prince von Bülow replied that Germany was a federation of States, and that there was accordingly no real analogy. Besides, he recapitulated in full all the reasons why the monarchy could not give up Trieste. The sharpest discussion took place about the Dalmatian Islands. Baron Sonnino admitted to him that therein was incorporated the so-called Adriatic question. The Italian coast, he pointed out, offered from Venice to Taranto not a single usable harbor. For that reason the Italian navy was in a condition of inferiority in the Adriatic. The Marine Minister and his entire department, he said, had brought pressure to bear upon him, and the whole country was expecting him to bring about an improvement of this condition. The Minister added with the greatest cynicism that the present moment, which would not recur again, must be exploited to the full. To the question how these exorbitant demands could be made to harmonize with Sonnino's repeated statements about his desire to create a better basis for the renewal of the Triple Alliance, the Minister replied that he had tried to serve this purpose through the most complete eradication possible of Irredentism.

The chief elements which dominate the Italian Government remain the same—fear of England, fear of the revolution (particularly at court this now seems to be feared more than the war,) and on the other hand uncertainty as to the relative strength of the two groups.

On May 15 Ambassador von Macchio reported that he had learned from reliable sources that "the leading spirit, Colonial Minister Martini, who each day received his instructions from the English Ambassador," had next proposed to organize an attack, whether by means of Garibaldians or regular troops, while Baron Sonnino was deliberating over the plan of coming out with a new document, like the earlier one denouncing the Triple Alliance, eventually combining the two methods.

But since the General Staff, according to Baron von Macchio, demanded a postponement of several days, Martini, in the Council of Ministers, citing the report that Turkish officers were aiding the Libyan rebels, suggested that the treaty of Lausanne be denounced. But by this time the unity of the Cabinet had already been broken, and the adoption of Martini's plan was frustrated.

British Influence in Rome.

On May 16 the Austrian Ambassador at Rome reported the resignation of Salandra and the refusal of the King to accept it. The King, he reported, was still vacillating, unable to decide between peace and war, and was especially dubious about Italy's chances in a war. His doubts were increased because General Cadorna, vexed by the offer of Italian assistance to the Entente Allies, had offered his resignation. The King, von Macchio said, would probably leave to Parliament the decision of the question, and was said to have pledged Salandra not previously to create any fait accompli.

On May 17 Baron von Burien telegraphed the Austrian Ambassador at Rome to communicate to Baron Sonnino the form of the agreement with Italy, taking Prince von Bülow into his counsels, and if it was considered insufficient to take cognizance of Italy's further desires. On May 18 von Macchio replied that he had laid the propositions before Sonnino, but could not induce the latter to make any statement other than that he would submit them to the Council of Ministers. On May 22 the Austrian Foreign Minister sent the following telegram to his Ambassador at Rome:

To save our respective countries from a senseless war I empower your Excellency to make a last attempt with Baron Sonnino, and to ask him if he is inclined to sign the treaty according to our latest proposal if we, without, however, consenting to the immediate military occupation, would take a further step to meet Italy in the question of its carrying out.

"Too Late," Was Sonnino's Answer.

On May 23 von Macchio reminded Baron Sonnino, in the spirit of his Foreign Minister's request, of the fact that he was still without an answer to his latest proposals. The Italian Minister replied, according to von Macchio, that it was too late to consider them.

"All my attempts to continue spinning out this theme," the Austrian Ambassador reported, "met shipwreck upon the stereotyped phrase that it was too late."

The same day the Duke of Averne handed to the Austrian Minister the declaration of war.

FINED FOR PASSPORT FRAUD

English Newspaper Writer Claimed American Citizenship.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—H. W. D. Fraser, the British newspaper writer accused of having traveled through Europe on an American passport obtained at the American Embassy in London by describing himself as an American, was fined $250 in Bow Street Court today on a charge "of having in his possession an irregular or false passport."

Counsel for the prosecution said the authorities regarded the matter as serious, as it made American citizens liable to be suspected and led to questions between the American and British Foreign Offices.

The defendant said that he was born in Chicago of British parents and that while he knew he was a British subject under British law, he thought he was an American citizen by American law.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—The Fraser who was arraigned and fined in a London court on a charge of having in his possession a false passport is thought to be W. H. D. Fraser, who was once a political writer for The Chicago Tribune and later until four years ago political editor of the old Chicago Inter Ocean. He went to Europe in 1913.

BERLIN PAPERS RAP WILSON IN UNISON

SHIPS AS MERCHANTMEN

Whereas, They Were Actually Francs-Tireurs, Writer Says, Citing American Permission for Defense.

From a Staff Correspondent.

BERLIN, Aug. 10.—All of this morning's newspapers print an identical article which, while affording no clue to its real origin, gains significance from the argument made that British merchantmen are really francs-tireurs at sea, and particularly from the insinuation in the last paragraph that President Wilson did not act in good faith in framing the latest American note to Germany on the sinking of the Lusitania. The article reads:

"The main argument in the United States notes is the maintenance of the alleged fundamental and unchangeable rights of neutrals. The Government of the United States 'cannot admit that the fundamental rights of its citizens can be surrendered merely because of a change in conditions,' the Government thereby declaring that it is its intention to stand on the ground of reality; but the Government of the United States—either from obstinate contrariness or obvious partisanship—is going on the theory that it has not as yet been able to take into consideration the new form which naval warfare has taken and which, therefore, is to be considered as not applying.

"Germany acknowledges in greatest measure in its naval war the same fundamental principles of justice and humanity as the United States, but the latter wrongly applies these fundamental principles to totally new conditions and seeks to make the German Government commit itself to abide by the same conclusions resulting from those principles for the new forms of trade war as the United States has drawn. In particular the remarks about trade war and the use of the word 'merchant ship' in the note must cause strong resentment.

Permitted to Arm for Defense.

"The United States itself, at the beginning of the war, had a feeling that the line between the merchant ship and the warship was not to be sharply drawn in view of England's favorite mode of warfare. This realization found clear expression in the State Department's order of Sept. 20, laying down the rule that merchantmen of belligerent countries could leave American ports if armed with guns and supplied with ammunition exclusively for self-defense. (The conditions for proof that the armament was not to serve for offense, but purely for defense, were, to be sure, very vaguely set forth in the order.)

"In the same sense was the declaration of Lord Cecil in the House of Commons, that the same principle, the armament of merchantmen for self-defense, was universally accepted. While, therefore, the notion of armed merchantmen was thoroughly familiar to the United States, which itself in a certain way helped to bring it about through provoking the disappearance of the difference between merchantmen and warships, the new note speaks only of merchantmen, as if in the submarine warfare, after the English modes of procedure, there were any longer any difference to be drawn between merchantmen and warships.

"In hostile England itself—if not by the neutral Government of the United States—recognition of the resultant confusion of merchantmen and warships seems already to have penetrated, as is shown by the following statement by the naval critic of The Daily Chronicle of July 6:

"'It is the unpalatable truth that the difference between merchantmen and warships is passing. When Mr. Churchill set up cannon on the sterns of certain ships he took one step in that direction, but the German submarines that torpedoed ships like the Lusitania and the Armenian bring it to a conclusion. Possibly the fact will have to be recognized that freight or passenger ships are to be regarded as warships and are to be sunk accordingly, for submarines cannot capture them.'

"These lines hit the nail on the head in criticising the thought-provoking English measures, and in this connection special interest attaches to the admission that England began with a confusion of warship and merchantman by 'discovering 'armed' merchantmen and the recognition of this as a bitter truth. There only remained to add that the instructions given to English steamers to use their bows as rams and weapons of attack against submarines took from them the last vestige of right to be treated as merchantmen in the sense of international law, even if they are not armed.

"England herself metamorphosed her merchant marine, not into warships, as The Daily Chronicle teaches, but into francs-tireurs at sea. One will not be far wrong in assuming that these well-known facts were absolutely ignored in the last American note, not from ignorance, but with deliberate intent, and that the note only speaks of merchantmen, because otherwise it would have been compelled to admit that for the idea of armed merchantmen there are as yet no recognized principles in international law."

No New Point, Says Washington.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—The statement appearing simultaneously in the Berlin papers this morning in defense of the submarine warfare is not regarded here as bringing any new point into the situation. The point that the arming of British merchantmen had brought about the "disappearance of the difference between merchantmen and warships" has been discussed and disposed of in the American notes on the sinking of the Lusitania, and the quoted phrase itself is taken almost textually from the German note of July 8, which said that "all distinctions between merchantmen and war vessels have been obliterated by the order to British merchantmen to arm themselves and to ram submarines."

The tendency here tonight is to attach more political than international importance to the statement, which seems to have been furnished to the papers from an official source. One construction put upon the publication is that the German Government may not purpose answering the last American note, and that the statement may be intended to show the German people that the submarine policy is unchanged. The statement, however, will hardly destroy the hope entertained here that Germany will ameliorate her submarine warfare, even if she finds herself unable to inform the United States of any change in policy.

From a high official source tonight, in response to a request for a statement on the Berlin publication, came the reply that Germany had not proved that any British ships were armed. Furthermore, it was said, merchant ships in the old days were always armed, and therefore no new point had been raised. Finally, the whole subject had been discussed in the formal correspondence with Germany.

eleven children, while in the record of senseless assassinatin no one single combatant had been killed, and not one single place or a military character had been so much as damaged.

"That is the truth about the German aircraft raids in a nutshell. The whole foul business is of a kind to sicken the very soul of any man with the faintest spark of military honor in him. It is born of mere bloodlust, a cannibal appetite for simple slaughter, with added delight in the helplessness of the victims, which is perhaps the most repulsive of all the symptoms of moral degeneracy."

A Rotterdam despatch to The Daily Telegraph says:

"Yesterday and today there has been great aerial activity over the North Sea. Dutch trawlers returning to home ports today (Tuesday) report several Zeppelins going westerly from Heligoland, apparently covering movements of warships."

PARIS, Aug. 10.—A dispatch to the Havas Agency from Dunkirk says:

"The Zeppelin was first attacked by a British aviator, who, according to information reaching here, succeeded in seriously damaging the dirigible, and its destruction was completed by French aviators from Dunkirk."

DANCED, THEN FLEW TO DEATH

Lieut. Lord Was With His Fiancee Half an Hour Before He Was Killed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—In its report of the Zeppelin raid on the eastern coast The Daily Express says:

"The death of Flight Sub-Lieutenant Reginald Lord was doubly tragic, for within half and hour of the time he died he was dancing with the girl whom he was to have married, Miss Violet Beevor, daughter of Lieut Col. Beevor, C. M. G., of the Scots Guards, who is now at the front.

"Miss Beevor recently went to stay with friends, and on Monday night she and Lieutenant Lord took part in a dance at a hotel. While the dance was in progress the alarm of a Zeppelin raid was given, and Lord hurried off to the aerodrome. The dance was stopped and the guests waited for the outcome of the raid.

"Half an hour later Lord was killed. It is understood that in coming to the ground in pitch darkness after the flight his machine turned a double somersault and crashed to the earth.

"Lord suffered a fracture of the base of the skull and other injuries. He was taken to a hospital and Miss Beevor was sent for, but although she reached the hospital in a few minutes Lord had lost consciousness when she arrived. She stayed by his bedside until he died."

ALLIES' AIR RAID KILLS EIGHT IN BAVARIA

More Than Half a Dozen Aeroplanes Used, Says German Official Report.

BERLIN, Aug. 10, (via London).—An official communication issued here today tells of an allied air raid yesterday over weibrucken and Sankt Ingbert, Bavaria. Eight persons were killed and two wounded in the latter town. The communication is as follows:

"Monday forenoon from six to eight enemy aeroplanes attacked Zweibrücken and Sankt Ingbert, which are outside the military district.

"From fifteen to twenty bombs were dropped on Zweibrücken, causing only unimportant material damage. At Sankt Ingbert eight persons were killed and two wounded."

TOLD TO KEEP ROOMS DARK.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Visitors are requested to have curtains of their rooms drawn immediately any electric light is switched on, so as to prevent a glare of light being visible from the street or Embankment.

The police notice, dated Oct. 3, 1914, is as follows:

Almost every letter from Americans familiar with London before the war began who have recently returned there tells of the strangely changed aspect of the city at night owing to the precautions ordered by the authorities in view of the possibility of raids by Zeppelins and aeroplanes. The minimum number of lights are displayed everywhere, and many travelers remark that the town in these days looks much as it must have done before the days of gas and electricity.

GERMAN AIRCRAFT BETTER.

Improved Engines Enable Aviators to Defy the Allies' Shells.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—A dispatch to The London Morning Post, dated "British Headquarters," says:

"Beyond question the most significant happening of the past month has been in the air: one might almost call it the reappearance of the German airmen. During the latter months of the Winter and the early Spring months, there was a notable deficiency of the enemy's airmen, till the appearance of a Taube became quite an event at any considerable distance from its own guns. In these months we were given to understand by the ineradicable German inclination to boast about the future, that experiments were being made with new types of engine and machine which were to result in the production of something superior to any craft that had ever taken the air.

"In the past month we have had occasional opportunities for comparing the forecast with the fulfillment; and it must be admitted that the enemy has good cause to be proud of the advance he has made. Even from the ground one has been greatly impressed by the speed and climb of the German machines which have penetrated lately some distance inside our firing line. It has been instructive to watch the daring with which our shells were dodged—proof of the pilot's faith in the engine he was handling and the ease with which, when he had enough of it, he turned his nose toward the upper air and left a white trail of shells bursting helplessly behind him."

SOME INDUSTRIES FLOURISH

Machine and Iron and Steel Works Very Busy—Plenty of Ore—Textile Manufacturers Suffer.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11. — A citizen of a neutral State who lately visited Germany, in a further communication to The Daily Chronicle deals with the position of industry in that country. He says:

"It would be quite wrong to imagine that after the blockade of German ports all manufactories were stopped. Practically the whole of the machine industry, iron foundries, and steel works are fully employed and doing splendid business. They do not suffer from any lack of raw material, as the whole of the ore reserves of Sweden are at their disposal. In addition to this they can tap their own ores in the Diedenhofen and Saar districts and the ores of Luxemburg and Longwy in France.

"So far as coal is concerned, mines which used to compete successfully in the markets of Scandinavia, Italy, France, Egypt, Denmark, and Russia with English coal have suffered heavily. After the war broke out nearly all these mines came to a standstill, chiefly owing to the shortage of labor, but there has been a gradual revival, and the output now is about half normal.

"The textile industries of the empire until July managed to keep up to something like their normal level. There has been a decrease in exportation, but the home demand for textiles has been very good, owing to the total cessation of imports of foreign descriptions. But since Aug. 1 the manufacture of all goods from cotton yarn has been prohibited, in view of the possible declaration of cotton as contraband of war.

"Since Aug. 1 only orders for the army are allowed to be executed, but this will not give employment to one-tenth of the great body of textile operatives, and the greater part of the factories have been brought to a standstill. This has created a considerable amount of unemployment.

"The manufacture of ready-made clothing, which in normal times plays a large part in German industry, has been stopped for some time past owing want of raw wool from Australia and New Zealand. The woolen mills are at present restricted to supplying the army. Clothing is dear, but would be still dearer were it not for the fact that there are several millions of men in uniform who do not require civilian clothing at present.

"One industry which has suffered acutely is the manufacture of toys. In and around Nuremberg and in Thuringia millions of pounds' worth of these toys used to be exported to other countries, but this export trade has now almost entirely ceased, and a number of factories have been closed.

"The great fur market at Leipsic, second only in importance to that of London, has come to a complete stop.

"It must, however, be well understood that German exporters are only now beginning to feel the pinch of the blockade. It was declared effective early in March, but under the pressure of American influence the English Government allowed more than two months' grace, so that the complete stoppage of German exports only dates as far back as May 15 or even June 1.

"Now, however, the number of bankruptcies is advancing considerably, and great uneasiness is spreading in industrial circles, the more so because those of America bringing pressure to bear upon the English Government to relax the blockade have entirely vanished."

REPLY ON THE FRYE ACCEPTS PAYMENT

Commissioners to Fix Amount, Averting Arbitration—Deadlock on Prussian-American Treaty.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—The American reply to the last German note regarding the sinking of the American ship William P. Frye was cabled to Berlin tonight and probably will be given out for publication Saturday.

While the original position of the State Department, that the Prussian-American treaty of 1828 was violated by the destruction of the vessel, is reaffirmed, it is understood that the United States now agrees to accept payment for the Frye under the conditions suggested in the last German note, obviating an appeal to arbitration at The Hague. Germany stipulates that payment shall not involve admission of a treaty violation; the American note is said to stipulate that no treaty rights are waived by acceptance. The amount to be paid will be fixed by two Commissioners, one appointed by each government.

The German position, as outlined in the last note, is that payment of indemnity for ships destroyed is all that the treaty contemplates. The United States contends that any American ship, even if laden with contraband, is protected from destruction by Article 13 of the treaty, although it is not claimed that a contraband cargo would be so protected.

Germany has held that, since the sinking of ships is not specifically prohibited in the treaty, principles of international law must govern each case, the treaty being satisfied by payment. The New American note is understood to reject this view.

A German Prize Court in July held the Berlin Government liable under treaty for payment for the Frye. The amount was not fixed, as the United States had entered no specific claim for damages.

McADOO TO PUBLISH THEM.

Will Also Sue War Refugees Who Haven't Repaid Advances.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10. — Secretary McAdoo has decided to adopt drastic methods to compel repayment from Americans who received advances last Fall from the Government to enable them to get home from Europe after the outbreak of the war, with the consequent suspension of payment of letters of credit and interruption of ocean passenger schedules. It was announced at the Treasury Department today that on Oct. 1 he would make public the names of those who had failed up to that time to pay back what was advanced to them or paid out by Government officials on their account.

The resolution of Congress appropriated $2,500,000 for the relief of Americans caught in Europe by the war provided that all who were financially able to reimburse the Government should do so. After the list of delinquents is made public Secretary McAdoo will ask the Department of Justice to begin suits against all of them able to make repayment.

The list of those who have not responded to the invitation to return the funds loaned to them embraces several hundred out of the 12,000 who were helped to get home. The list cannot be completed until all the accounts connected with the relief fund have been audited. Secretary McAdoo is indulging in the hope that the present announcement will induce many to take their names out of the delinquent list.

SON FIGHTING FOR FRANCE.

Chapmans Return After Visit to Him —Davenport's Work for Poor.

John Jay Chapman, a lawyer, of 60 Wall Street, returned yesterday from France on the steamship Rochambeau after visiting his son, Victor, who is with the Foreign Legion in the Vosges learning aviation, after 102 days in the trenches.

"I am proud to have my son fighting with the French Army, and I consider it is the duty of American young men to give their services to France or her Allies," Mr. Chapman said. "Their fight is our fight. If it were not for the British fleet the Germans would have been firing shells into Long Island long ago."

Next to the British, Americans are hated most bitterly by the Germans, he said, and if by any chance the Allies should be defeated he believes the United States would be the next antagonist Germany would take on.

Mrs. Chapman, who accompanied her husband, said she was as proud of their son, Victor, as Mr. Chapman was.

Brewster Davenport of Boston, who also returned on the Rochambeau, has been serving in the American Ambulance Corps at Neuilly, near Paris. He came back to start a fund for the poor in France, who will soon need help, he said. The French Government has given the house 12 Rue Taitbout as headquarters of the mission, and the object is to organize a motor-supply service all over France for the coming Winter. Mrs. Valse of Paris and Mrs. P. Bronson of Middlebury, Conn., are among the women engaged in the movement in Paris.

Mr. Davenport is returning shortly and will take his own automobile with him to Italy on the same errand, he said. During his service with the ambulance corps he had several narrow escapes from being killed. At Pont à Mousson a shell killed a soldier standing by his car; another shell passed through a room in which he was dining, wrecking it completely. A French officer at a certain point informed him that not a shell had struck that place for eight months. Ten minutes later a shell exploded, killing the officer and twelve of his men, with several horses.

DAYS OF SUFFERING FOR MEXICO CITY

Capital Changed Hands Three Times in a Day, While Civilians Alone Fell in Fighting.

AMERICANS APPEAL AGAIN

MEXICO CITY, July 31, (Via Vera Cruz, Aug. 8 and Laredo, Tex., Aug. 10)—During the last twenty-four hours this capital has seen three changes of government. Such a kaleidoscopic shifting of the political status has alarmed even this city, accustomed as it has become to rapid changes of political leadership.

Shortly after the noon hour yesterday the inhabitants were startled by the precipitate evacuation of the Zapata army before an invisible enemy. Two hours later the Villa contingent of the former army of occupation rallied and street fighting ensued with the invading Carranza forces.

At 5 o'clock the firing, which had been a continual rattle for the two previous hours, ceased and in its place was heard the clanging of bells. Offices and stores which had been in the line of fire were opened and the occupants emerged to learn that the city had been captured by Captain Manuel Sanchez and twenty men of Carranza's army. It is estimated that 2,500 Zapata soldiers fled before this force, believing it to be much larger.

Captain Sanchez installed himself in the National Palace, the Red Cross ambulance and cars gathered up the dead and wounded, numbering 11, all of whom were civilians, the fighting having taken place in the main streets of the business section.

The city had settled down to the first breathing spell of the day when the Zapata troops, learning that they had been routed by a force of 20 men, returned. Sanchez with his Carranza forces thereupon evacuated the Palace which was taken possession of by General Castillo, who occupied it during the night.

Castillo, when morning broke, left the Palace because of a rumored approach of hostile forces and General Aldama, claiming to be a Villa follower, occupied the government offices. Towards noon heavy firing on several streets leading to the National and Municipal Palaces announced a second change of Carranza men. This firing lasted all the forenoon and well into the afternoon and when it ceased the inhabitants were in doubt as to whether the forces of Villa, Zapata or Carranza held the capital of the republic.

Again Red Cross ambulances made their rounds and gathered up their toll of dead and wounded civilians. The soldiers of all factions escaped.

The American Red Cross Headquarters, which is situated on the edge of the residential district, has been surrounded by crowds of miserably hungry people piteously begging food which the Red Cross has been unable to give because military necessities render it impossible to have the many governments supply transportation for corn long since purchased, but detained by soldiers out fifty miles from the starving capital.

People Dying of Starvation.

Eight deaths by starvation, all children, were reported by the police station of the Second Ward today. The General Hospital also reported deaths by starvation, though the number was not made public.

A police court record in the Second Ward was brought to the attention of the American Red Cross representatives today as illustrative of the extreme misery prevailing among the lower classes because of the want of food.

A woman was brought into court charged with stealing a dog. The Magistrate listened to the story of the complainant and then to the defendant whose plea was that the animal was stolen for the purpose of killing it and feeding it to her children. The Judge dismissed the woman accused of stealing the dog.

Despite the distressing conditions the Red Cross representatives and the foreign relief societies have been able to do very little because the military authorities refuse to allow food to enter the city.

Red Cross officials now have a supply of beef and beans sufficient for 750,000 liters of soup. Already applications have come from 60,000 persons and the present supply will last no longer than a fortnight.

Cases of death by starvation are being daily reported to the Red Cross Headquarters. A number of deaths have been reported from an orphan home here, and patients in other State institutions are said to be slowly dying because of malnutrition.

Last Appeal of Americans.

MEXICO CITY, July 29, (by Courier to Vera Cruz, to Laredo, Tex., Aug. 10.)—An appeal for help for Americans in Mexico and for the relief of the people of the country itself was sent by the American Society of Mexico to the State Department in Washington through the Brazilian Minister today. It recites conditions in the Mexican capital, which are described as unendurable, and which are declared to have driven Americans here almost to desperation, and implores the Washington Government to act promptly in bringing about amelioration.

"The American residents of Mexico appeal once more to their Government and people in behalf of the suffering millions of pacific men, women and children in this country who are victims of hunger and cruelty and violence," the appeal begins. "These conditions put the gravest and most pressing responsibility upon the United States, which not only has passively permitted them, but has promoted them with arms and ammunition and by encouragement to political adventurers who have prostituted the name of liberty and the cause of human rights.

"Americans and other foreigners," the appeal continues, "stand aghast and wonder whether they can be living in the twentieth century and in a country bordering on the United States, which has made itself responsible to the world for protection of life and property here and yet does nothing more than send repeated warnings that are derided by half-savage men, drunk with ill-gotten power and the spirit of graft and hate.

"For many months the Americans here, driven almost to desperation, have tried to bring their case to a realization of the awful situation and begged that the American people be informed. Their request, long denied, was finally conceded in part by the President in his own statement of June 2 reciting briefly the conditions in Mexico.

"These conditions, then hardly endurable, are much worse now, and the apparent inactivity of the Government at Washington fills Mexico with despair. There is not even a semblance of government here at the capital and we are living on a smoldering volcano. The entire City Council has been imprisoned without cause. We have seen three changes of armed government in thirty days. There is no communication with the world, except by special messengers."

Conditions which caused the appeal to be sent are detailed in the communication, numerous instances of outrages on Americans and others being cited.

"The efforts of some Americans who are mentioned as trying to convince the world that Mexico is not hungry and Red Cross work not needed is deplored. The number of deaths from lack of food, said to be from ten to twelve daily here, is declared to be increasing. The efforts of Special Commissioner O'Connor to help ameliorate the distress by getting food in are dwelt upon, but it is declared that after having been here one month "he has not yet succeeded in bringing a pound of food into the capital or to receive even a message from Washington regarding the work." Futile efforts of the International Relief Committee to get an empty train out of the city and back again with food also are described.

Mention is made of the seizure by the authorities of The Mexican Herald, the only English periodical left in the city. "The confiscators took possession of The Herald plant and issued their own official organ therein, the appeal continues. With Mexican money almost worthless and food supplies virtually exhausted, "the suffering can be imagined," it adds. The appeal concludes:

"The few reports coming from outside the capital nearly all show the same conditions of distress. If something is not done by the United States or other foreign governments to open communications, supply food and stop the killing of men, outraging of women and destruction of property, there will be still more complications for the world to settle in Mexico. The breaking point has been reached where foreigners who have long counseled self-restraint are getting desperate because of what they see around them and what they suffer themselves."

Carranza Attacks Red Cross.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10. — A cable from the Carranza Minister of Foreign Relations to the agency here replies to the appeal of American residents in Mexico City as follows:

"Regarding the statement of the American Society made at Mexico City on July 28, and the statement of the International Committee in Mexico City, dated July 13, only a few points are worthy of attention. Instead of the anarchy reigning in the city as described in those two statements order has been restored, the civil courts and the civil government are in operation, communication with the outside world has been restored, and life and property are safeguarded.

"The Constitutionalist troops entered on the 20th ult., and immediately established order. They took necessary food with them.

"Charles J. O'Connor, representative of the Red Cross, had then been in the city a month, but had never made any effort to take food there. Already applications have come from 60,000 persons and the present supply will last no longer than a fortnight.

CODE CHANGE AIDS STREET MUSICIANS

GERMAN BANDS THE GAINERS

The recent activity of "German bands" in New York and the amendment to the city ordinances adopted by the Board of Aldermen on March 23 and approved by Mayor Mitchel on March 30, giving increased privileges to such bands, are matters for speculation, according to George H. Bell, Commissioner of Licenses. He pointed out yesterday that licenses had been issued to fifty-eight "itinerant musicians" for the Borough of Manhattan since June 3, and that 177 such licenses had been issued in the five boroughs.

The Commissioner said he was not sure there was any organized effort among Germans to arouse a pro-German sentiment by having these itinerant musicians play such airs as the "Watch on the Rhine," but he pointed out that the licenses granted since June 3 went in groups as follows:

Eight licenses to individuals residing at 178 Third Street, five at 174 Third Street, five at 129 Third Street, eight at 426 Sixth Street, six at 510 Sixth Street, six at 412 Fifth Street, and five at 507 Fifth Street, and so on.

The Commissioner pointed out also that Alderman Pendry of Brooklyn, who was Chairman of the Aldermanic Code Revision Committee, and Assistant Corporation Counsel McNulty, on whom fell the burden of the revision work, consulted him on every other phase of the new code which concerned licenses, but never called to his attention the change affecting "itinerant musicians."

The Commissioner then explained that in the old City of Brooklyn there was a code provision giving these bands the practical freedom of the city and that the ordinance remained in force for that borough after it became part of the greater city, but that no such freedom of operation was extended to Manhattan and the other boroughs. The revised code gives the broad privilege to "itinerant musicians" in all the boroughs by removing the word "Brooklyn" from the code clause.

Heretofore in Manhattan and several other boroughs the "German bands" have been confined to playing in areaways at stated hours. The Commissioner said yesterday that the new code does not restrict their operations to any hour of the day or night nor to any part of the city, nor to any particular day.

The Commissioner also pointed out that the ordinance regulating street organs confined their performances to places 250 feet away "from any dwelling" and 500 feet away from any place of worship or school building," but that these restrictions do not apply to the "itinerant musician." Organ musicians must not play before 9 A. M. or later than 6 P. M., but this does not apply to the "German bands."

Further, the Commissioner said, the new ordinance directed that he "shall" issue a license to each such person applying if he makes out an affidavit that he has been a resident of the borough for one year past, and has two others to verify the statement. Commissioner Bell says he has no such discretion in issuing these band licenses as the code allows him in almost every other instance.

The Commissioner said that the first he knew of the "joker" in the code was when he observed "a German band in full blast" about fifty feet from Fifth Avenue and Ninety-first Street, near the home of Andrew Carnegie, and then again, the same evening, another band playing at Broadway and 141st Street. He stopped and inquired of a policeman, he said, concerning the activity of the bands, and was informed by the patrolman that the new code gave the "itinerants the freedom of the city." They can play at any hour, and on Sundays, the policeman told the Commissioner.

The Commissioner said, too, that he had made a department rule requiring street organists to have certificates showing that their instruments had been tuned by some responsible organ building concern at certain times of the year. "But," the Commisioner added, "I don't know of any way to be even reasonably certain that a German band is tuned up."

He also said that he had noticed that the "Watch on the Rhine" and other German tunes made up the programs of the "Itinerants."

Assistant Corporation Counsel McNulty, it was said at the Corporation Counsel's office, is on vacation. Alderman Pendry was about the City Hall yesterday.

RULES ON MARCONI ANSWER.

In Tesla Suit Judge Strikes Out Paragraph as Impertinent.

Judge Augustus N. Hand, in an opinion filed yesterday in the United States District Court, ordered struck out as impertinent the eleventh paragraph of the answer of the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of America made to the annulment and patent infringement suit brought by the Nikola Tesla Company. The paragraph objected to stated that certain claims of the Marconi patents were sustained by Judge Van Vechten Veeder in the Brooklyn Court in the infringement suit brought against the National Electric Signaling Company, and that the same Court decided that the Tesla patents did not anticipate and were not for the same inventions as the Marconi patents. In his ruling, Judge Hand said:

"I can see no principle under which that decision rendered between wholly different parties is binding here or relevant except as a mere legal precedent. It can only be presented as argument in relation to the legal issues involved, but not as a fact to be pleaded or proved. The motion to strike out the eleventh paragraph of the answer as impertinent is, therefore, granted."

Judge Hand refused to strike out paragraphs thirteen and fourteen, which alleged that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the complainant is not entitled to any answer or to have the Marconi patents declared void.

CITY MEN DRIVE AT ARMY WORK

A REGIMENT UNDER CANVAS

Organized Under Regular Army Direction, Put in Uniform, and Drills Started.

MAYOR IN THE FRONT RANK

At Head of His Company with Other Tall Rookies—General Wood Pleased with Recruits.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Aug. 10.—On the western shore of Lake Champlain, south of Plattsburg barracks, more than 1,000 representative American citizens, each wearing the uniform of a private soldier of the army of the United States, are under canvas tonight. They are the men who have voluntarily given a month of their time to the Government. In this period picked officers of the regular army will do their best to train these bankers, lawyers, brokers, city officials, diplomats, artists, newspaper men, doctors, and merchants, and make them fit and efficient for service as officers of volunteers in the event of a national crisis.

The tented city bears the name of no great statesman or soldier. A big sign over the entrance to the Federal reservation on which the hundreds of big conical-shaped tents are pitched reads, "U. S. Military Instruction Camp."

From all parts of the Union these men have come. Some are from States which touch Canada; others hail from the Far West. There are some from New Orleans and Texas, and other Southern States, and scores from the central part of the country. From Boston alone came more than 300. From Philadelphia came 100. Chicago sent a fine delegation, and so did Pittsburgh.

The New Yorkers got here first, John Purroy Mitchel and H. H. Curran, majority leader of the Board of Aldermen, forming the vanguard. They got in yesterday, and bright and early this morning the bugles called them from their tents in time to aid in detraining the hundreds of new rookies who descended upon the camp a little after daylight. The first of the New York special trains arrived on the Lake Champlain side of the camp at 5:45 o'clock, and twenty minutes later the second section rolled in.

Perhaps half of the New Yorkers were in khaki when they landed at the camp. The others still wore their business clothing. None of them brought golf sticks, hat boxes or evening clothes. They had come for business and meant to do their very best to merit the approval of the hard-working regulars who were to be their instructors.

Arrival of New Yorkers.

The main line track of the Delaware & Hudson Railroad skirts the eastern boundary of the camp and the special trains stopped less than twenty yards from the Federal reservation. It was a happy-faced bunch of men who jumped from those two long lines of sleeping cars. There was Crawford Blagden, the famous Harvard guard of years gone by. He was one of the first to cross the border line of the camp, and right behind came Nelson O'Shaughnessy, last American Charge d'Affaires in Mexico City, who recently gave up another diplomatic post in Vienna. He has seen so much war in the last few years that he decided it was about time for him to learn something about soldiering.

Then there was ex-Police Commissioner Rhinelander Waldo, who, because he is an ex-Captain in the United States service, has been appointed adjutant of the First Battalion of the "First Regiment of the United States Bankers, Lawyers, and Diplomats." Right behind Waldo, his hair bristling as it did when he was trying to defeat Charles E. Hughes for the Governorship of New York, came ex-Lieutenant Governor Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler.

Mayor Mitchel, Alderman Curran, Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., Captains G. C. Shaw, C. A. Sloane, Gordon Johnston, J. R. Kelly, G. H. White, James Regan, and W. L. Reed; Lieutenant D. H. Scott, a son of the chief of the General Staff of the army, and Lieutenant G. H. Bull of the regulars greeted the recruits as they passed from State to Federal territory. Governor Whitman was less than half a mile away at the time, but he did not witness the detraining.

Everything was ready when the first batch of recruits arrived. All tents had been pitched, and the company streets were as clean as Fifth Avenue after a heavy rain. In the big kitchen tents picked army cooks were busy preparing breakfast, the officers of the medical corps were in their quarters ready to begin the physical examinations, a score of cavalrymen from Fort Ethan Allen stood ready to hand out rifles, bayonets, and ammunition belts, other regulars were busy unpacking and assorting the field kits that the business men were to use, while Captain Gordon Johnston, the adjutant, had everything in readiness for registration.

Never were arrangements for a camp of such magnitude more perfect. For a week Captain Halstead Dorey of Governors Island, the camp commander, had been here, arranging for the reception of his command. Even the Mayor of Plattsburg was on hand to do his part in welcoming the civilian host. When somebody told General Leonard Wood, who came up to inspect the camp and to watch the detraining of the men, that one of the hotels had jumped its prices because of the influx of visitors, General Wood told the Mayor that unless the hotel owners jumped right down again he would provide 100 tents to accommodate civilian visitors expected during the five weeks of the camp. The Mayor promptly said he would look into the matter.

First Call for Breakfast.

Thirty minutes after the arrival of the second New York special train the first official bugle call was sounded. Never did bugle sound a more welcome call. The call was breakfast, and the breakfast was a real old-time well-cooked army meal. Mayor Mitchel said he never ate better food, and his comrades echoed a sincere amen to the tribute to the skill of the khaki-clad cooks from Plattsburg barracks. Every man had grapefruit, eggs, potatoes, army bread baked by army bakers, and coffee. There was plenty of everything for everybody.

By 7 o'clock breakfast was ended and then the well-oiled machine that General Wood and his assistants had created began to work. The procedure was the same for each man. First of all came the call at the tent of the treasurer, where the recruit made his deposit of $30 to cover the expenses for the month in camp. The treasurer handed him a receipt and he then crossed the headquarters street to another big tent where Captain Johnston, the adjutant, extended a rapid fire but hearty greeting and then took his pedigree, after which Captain Johnston assigned the recruit to a company and ordered him to report forthwith to the commander of that company.

The Captain of each company awaited his recruits at the head of the company street facing south. A salute and then the recruit handed the Captain his credentials. The Captain wrote a number on a piece of paper and along came a quick-stepping regular soldier who directed the recruit to his tent, which assignment was temporary. From his tent the recruit next repaired to ordnance headquarters and took his place in a rapidly moving line.

As he reached the head of the line a soldier handed him a new Springfield rifle, the latest Army model. The next soldier handed him a brand new bayonet, the next a cover for the bayonet, the next a cartridge belt, the next a knapsack, the next a canteen, the next the field eating outfit, and so on down the line, the recruit starting empty-handed and finishing with arms piled high with equipment that every soldier in modern armies must carry. Once the line got to moving, the regulars equipped the recruits at the rate of one a minute. Just a little more than four hours was needed to register, assign to company, equip and arm the thousand and odd men who landed at the camp this morning.

Captain Dorey, the commander of the camp, the first of the sort ever held in this country, spent the early hours in looking over the recruits, issuing instructions, and seeing to it that everything proceeded as planned. He admitted that he was proud of his new command and said that he never had seen a finer looking, better set up or more earnest body of men in his army career.

General Wood, who made a casual inspection of the camp, echoed the words of Captain Dorey and added that nothing would be left undone to give the men the absolute maximum of training. Right here it is not out of place to refer to a man who came with the New England contingent. He is Andrew Pickering, of Boston, and he is well on the way to the allotted age of three score years and ten. Captain Dorey and Captain Johnston did not feel that they would be justified in accepting him as a recruit. The age limit had been set at forty-five years and Mr. Pickering admitted that he long since had passed that milestone in his life.

"I am strong as most of these younger fellows," he said, "and I want to do my bit. There are all sorts of things that I could do if we had trouble, and why not permit me to get the training that would make it possible for me to do my duty more efficiently?"

General Wood was consulted and gave his consent for the enlistment of Mr. Pickering. This does not mean that others who have passed the prescribed age will be enlisted, and it is safe to say that any man past 45 who journeys to Plattsburg for the purpose of joining the camp would be doomed to disappointment.

By dinner time, which was and will continue to be noon, sharp, the regiment had been organized, and the men had their permanent tents. All were in uniform and had their arms.

The dinner call sounded at 11:55 o'clock, and five minutes later two long lines of hungry men of an average of thirty-five years, filed into the long dining sheds. The meal was the regulation fare served to the enlisted men of the army. The chief dish was the famous "Thirtieth Infantry goulash," the chief ingredients of which are bacon, beans, onions, and tomatoes.

"My but that stuff is good," said Collector Dudley Field Malone, the Collector of the Port, who for the next five weeks will be "Private Malone, Co. G."

"Yes, it goes well with me," replied Professor Alfred R. Allen of the Faculty of the University of Pennsylvania as he handed his blue metal dish for a second helping.

There never was a happier dinner party than the civilian volunteers had this noon. Coffee and Government inspected cake, the latter in tin foil, brought the dinner to an end and then the real work started.

The assembly call was sounded immediately after dinner and the various companies formed for the first time in the company streets; each company was under command of a regular army officer with another officer of the Regular establishment as second in command.

Captain J. R. Kelly commands Company A, with Second Lieutenant C. H. Corlett as his chief assistant. The officers of Company B are Captain G. H. White and First Lieutenant D. H. Scott. Company C is commanded by First Lieutenant S. J. Sutherland, with Second Lieutenant J. G. Ord next in authority. Captain W. L. Reed and Lieutenant T. J. Johnston have Company D. Lieutenant R. M. Parker and Second Lieutenant C. M. Milliken are the regular officers of Company E. Captains James Regan and Lieutenant F. S. Clark are senior and junior commanders of Company F. Lieutenant H. T. Bull and Second Lieutenant R. G. Whitten are the officers of Company G. Lieutenant A. D. Chaffin commands Company H and Second Lieutenant C. A. Baehr commands Company D.

These officers at 1 o'clock this afternoon for the first time stood at the heads of their companies. The men were lined up without regard to height, age, or previous military training. They were for the most part "greenhorns," but each and every one was willing to do his best to learn all there was to learn. The expressions on their faces showed that.

First Attempts at Drill.

"Move up to the first four," the Captain would say, as he touched the arm of a six-footer, and the big fellow would march to the head of the line.

"Now you take your place about midday down the line," the Captain would say to a chap of medium height, and so on until the proper alignment had been made.

Mayor Mitchel, who is a private in Company A, because of his height was assigned to the first four of that company. Professor Allen, E. A. Harrison of Baltimore, and Henry F. Loomis of Reading, Penn., were the other three in Company A's first rank. These four, with William E. Meloney, who is also slender and tall, share the same tent, for after the men had been "sorted out" they were assigned to tents according to height, the tall chaps going with their kind.

This is a way they have in the regular army, and this camp is run strictly on regular army principles. The assorting and assigning completed, the men were divided into squads and the drilling of the "awkward squads" began. They were taught how to stand at attention, how to keep step properly, and how to execute the "about face."

A man who had had a little previous military training was No. 1 in each of the "fours." For instance, Richard H. Little of Chicago, the tallest man in camp, who once was a private in a Chicago suburban military company, was made Acting Corporal of the first four of Company B. Unless Corporal Little makes good he will be supplanted by another tall member of Company B. The next tallest man in camp is also of Company B, and he tents with Little. He is Philip Roosevelt, a son of W. Emlen Roosevelt of New York.

Rapid Progress in Rudiments.

It was remarkable how quickly the recruits learned the rudiments of soldiering. General Wood said he had never seen anything like it.

"In a couple of weeks," he said, "these men will be able to provide a review that would do credit to any regiment of trained soldiers in the world."

At the end of an hour the men had done so well that they were told to bring out their rifles for their first instruction in the manual of arms. The instructing officers carefully explained each command, and with the rifle showed exactly how it should be executed.

"Hold your elbow close to your side," the instructor would say, "when you execute the command right shoulder arms," and then would come the command. At first some of the rookies landed the gun on the left shoulder.

That's all right. There never was a soldier who did not make the same mistakes when he started," the commanding officers would say, and then they would explain it all over again.

"It's just like learning to tango," said Phil Roosevelt. "It comes to you all of a sudden," and with that he showed Little how to execute "order arms" as a seasoned regular would execute it. For more than three hours with hardly a pause the drilling lasted, and bystanders watching the men could follow their progress as they mastered one command after another.

"For several days," Captain Dorey said later, "the men will be drilled in the school of the soldier, and early next week they will be ready for the first of the problems, which will involve advance and rear guard work and scouting. The work will progress from platoon to battalion formation. We shall also start target work next week. The men will work on the range by companies. When one company is shooting, the others will be drilling near by. No time will be lost, and the instruction will continue morning and afternoon until the regiment is ready for the problems that will mark the final work of the camp."

In the big problems the men will work with a full brigade of regular troops ordered to Plattsburg for that purpose. This brigade will include the Third and Thirteenth Infantry, the Second Cavalry and several batteries of field artillery, in addition to a company of engineers and a detachment of signal men. Machine guns also will be employed.

Governor Whitman was in Plattsburg this morning and reviewed the Thirteenth Infantry on the parade grounds of Plattsburg barracks. A troop of the Second Cavalry, under Captain King, also paraded. The Governor received a salute of seventeen guns when he arrived on the reservation. The big camp was quiet at 9 o'clock tonight. Practically all of the men were asleep, tired out by the afternoon's work. Tomorrow at 5:45 A. M., the bugle will call them to duty again.

DOUGLAS STAYS IN JAIL.

Marie Booth Douglas, the actress, a niece of Edwin Booth, the great tragedian, yesterday appeared before Justice Weeks in the Supreme Court and objected to the vacating of an order that keeps her husband, Byron Douglas, the actor, in Ludlow Street Jail for failing to pay her alimony amounting to approximately $2,000. The alimony was granted by the Supreme Court in 1904, when Mrs. Douglas obtained a separation. Justice Weeks refused to vacate the order unless Douglas pays up.

The marital troubles of the actor folk are set forth in affidavits. Douglas recites that his wife, following his failure to pay, had him arrested while he was playing in "Madame X.," and again when he appeared in vaudeville. He adds:

"I am failing in health and well advanced in years, in helpless financial condition, and have been under arrest for the last three months. The plaintiff has received inheritances of at least $5,000 each, one from her uncle, the late Edwin Booth, and another from John Sleeper Clarke, another uncle. I am informed, too, that she has property in Massachusetts and in the Borough of Queens, N. Y. I might add that I am suffering from neuritis, and while I am in jail I cannot earn money acting."

He concludes by saying that his wife's request might result in his remaining in jail for the remainder of his life.

Mrs. Douglas had this to say in her affidavit:

"Edwin Booth left $5,000 to deponent, who is his niece, and most of the said fund was squandered immediately by the defendant, and deponent has no property of any sort or kind whatsoever in this or any other jurisdiction at present from which to draw an income for her support."

QUITS LABOR'S PEACE COUNCIL IN DISGUST

Snelling Learned from Members Its Real Purpose Was to Stop Munitions to Allies.

MEMBERS ON LABOR FRINGE

Disconcerted to Find Martin and Schulteis Active Leaders—Announcement Through Gompers.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—The office of Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, today made public a letter from Milton Snelling, First Vice President of the International Union of Steam and Operating Engineers of America, an organization affiliated with the Federation, to Representative Frank Buchanan of Illinois, in which Mr. Snelling resigned as First Vice President of Labor's National Peace Council. Mr. Snelling explains his resignation by saying that remarks of his brother officers in the council suggested that the new organization was not in the interest of peace, but simply to aid Germany by preventing shipments of arms to the Allies.

Mr. Snelling's letter, which was addressed to Mr. Buchanan as President of the council, also makes it plain that he suspected that the council was financed by German-American or German money, and that in spite of its name it was not representative of labor. He said that he was chagrined to find at the meetings of the council men "who have been hanging on the fringe of the labor movement for their own personal aggrandizement."

In this connection Mr. Snelling mentions Herman J. Schulteis and "William B. Martin." Mr. Schulteis is, or was, counsel to the National Anti-Trust League, with which David Lamar, the "Wolf of Wall Street," was closely affiliated. Henry B. Martin, National Secretary of the League, is almost constantly with Mr. Schulteis. Both were with the delegation from Labor's Peace Council that called on the Secretary of the Navy some time after W. J. Bryan addressed the new organization.

Mr. Snelling makes no reference to Mr. Buchanan's recent criticism of President Wilson and Secretary Tumulty's sharp retort. Nor does he refer to the recent meeting of the council with invited officers of the National Grange, at which, after a stormy session at the Willard Hotel, the farmer representatives forced the meeting to abandon resolutions assailing the Administration and advocating an embargo on arms, and adopt instead a general resolution declaring the council's loyalty to the United States and its willingness to support any patriotic move.

The fact that Mr. Snelling's letter was given out at Mr. Gompers's office tends to confirm previous reports that Mr. Gompers had refused to recognize Labor's Peace Council. The letter follows:

Chagrin, Disappointment, Disgust.

Ever since the meeting which was held June 22 and 23 at the St. James Hotel, this city, and at which was organized the "Labor's National Peace Council," I have been rummaging over in my mind the course which I ought to pursue, both in the association and in the office to which I was elected, for if there is anything repugnant to me it is even to be suspected or placed in a position where my actions do not square with my conscience.

As you are aware, because you were present at the meeting of the Washington Central Labor Union, I was at first disinclined to accept the selection of the C. L. U. to participate in your conference the following day, but a little later, knowing you as I do, I concluded that it was safe to follow your leadership in this matter, and I accepted the appointment. After your election to the presidency I was elected First Vice President, and others were elected to the several offices created, and to the best of my ability I gave whatever assistance I could. I was in hopes that some contribution might be made by representatives of labor to the attainment of an early, honorable, and humane peace among the nations now engaged in the European war.

But, Sir, when I discovered persons participating in the meeting who have been hanging on the fringe of the labor movement for their own personal aggrandizement, men who have been discarded, one who is expelled from the international union of his trade, and others never having been members of any organization of labor, I am free to say that it caused me considerable chagrin, disappointment, and disgust.

After having elected our officers, including a Treasurer, the question was asked how this movement was to be financed, and I assure you that I was considerably impressed when no one deigned to give a reply. Later, when you and John Lorch, one of my associates, were together and the same question was asked by Mr. Lorch of you, you may perhaps imagine my astonishment when you said: "This thing is big enough so that I do not care where the money comes from to finance it."

To Stop Munitions to Allies.

It may be interesting, yet until now unknown to you, that when Mr. Lorch was sitting in the meeting, and in conversation with Mr. Jacob C. Taylor, the delegate from East Orange, N. J., Mr. Lorch asked: 'What, after all, does this council want to do?' Mr. Taylor replied: 'We want to stop the exportation of munitions to the Allies. You see, Germany can manufacture all the munitions she wants.' Surely, when I heard this, the impression made upon my mind was not that the council was seeking peace, but rather to play into the hands of one of the nations engaged in the European war and as against the others.

Since the adjournment of the meeting, I find about the most active men in the effort to carry on the work of the "Labor's National Peace Council" are William B. Martin and Mr. Herman J. Schulteis, and this, too, has considerably disconcerted me.

The horrifying incidents which have occurred in our national capital and in New York, together with the facts I have recited, have determined the course which I ought to pursue. It will be my pleasure, as it is my duty, to co-operate with my fellow-workers in the organized labor movement, and with all other conscientious persons and bodies, for the purpose of bringing about an early and honorable peace, but I can no longer permit my name to be associated with the association when the action of some of its men justify suspicion and condemnation because of their wrongdoing. I, therefore, beg to tender my resignation as First Vice-President and all connection with the "Labor's National Peace Council," to take effect at once.

I should add that for you, personally, and several of the gentlemen who participated in the conference, I entertain great respect, even though I feel that a mistaken course has been pursued.

GERRY NOT OLIVER OSBORNE

The Government authorities, who for many months have been busying themselves with a nation-wide search for an elusive person who went under the name of Oliver Osborne, are beginning to believe that the name of Oliver is legion. Ever since the name and the first of a long series of records of Oliver's conquests commenced to appear in the papers toward the end of last March, after Rae Tanzer had filed her $50,000 breach of promise suit against James W. Osborne and said that he wooed her under the name of Oliver, letters and telephone messages alleged to be from and about Oliver have reached the office of the United States District Attorney.

A few days ago the Government received word from Boston that a man named Herbert F. Gerry was believed to be the real Oliver. Yesterday the story was printed here, and the man was said to have moved to Utah following his conviction of a grand larceny charge, for which sentence was suspended on condition that he get out of Massachusetts.

That the newly discovered Oliver was not the one who wrote the Oliver letters in the District Attorney's possession was the conclusion of the local authorities when a man who had investigated in Boston reported yesterday that he had seen the new Oliver's handwriting and that it did not in any way resemble that in the original Oliver's love letters. Nor did it resemble the handwriting on the Jersey hotel register nor the handwriting of James W. Osborne.

SALT LAKE, Utah, Aug. 10.—A man giving the name of Herbert S. Gerry lived at the Hotel Mosida, in Mosida, for four weeks, leaving on July 8 for Provo. He left there on July 24 with directions to have his mail forwarded to general delivery, this city. He has not been seen here.

What to Use and Avoid On Faces that Perspire

Skin, to be healthy, must breathe. It also must perspire—must expel, through the pores, its share of the body's waste material. Certain creams and powders clog the pores, interfering both with elimination and breathing, especially during the heated period. If more women understood this, there would be fewer self-ruined complexions. If they would use ordinary mercolized wax they would have healthy complexions. This remarkable substance actually absorbs a bad skin, also unclogging the pores. Result: The fresher, younger underskin is permitted to breathe and to show itself. The exquisite new complexion gradually peeps out, one free from any appearance of artificiality. Obtain an ounce of mercolized wax from your druggist and try it. Apply nightly like cold cream, for a week or two, washing it off mornings.

HIGH-CLASS TENNIS BY CALIFORNIANS

SEABRIGHT, N. J., Aug. 10.—Play in the tennis tournament for the Achelis Cup became a bit swifter today in the second round, the warm sun drying out the turf courts, permitting the star racquet wielders to extend themselves. It was another big day for California. McLoughlin and Dawson each won a match in the singles, and when they paired in the doubles, cut loose with the most sensational tennis that the tournament has produced.

McLoughlin defeated S. Howard Voshell in the singles, 6—1, 6—2, with the points 30 to 17. The Californian played a deep court game, going forward to the net only when he thought that he was badly in need of a point. Once in each set Voshell broke through McLoughlin's service and won a game. The third game he won was on his own service.

McLoughlin did not resort to his impetuous smashing tactics today. His style was more conservative, and instead of depending on his terrific speed he served a ball with a low, puzzling bound.

Voshell played for all he was worth, but was rather overanxious. It was in the third game of the first set that he started to show form that was up to the Californian's. He put all the puzzling twists he knew into his serve, which is baffling enough without the left-hand feature of his play. Ordinarily McLoughlin was able to overcome anything Voshell had, but the Brooklyn man got away inside in the third game, and on McLoughlin's service took the game 4—2.

McLoughlin took the fourth and fifth games without trouble, but in the sixth Voshell forced it to deuce, and then McLoughlin left the back of the court and began to glide around in front of the net. Here he brought into play a short back-hand stroke with a twist which dropped the ball over the net with little opportunity for a return.

Voshell got two games in the second set, in one of which he broke through McLoughlin's serve.

Dawson, the other Californian, won his match in the singles from B. S. Prentice, 6—4, 5—7, 6—3. This was one of the hardest-played matches of the day, and Prentice wasn't beaten until the last ball went over the net. He took the first set by the sharpest kind of play, but in the second set Dawson showed better tennis. His overhead game was good, and he outplayed his opponent with a backhand stroke. Dawson was extended to the limit to pull the set out after it had gone to deuce.

The playing of young Harold Throckmorton attracted as large a gallery as the McLoughlin match. The junior champion had as his opponent, Fred C. Inman, and it was not until after the most smashing kind of tennis that the youngster was able to win. Throckmorton, by his victory today, will be pitted against McLoughlin tomorrow. The youngster today played with daring abandon. He is at present the hardest hitter in the tournament, but today he missed a large number of first balls. He played a reckless net game and kept going at top speed all the time. The last set of the match was stubbornly fought and the advantage see-sawed from one to the other. At times, Throckmorton's swift serve worked well and other times he missed by big margins.

When McLoughlin and Dawson and Throckmorton and L. B. Dunham came together in the doubles, the gallery saw fast and exciting tennis. Teacher and pupil were pitted against teacher and pupil. With the crafty and cunning McLoughlin at his side, Dawson played a fine game. At the net, he was swift and sure and both he and young Throckmorton had a merry time of it shooting them at each other with great force.

This match brought out many sensational plays. In the first game of the second set McLoughlin lobbed in a most tantalizing way and mostly seemed to be getting the ball out of Dunham's reach. The latter, however, did some remarkable sprinting backward and made recoveries which brought forth storms of applause. The alert Dawson was right there on his side of the net smashing back Dunham's recoveries with force enough to tear up the turf.

C. A. Johnston, Jr., the New England college player, made poor showing against T. R. Pell and lost 6—0 6—4. Karl Behr and Hugh Tallant had a good match, Behr winning 7—5, 6—1. The points of the first set were 44 and 38. W. M. Hall and Vanderbilt Ward defaulted to N. W. Niles and H. Talcott, respectively. Niles and Talcott played the first game of the third round, Niles winning 6—3, 6—1.

Children's Tournament at Newport.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 10.—John Duncan and H. D. Ridlon will play in the final round of the children's tennis tournament for trophies presented by Mrs. James Laurens Van Alen, while in the mixed doubles Miss Natalie Winslow and Cameron McRae Winslow will oppose Miss Suzanne Pierson and Larry Taintor. Semi-Final Round—John Duncan defeated James Henry Van Alen, 9—7, 4—6, 6—4.

WEST DEFEATS EAST.

Johnston and Griffin Win Doubles from Williams and Washburn.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—William M. Johnston and Clarence Griffin of San Francisco, Pacific Coast doubles champions, today defeated R. Norris Williams 2d of Philadelphia, national champion, and Watson M. Washburn of New York in the first match of the national doubles elimination tournament to determine the sectional champions to play McLoughlin and Bundy for the national championship. The scores were 6—8, 7—9, 6—4, 6—4.

The match was brilliant and spectacular. The Pacific Coast champions fought an uphill battle from the start, but the Easterners were unable to sustain the terrific pace of the first three sets. It was by breaking through the service of Williams that the Californians forced an opportunity for victory when the Easterners seemingly had the match well in hand.

Griffin was wild at times, and it required all Johnston's steadiness and speed to extricate the winners from difficulties.

Miss Carrie B. Neely of Chicago won two Western championships. In the finals of the women's singles she defeated Miss Louise K. Pound of Lincoln, Neb., 6—3, 6—4. In the finals of the women's doubles, Miss Neely and Miss Pound won from Mrs. Edward H. Brewer and Miss Catherine Waldo of Chicago 2—6, 6—0, 6—2.

George M. Church of Princeton defeated Heath Byford, Illinois State champion, in the final match of the Western singles championship, 6—3, 5—7, 6—3, 6—1. Church will play the title holder, Alex. M. Squair of Chicago, in the challenge round tomorrow. Byford, after a burst of speed in the second set, which he won, 7—5, tired rapidly, and Church had no difficulty in running out the match.

CHAMPION DOUBLE VICTOR.

Miss Cassel Wins Two Matches In Long Island Tennis Title Play.

Miss Clare Cassel, the playing through champion advanced to the fourth round of the Long Island tennis championship in women's singles yesterday at the Woodmere Club, Woodmere, L. I. Miss Margaret Grove and Miss Gertrude Della Torre also qualified for the fourth round, and the winner of the match between Miss Marie Wagner and Mrs. David C. Mills will make the fourth player to decide the ownership of the title for the next year.

The victory of Miss Cassel over Miss Lucille Weil in the second round was too one-sided to be interesting. Miss Cassel made good use of her lengthy drives and won at 6—1, 6—0. Miss Weil was off her game and did not play so well as in the first round. Against Mrs. H. Carlsbach, however, the title holder was forced to her best efforts to win.

Miss Gertrude Della Torre found two hard opponents to defeat in Mrs. Howard Vogel and Mrs. S. Rosenthal, but by hard hitting and making the best of her clever service, she managed to pull out a double victory. She defeated Mrs. Vogel at 9—7, 6—2, and followed with a hard three set win over Mrs. Rosenthal at 5—7, 6—4, 8—6. Mrs. Rosenthal made many sensational gets, often running back and overtaking the ball.

The match between Mrs. Margaret Grove and Miss Florence Sheldon brought out a brilliant series of rallies, which ended in favor of Miss Grove at 6—4, 2—6, 6—1. In the second match Miss Grove scored a straight set victory over Miss Schwab at 6—1, 7—5.

The absence of Miss Molla Bjurstedt, the national champion, was a big disappointment to the gallery. She was drawn against Miss Schwab in the first round, but defaulted. The summary:

First Round—Mrs. Howard Vogel defeated Miss H. Cullinan, 6—4, 1—6, 12—10; Miss Schwab defeated Miss Molla Bjurstedt by default.

Second Round.—Miss Margaret Grove defeated Miss Florence Sheldon, 6—4, 2—6, 6—1; Mrs. H. Carlbach defeated Mrs. Robert Le Roy, 8—6, 7—5, default; Miss Clare Cassel defeated Miss Lucille Weil, 6—1, 6—0; Mrs. S. Rosenthal defeated Mrs. S. F. Weaver by default; Miss Gertrude Della Torre defeated Mrs. Howard Vogel, 9—7, 6—2; Miss Marie Wagner defeated Miss Salde, 6—2, 6—3; Mrs. David Mills defeated Miss E. Sanders by default.

Third Round.—Miss Margaret Grove defeated Miss Schwab, 6—1, 7—5; Miss Clare Cassel defeated Mrs. H. Carlbach, 8—6, 9—7; Miss Gertrude Della Torre defeated Mrs. S. Rosenthal, 5—7, 6—4, 8—6.

PUBLIC PARKS TENNIS.

Roy Kriss and Edward Gordon won the doubles championship of the Public Parks Lawn Tennis Association yesterday on the courts of Central Park, defeating Louis Oshman and Max Rettig three sets to one. The score was 6—3, 6—1, 4—6, 6—2.

Postponed Sunday on account of rain, the match was resumed at the second set yesterday. The same order of service was maintained. Since Gordon had been the last to toe the line on Sunday, he was followed in order by Oshman, Kriss and Rettig.

The team work of Kriss and Gordon enabled them to lead the Crotona Park champions through the second set. In the third Oshman and Rettig lobbed, overcoming the cross-volleying of Kriss and the deep smashing of Gordon. The Crotona men varied their game, but Kriss and Gordon soon took the lead again. The winners have held the Central Park championship three years.

Gans Outpoints Alberts.

Italian Joe Gans, the Brooklyn middleweight, scored an easy victory over Charlie Alberts, another Brooklyn boxer, last night in the main ten-round contest at the Wallace Athletic Club at Far Rockaway. The men were evenly matched in weight.

In the other ten-round contest Young Harry Stone of this city, and Young Paul, another New York boxer, furnished an interesting draw.

Griffiths Wins Bout on Foul.

AKRON, Ohio, Aug. 10.—Referee Pat McIntyre of Cleveland tonight gave a decision on a foul to Johnny Griffiths of Akron in the fourth round of his bout with Milburn Saylor of Indianapolis, when Saylor had failed to heed two warnings not to hit after the referee had ordered a break. Previously the fight had been fast.

RESOLUTE AGAIN OUTSAILS VANITIE

MARBLEHEAD, Mass., Aug. 10.—For the third time in four of the New York Yacht Club squadron runs, the cup defender sloop Resolute has defeated the yacht Vanitie. In a twenty-four-mile race today from Gloucester to this port, with Boston Lightship as the outer mark, she won from Vanitie by four minutes and fifteen seconds actual time, and by five minutes and sixteen seconds corrected time.

They had a broad reach of fourteen and one-half miles for the first leg of the course and a close reach of nine and three-quarter miles for the second and final leg to the finish off Half Way Rock. Vanitie led for a short time during the first hour of the race. Resolute led all the way after that. At the Lightship she was one minute and twenty-nine seconds in the lead, and on the last half of the course she gained two minutes and forty-six seconds on Vanitie.

This race was for the cups offered by Rear Commodore Harold S. Vanderbilt—two for schooners and two for sloopes. E. Walter Clark's Irolita won the schooner cup for the first division of schooners, defeating Enchantress by three minutes and twenty-three seconds. The second division cup was won by Hendon Chubb's Queen Mab. She defeated John B. Fallon's Timandra by eight minutes and twenty-eight seconds.

In the first division of sloops Samurai was the winner of the cup from Spartan by 29 seconds.

The performance of Ogden M. Reid's "thirty," Lena, sailed by her owner, was a feature of the day's sport. Starting alone in her class, she sailed a special match race against the 40-footer owned by C. Vesey Shea. She defeated that yacht by 22 minutes and 5 seconds. Irolita and Queen Mab each won class prizes, as did Lena and Samurai.

Fifteen yachts started in the race off Eastern Point, beginning with Resolute and Vanitie at 10:40 o'clock. Resolute had a trifle the best of the start, being a length ahead and in the weather berth. Both used up their handicap time. Their actual time of crossing the line between the Cape Ann Whistler and the steam yacht Viking was: Resolute, 10:42:07; Vanitie, 10:42:13.

They sailed at a good clip, considering the light breeze, with ballooners drawing well to port, Vanitie pulling ahead for awhile until, at 11:12 o'clock, Resolute, then off her starboard quarter, jibed to starboard, and after crossing Vanitie's wake, jibed again, Captain Adams almost placing her on even terms with her rival.

At 11:40 o'clock the wind shifted to the southeast, putting Resolute in the best position about 300 yards to windward of Vanitie. Trimming sheets and setting head sails, both were soon holding for the lightship, which they rounded in this order: Resolute 12:39:45; Vanitie 12:41:14.

From here to the finish the two big sloops had a close reach. Vanitie held her own in this work for awhile, and even seemed to gain at times, but Resolute finally outfooted her, crossing the finish line 4 minutes and 15 seconds in the lead.

The "fifties" made one of the closest starts of the cruise, all crossing the line within a minute, with Grayling, steered by her owner, Vice Commodore J. P. Morgan, in the weather berth; Barbara, with Harry Maxwell at the wheel, was close under Grayling's lee; Iroquois II., Carolina, Ventura, Spartan and Samuri being abeam of each other toward the lee end of the line, with scarcely a length in distance between them. All carried working topsails and balloon jibs. Iroquois I. and Barbara were recalled for crossing too soon, but they did not return.

The schooners Queen Mab and Hopewell started on the 10:50 signal, both carrying ballooners.

Of the large schooners Irolita got away first, blanketed by the big Enchantress which carried a perfect cloud of canvas. Vagrant and Timandra followed at the middle and lee end of the line respectively.

Ten minutes after the start Spartan was the leader among the "fifties," with Grayling second and Ventura third.

All the yachts, including the big sloops, were then heading several points to the westward of the course.

About this time Samuri began edging over to the southward. J. P. Morgan, with the Grayling, followed, and so did Harold Vanderbilt with his schooner Vagrant. The move proved profitable, for the wind soon after came out strong from the southeast, leaving the majority of the fleet far to leeward.

The race for the King's cup, to be sailed tomorrow, bids fair to be the best yet sailed for that trophy. The ten entries are the schooners Enchantress, Vagrant, and Irolita, and the sloops Avenger, Samuri, Grayling, Ventura, Spartan, Carolina, and Iroquois. Resolute and Vanitie will race for a special cup offered by the club.

Fleet Captain Grenville Kane announced tonight that ninety yachts, one tender and two tugs, representing a tonnage of 12,000, passed through the Cape Cod Canal during the cruise and that most of them would return by that route.

BRONX BOYS' FIELD DAY.

Young athletes from Crotona Park again carried off the honors, at the fifth annual Bronx Field Day, held yesterday in the Crotona athletic field playground. These meets are exclusively for boys representing the playgrounds in Greater New York.

This movement which has been such an unqualified success since its inception four or five years ago, was fostered and encouraged by the late James E. Sullivan, of the Amateur Athletic Union. Mr. Sullivan had been an official at the Bronx Field Day every year since it started.

For the last four years the team trophy, which is donated by Rodman Wanamaker, has been held by the Crotona Field Playground. This year in order to give the other playgrounds a chance to hold the prize for a year, the points scored by the Crotona team did not count. However, this did not bar the members from receiving the individual prizes.

Eliminating Crotona's score of twenty-two points, the winners were the athletes from playgrounds No. 3 and No. 42, who tied with twenty-one points each. As the trophy could not be in two places at the same time, the officials decided that it should be on exhibition at playground No. 3, during the month of July, 1916, and at playground No. 42 for the following month. The youngsters from No. 42 came in third with eighteen points, while No. 10 was fourth.

Four teams entered the 440-yard relay for 125 pound boys. This was the feature race, and after an exciting finish was won by the quartette from No. 3. The boys from No. 40 came in second. The winners ran in the following order, J. Adolph, F. Sutliff, C. Blankenburg and C. Mans.

More than 200 boys took part in the athletic events. The 70-yard dash, unlimited, which had to be run in four heats was finally won by I. Rubin from No. 42, J. Comer, another No. 42 boy, came in second. It took eight heats and several semi-finals before the fifty-yard dash was decided. The honors went to P. Bonaparte, a colored youngster, who can run like a deer.

B. Berkowitz took the running high jump, at 4 feet 11 inches. D. Jankowsky was second with a jump of 4 feet 10 inches. Both boys come from No. 42. Playground. No. 3 won the standing broad jump, when P. Auster covered 9 feet 1 inch.

MARATHON ON MOTORS.

George Sperl and George Hamilton, Riding as Team, Win at Motordrome

Making only one relay throughout the entire twenty-six miles, George Sperl of Brooklyn and George Hamilton of Brooklyn last night won the team marathon, which featured the motor cycle meet at the Brighton Beach Motordrome. Only three of the six teams entered in this race faced the starter, but the contest was interesting, notwithstanding the small field. The victors finished more than a lap ahead of the second team, George Mercier, Brooklyn, and Stefano Quaccinelli of Italy, with Bill Brown of Newark and Sam Henderson of Detroit, Mich., bringing up the rear. Sperl and Hamilton's time was 21:10 2-5.

Hamilton, Brown and Mercier put up the most interesting duel of the race, travelling about seven miles without either gaining the slightest advantage.

Fred Luther of Fort Worth, Texas, successor as holder of nearly all Western records to little Eddie Hasha, who was killed several years ago at Newark, gave an exhibition mile in which he was timed in 39 4-5 seconds. Arthur Chapple, the champion who will race Luther in a match event on Thursday, also rode a trial mile, going the distance three-fifths of a second faster than Luther. George Hamilton captured his match race with Quaccinelli, taking the first heat at three miles in 2:09 and the second which was cut to two miles in 1:25.

After losing the opening heat to Bill Brown of Newark, George Sperl of Brooklyn came back in the next two heats of the ten-lap professional contest and was returned the winner. Mercier and Henderson were the other contestants in this race. Brown triumphed in the first trial in 2:24, with Mercier second, and Henderson third.

Sperl led all the way in the second heat, which he won in 2:28, with Brown second, and Mercier third. The order of the finish was the same in the third heat, with the victor's time 2:27.

is destined for universal adoption because it is more modern, efficient, economical and durable than any other braking system. It is in line with other essentials and comforts of modern motoring such as electric lighting, starting, signalling, etc.

Actually Doubles the Life of Your Tires

Every car on which it has been used has secured twice as much mileage from its tires than when equipped with the ordinary dry lining, hand or foot operated brake.

Oiled braking surfaces give positive smoothness of action, and the momentum of the car is dissipated through the resistance of a film of oil and not between a section of the tire tread and readbed—thus saving the tires a world of wear.

HANDY CONTROLLER

Can be attached to any car equipped with storage batteries. Sold like all Hartford Equipment with this guarantee—satisfaction or money back.

Let us send you interesting literature which enumerates the many advantages of this wonderful brake. Mention make, year and model of your car. See a demonstration at our Broadway Branch.

RICHARDS TAKES DECATHLON TITLE

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 10.—A. N. Richards of the Illinois A. C., Chicago, today won first place in the decathlon, staged yesterday and today on the stadium of the Panama-Pacific Exposition. C. A. Brundage of the Chicago Athletic Association, was second, and Chester Fee, of the Multnomah Athletic Club, of Portland, Ore., was placed third. Winning of the decathlon carries with it the distinction of qualifying as the best all-around athlete in the United States.

Following are the scores of leading athletes who finished: A. N. Richards, Illinois Athletic Club, 6852.81; C. A. Brundage, Chicago Athletic Association, 6454.34; Chester Fee, Multnomah Athletic Club, Portland, 6442.71; H. Goelitz, Chicago Athletic Association, 6432.14; P. F. O'Connor, Irish-American A. C., New York, 6048.54; Fred C. Thomson, Los Angeles A. C., 6040.23; John Jacobs, Oklahoma University, 5767.02; A. H. Hutchinson, Illinois Athletic Club, 5567.15.

Sixteen men started in the competition yesterday, many dropping out when they saw that they had no chance to win.

Richards won by good, consistent work. At no time did he place below ninth in any event and took one first place and three seconds. His poorest efforts were with the javelin and in the 1,500-meter run. Brundage did not drop below sixth place at any time and had a majority of fourth and fifth places to his credit. Chester Fee is credited with three wins, the greatest number taken by any of the competitors.

Hannes Kolehmainen of the Irish-American A. C. of New York had no trouble in winning the modified Marathon of fifteen miles from a field of six competitors. His time for the distance was 1 hour 25 minutes 31 seconds. Villas Kyronen of the Millrose A. C. of New York finished second, 100 yards behind the winner. Nick Gianakopoulos of the New York A. C. was third, and Hugh Honohan, his clubmate, fourth.

The international 800-meter relay race was won by the team of the Chicago A. A., made up of Booth, Blair, Smith, and Loomis. The Olympic Club of San Francisco was second, the Los Angeles A. C. third. The time of 1:21 1-5 was thought to be a record until it was discovered that the track was only 726 yards long.

HAVE TO RETURN PRIZES.

Ruling of A. A. U. Committee Makes Road Run Winners Ineligible.

Seven clubs which won team prizes in novice road runs during the past season will have to return them to the A. A. U. as the outcome of a wholesale revision of results which has just been completed by the Registration Committee of the Metropolitan A. A. U. These prizes will go to other clubs, which upon investigation by the Registration Board lasting more than a month, were found to be the real winners. The clubs which lose trophies had runners on their teams who were not novices.

Starting with the Trinity Club run on Dec. 20 the results were changed in the Long Island A. C. race of Jan. 8, the Sheridan A. C. run on March 28, the Pastime A. C. contest on April 11, and the Paulist A. C. run on April 25.

Archery Champion High Scorer.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—E. P. Elmer of Wayne, Penn., national archery champion, was high man at the finish of the first American round in the National Archery Association tournament which opened today at Washington Park. He scored 540 points with 88 hits. G. L. Nichols of Chicago was second and H. W. Bishop of Chicago was third. Miss Cynthia Wesson of Bryn Mawr, Penn., was first in the ladies' Columbia round, and Miss Mary Williams was second.

MEREDITH FAILS IN TEST.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 10.—Ted Meredith of the Meadowbrook Athletic Club of Philadelphia and world's record holder for the half mile, lost a chance to add the world's mark for the 440-yard dash on a straight away track to his accomplishments today at the Exposition when the timers failed to catch the flash of the starter's pistol at the commencement of a special match race. Weather conditions for the establishment of a new mark were all that could be desired.

At 9:30 o'clock Meredith, Frank Stormer of Cincinnati, and Frank Sloman of the Olympic Club, took their marks for an attempt to better Maxey Long's mark of 47 seconds. Hardly a breath of wind fluttered the handkerchiefs held out as a test. The men got off to a perfect start and at the 220-yard mark Meredith led Sloman by about a foot and Abel Kiviat caught the runners in 22 2-5 seconds. But at this juncture the men were stopped when it was found that the timers had failed to see the smoke of the starter's gun.

Ordered to start again after a heart-breaking furlong, Frank Sloman dropped out of it, but Meredith and Stormer took their marks. On this occasion the timers were carried within earshot of the starter's gun by an automobile. Getting off to a good start, but necessarily off fettle after the worry of the last race and its accompanying fatigue, Meredith established a lead at the half-way mark which he increased to ten yards at the finish. The watches caught him in 48 3-5 seconds.

It is almost certain that the Philadelphian could have eclipsed the mark in his first start, for it would have been only necessary for him to run the second furlong of his race in 24 seconds to get 46 2-5. In the first furlong of his second race he was timed in 23 1-5.

At the conclusion of the race Meredith said that he was through with work for a long time, regretting that the first start could not have been completed.

Eastern Athletes Returning Home.

A majority of the New York athletes who competed in the national championships in San Francisco are now on their way East. Frederick W. Rubien, Secretary-Treasurer of the A. A. U. is returning here by easy stages, and will arrive on Aug. 20. Lawson Robertson wired the Irish-American A. C. yesterday that he would leave last night on an 11 o'clock train with his entire team. The Winged Fist squad may stop over at Denver and Omaha, but no meets will be contested on the route. Ted Meredith of Philadelphia and Eddie Renz, national three-mile walking champion, are accompanying Robertson. The New York A. C. squad, with the exception of Hugh Honohan, was expected to start for New York last night. Honohan will remain over for the Olympic marathon on Aug. 28. Pores and Gianakopulos of the Millrose A. A. remain with him.

YANKS BREAK EVEN IN DOUBLE HEADER

Perhaps you have always thought of Daniel Boone as a conscientious, hard-working ball player, and yet it was this same Daniel Boone who tipped the Yankees over yesterday when they were jubilant because a double header was almost in their possession. The Yankees had won the first game from Cleveland by a score of 2 to 0. The next game was following in the same path until the ninth inning, when Boone and King Cole made misplays. If you will glance over the score of this encounter you will see one error marked down to Boone, and it was that error that let the winnig run came to the plate, and the men from Cleveland pocketed the game by a score of 3 to 2.

When the ninth started the Yankees were in the lead by 2 to 1, and there was every indication that they would prove again their ability to win a double header. Unfortunately King Cole selected that inopportune time to give his second pass of the game to Southworth, who was batting for Hagerman, the first up in the inning. Willie laid down a sacrifice and Evans brought about a tie when he smashed the sphere to centre for a pair of bases that scored Southworth. Of course, the game wasn't lost. The Yankees had been playing the kind of ball that wasn't on speaking terms with defeat. That is, they didn't know the meaning of the word until Boone broke under the strain of overwork on a hot afternoon. When Chapman tumbled one toward him that should have been easy, the fatigued Boone made a dive for it and the ball cormomed off his foot on a journey to centre field. The next two Evans scored from second on the blunder.

There was still one-half of an inning left, and Caldwell, who used to win games with a home run, stepped to the plate in place of Pipp. Did Ray lift one into the grand stand? Not a bit of it. He struck out, and blamed it on Silk O'Loughlin. Doc Cook did the same inoffensive thing, and the game ended when Hartzell retired on an intield out. Of course, you have a bit of sympathy for Boone, but in just what way is that going to help the Yankee percentage column?

There is no doubt about it, the Yankees deserved a better fate in that second game. They played fast, snappy ball, and Cole pitched a fine game on his fourth appearance this season. There were just three hits made from his delivery, but strangely each was for extra bases. The first Cleveland run was the result of the unassisted effort of Wille, who dropped the pellet into the right field stand for a passport to a home run. In only two innings, aside from the ninth, did more than three men face Cole.

Enough about defeat. The Yankees won the first game, and they won it by good ball playing all the way. Fisher kept the hits well scattered, and Cleveland never seriously threatened. There was one drive by Barbare in the sixth that might have increased the score had it not been for High's great catch. The sphere went to right field, and High crossed behind Cook and gobbled it in. Peckinpaugh also made a pretty stop of one of Barbare's drives.

The Yankees opened the scoring in the second inning with two down. Boone got a pass, and went to third on Nunamaker's single to centre, the latter reaching second when the drive was fumbled. Fisher's hit to left scored Boone, and then High was passed, filling the bases. Peckinpaugh, however, could not knock a single. In the fifth inning Peckinpaugh doubled to left, and scored on Fritz Maisel's single to centre. The scores:

Boston Sees First Triple Play.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 10.—The Red Sox lost ground in the race for the American League pennant on an even break with St. Louis today, losing the first game, 3 to 2, and winning the second, 10 to 3. A triple play by the visitors, the first to take place in a league game in this city within the memory of the oldest fan, featured the second contest. Shotton caught Hobiltzal's fly after a long run toward the diamond, threw to Sisler at first base, catching Speaker, and Sisler threw home, where Severeid tagged out Jackvrin. Koob's fine pitching and long hits by Austin and Sisler decided the first game for the visitors. Ruth's twirling was steady in the second game, while he and his teammates batted two St. Louis pitchers freely. The second game was held up forty-five minutes in the third inning by rain and work necessary to put the field in condition to resume play. The scores:

White Sox Best in Batting "Bee."

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 10.—Chicago hit Bressler and Davis hard today and easily defeated Philadelphia, 9 to 4. Scott was also an easy mark for the home team's batsmen, but he was accorded excellent support, and three double plays served to keep down Philadelphia's score. The batting of E. Collins and Fournier featured the contest. The score:

GIANTS HELPLESS WITH ADAMS IN BOX

"Babe" Allows Five Hits, While Pirates Get Ten and Score Eight Runs.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Aug. 10.—The Giants this afternoon were unable to hit "Babe" Adams freely and lost to the Pirates by a score of 8 to 2. It was "Babe's" fourth victory of the season over the McGrawites. New York was threatened with a shut-out, but luckily managed to get two long hits out of five safeties in one inning—the eighth. Before that period only one Giant reached second base.

In the seventh, with two out, Fletcher dropped a single into left field. Wagner stopped Merkle's single with one hand, but Fletcher reached second, leaving first base to his teammate.

In the eighth inning Brainerd led off with a smacking two-bagger into left field. Dooin tried his best to bring him home, but a fly to Collins was his best. Grant was sent in to bat in place of Marquard, and at once set the outfield in commotion. His drive went straight toward the scoreboard, which stands between centre and right. It was a three-bagger, bringing Brainerd home. Grant then scored on a long fly to Costello.

While the Giants were not doing much with the bat, they performed successfully in the field. In the third inning Merkle made a wonderful catch, sprinting near the foul line in right field to nail a fly off Johnston's bat. In the fourth Snodgrass dropped a fly off Wagner's bat, the Dutchman going all the way to third on the error. Though Hans was the first man to bat in that inning he did not leave third base. In the sixth inning, Snodgrass retrieved himself by making the best catch of the game. With one hand he pulled the ball out of the air after a long run. So far out was the ball and so great was the impetus of Snodgrass that Johnston, who ran from first base past second base, had plenty of time to return to the first sack. Some of the Giants thought he had not touched the second bag on his return, and made the usual play, but Umpire Cockill would not allow it.

The Pirates did not waste time in getting into the game. In the very first inning Collins hit Marquard for three bases and scored on a daring sacrifice by Johnston, who shoved his bat at a wild pitch and successfully worked his end of the "squeeze play."

In the second inning Baird hit for two bases and scored on a single by Gibson. Another lone run was made by them in the third inning, when Carey started off with a single, went to second on Collins's safety, stole third and lived on running until he had crossed the plate when Dooin made a wild throw to Lobert. He and Lobert collided, and Carey was so painfully injured that he quit the game, Hinchman taking his place in left field, and Costello going to right.

In the sixth inning the Pirates clinched the game. They attacked Marquard in a continuous rattle, broken only by the marvelous catch by Snodgrass. Hit then followed hit until five were registered, netting four runs.

Schauer succeeded Marquard in the eighth inning. Hinchman made a two-bagger and scored on two outs. The score:

CHEAP BALL FOR BROOKFEDS

Bleachers Tickets at Washington Park to be Cut to 10 Cents Today.

President Robert B. Ward of the Brookfeds announced yesterday that 10-cent baseball will begin today at Washington Park, the home of the Brookfeds. Two thousand seats in the outfield will be set apart for the low rate of admission, while seats in the grand stand will be 25 cents and 75 cents. Box seats will be $1, as formerly. The decision of the Brookfeds follows the announcement of President Gilmore of the Federal League last Sunday that a general reduction of the price of admission would shortly go into effect at all the Federal League ball parks. This is in line with President Gilmore's plan to popularize the game in the independent league.

The attendance at Washington Park has gradually dropped until a daily average of 250 has been reached. All the clubs in the league have lost considerable money, and it is hoped that by reducing the price of admission to the bleachers there will be a material increase in the daily attendance. It is not intended to make the reduction arbitrary, but adapt it to local conditions. The success attending the reduced price of the bleachers at Newark last Saturday has had much to do in bringing about the decision of the Brookfeds' management.

After four days' trial it has been found successful by the Newark Club. According to the statements of the management the average attendance since the reduction in the price of admission to the bleachers has been between 6,000 and 7,000. This includes the Saturday attendance, which was in excess of 15,000. With business conditions at a low ebb the management felt that this is an excellent showing and will continue the present policy. Before the cut in price the attendance was so poor that the advisability of transferring the franchise to another city was considered, but this plan has been abandoned.

Buffalo probably will not reduce the price of admission, according to a statement made by President Robertson. Buffalo is drawing fairly well, and there is no demand for a cheaper gate. Baltimore will adopt the ten-cent tariff next week.

BROOKFEDS' ERRORS COSTLY

The troubles of the Brookfeds multiply. The Chifeds departed from Washington Park after walloping Magee's team three games out of four, and yesterday Kansas City started to duplicate their record by defeating the Ward team 3 to 2. To tally three runs from four hits is no ordinary baseball feat, but this is what the Kanfeds did yesterday. They held the Brookfeds to two runs, the product of nine hits, including one double. The error column, however, tells the tale. Magee got badly mixed up twice and received two bad marks for his conduct, while Myers and Halt each contributed one misplay. The visitors, while not exactly perfect in the field, gave the locals an objectlesson in this department of the game.

Several times during the contest, which was witnessed by a small crowd, the Brookfeds lost excellent chances of scoring. This was particularly the case in the ninth inning, when three were wasted singles. A double play by the visiting infield shut off one run which would have tied the score, and then, with two men hugging the sacks, Helfrich, who was impressed into service as a pinch hitter, struck out. The score:

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUG. 11, 1915.

BRITISH AND AMERICAN TRADE.

There is taking place an unparalleled movement of bullion from Europe to this country. The exact figures are withheld. But whatever the sum of gold to arrive in New York, it is no more remarkable than the trade figures which accompany it, and which come by cable on the same day that the gold import is announced. British and American trade figures fit each other as a glove the hand. It was known that our export balance exceeded a billion for the fiscal year just closed. It now appears that England's excess of imports for the seven months ended with July was £305,000,000, against last year's excess in the corresponding time of £135,000,000. This year's excess of imports into England is to be interpreted differently from last year's, when it signified the collection of investments and profits. This year the increased excess of imports is due to expenditures abroad, and to a deficiency of exports of goods to meet the bill. That is the explanation of the import of gold announced yesterday. England is paying tribute to her foreign purveyors, and not taking tribute to her wealth in the same degree as formerly.

This process is cumulative. British exports for July were under £10,000,000, not one-fourth last year's. The decrease of exports in July by £34,000,000 was accompanied by an increase of imports of £16,000,000. An alteration of currents of trade by a quarter of a billion dollars in a single month overmatches even our tremendous surges between princedom and pauperdom. It is notable that the decrease of imports to Great Britain from the Continent is matched almost exactly by the increase of imports from the United States. It hardly becomes us to be making a "poor mouth" over the war, and creating a disturbance over the derangement of trade in this or that article while, on the whole, we never were doing so well. Particularly is this so when the disturbance of our trade is not due to malice. The German blockade is aimed at England, not at us. England's disturbance of our trade is explained similarly by hostility to Germany rather than toward her chief source of supplies.

The trade figures throw a strange light upon the German blockade. During the first year of war, England's imports were actually larger than the year before, and progressively so. In August last year British imports were only £42,000,000; last July they were £75,000,000. The increases were chiefly in food, those of meat having doubled, and all others being larger. Yet starvation of England was the aim of the war zone decree. That is the test of whether the British or the German navy is fulfilling its purpose better.

The decrease of England's exports explains itself. The chief decline is in coal, and the Welsh coal strike cost a million tons. Altogether within five months there have been 286 British strikes, costing three-quarters of a million days' work. Adding to this the absence from productive labor of Kitchener's army, the wonder is that the United Kingdom is able to export any goods.

It is to be remarked that the gold now arriving goes into a private bank, on terms not known. It would be a waste of good resources to buy £100,000,000 of goods with £100,000,000 of gold. As cover or margin it easily would serve to finance a half billion of purchases. That is the manner in which England allowed France $300,000,000 of credit upon deposit of $60,000,000 gold. It is well known that England is the financier for all the Allies, and it would be rash to assume that the $100,000,000, more or less, is on British account alone, or that its significance is restricted even to those generous figures. The situation is the reverse of that in which the Morgan house has engineered the payment of large sums of gold abroad while controlling the exchange market. When payment was made for the Panama Canal purchase from France, all comers were supplied with exchange in lieu of gold to pay with abroad, and the rate was kept below the gold export point. When the time comes to correct the exchanges by the issue of permanent credits, rather than by payment of gold which England needs, and we do not want, it may be found that comparatively slight buying will prevent the movement of any more gold than is desirable. Huge gold movements seem intrinsically absurd. It is not the gold that anybody wants; it is the goods that gold commands, and in the long run goods must be paid for with other goods.

ENGLAND AFTER THE WAR.

An interview reported in THE TIMES of Monday with Mr. CHARLES E. JERNINGHAM, a writer on English society, contains or suggests some interesting speculations as to the social and economic changes to be expected in England after the war. English "society" is founded on wealth, mainly on wealth in land, which, till the rise of so many new rich, was felt to be the only really "respectable" form of investment. It gave a man "a place in the country" and the county. Indeed, there was once a tradition among the patricians of the straitest sect that it was not "respectable" to be possessed of much personal property. Land was the source of honor. The diminished yield, the burden of the inheritance and income taxes, were already pressing hard on the great landholding class, many of them the heirs of embarrassed estates. Now comes the intolerable financial burden of a war whose end no man can foresee. Mr. JERNINGHAM predicts the dissipation of the great fortunes of "society" and the breaking down of social barriers.

But fortunes will be made as well as lost. There will be successors to the ennobled nabobs of the eighteenth century and the manufacturers, bankers, and brewers of the nineteenth and twentieth. To pass the land system over to plutocrats, from "blood" to the bankbook, would be loss rather than gain. Land reform, the breaking up of great estates, the restoration, if it be possible, of the yeoman class, the elevation of the agricultural laborer, in short, the gradual undoing of a long series of oppressions and encroachments, from the dissolution of the monasteries and the inclosure of commons: this is the indispensable necessity of England.

England is full of a pitiful poverty such as is not to be found in Germany. From her most formidable foe she has to learn economic, even more than military, lessons. The evils of squalor, shiftlessness, drunkenness, wretched wages and lodgings, and of the physical condition of too many of her population, must be abated. The war has interrupted the progress of economic legislation for the benefit of the majority. Who can doubt that the remedial work will be continued and enlarged when the reconstruction of industry is taken up? The added efficiency of the nation will be more than a compensation for the money that will have to be spent, fruitfully spent, in addition to the monstrous waste of the war.

The English aristocracy is nobly and memorably doing its part in the field. Noblesse oblige. But the English democracy, conscious of itself, conscious of its too paltry share in the prosperities it helps to create, of its great, though obscure, share in fighting or falling for the country, is not likely to be duped by sentimentalities. We can even imagine an England without game laws—from the viewpoint of the grandees the end of the world.

A NORTH CAROLINA "DESERT."

A great deal has been heard about the "abandoned farms" of the New England and other States, some of which maintain bureaus to facilitate the resettlement of those isolated rural "deserts." A certain number of persons, not always practical farmers, have taken advantage of the opportunity to acquire cheap homes and lands. Shrewd, saving farmers of foreign birth have often done well in this work of reclamation and restoration. There has been a large emigration of farmers, from Iowa especially and the States along the Canadian border, to the new fields of the Dominion Northwest. Presumably most, or many, of these had a good store of capital, parting with rich, if partially exhausted, soil for the sake of reaping the earned increment of great virgin tracts of a region of fruitful probabilities.

Bilious prophets emit wails from time to time, shuddering at visions of "tenant farmers" and the last strip of unoccupied farming land. Meanwhile the "Great American Desert" of the geographies of our youth belongs rather to mythology than geography. Prosperous farmers, and enormous crops, and the urbanization of country life ought to have, but don't seem to have, had much, if any, effect upon the passion to herd in cities. Not "Back to the land," but "On to the city," is the cry.

Yet once in a while we hear of wide, untilled, promising farm districts, sometimes in old States. Here, for example, is The Charlotte Observer, which "has often pondered over the "vast waste of farm lands in Bladen, "Brunswick, Pender, and neighboring "counties" of North Carolina, "and "has speculated on the possibilities "offered by them for immigrants." It cites from The University News Letter a study of this region. It contains 22,380,000 acres, four-fifths valuable for cultivation, a desert "that could "be made to blossom as the rose if "North Carolina could draw a thrifty "class sufficient to populate it." The Observer says, mournfully or enthusiastically:

> Here is a neglected area almost exactly twice the size of Belgium. Here is room for every manjack of the 450,000 Belgian farmers, on farms twice the average size of the little pocket-handkerchief fields they have been used to cultivating. And we should have some 9,000,000 acres of our wilderness spaces still left for woodlot uses.

The roseate prospectuses of land speculators, the real estate experiences of Martin Chuzzlewit, anything of deception, cannot be thought of in connection with responsible and upright publications like The Charlotte Observer and The University News Letter. We must believe fully in the Tar Heel unused fertile acres. But will anybody go to them? Is not a motor car the only agricultural machine that most of us desire? Yet the "coast section" of North Carolina especially invites small farmers.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN NEW JERSEY.

The woman suffrage amendment to the Constitution of New Jersey will be submitted to the voters of that State at a special election on Oct. 19. Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania will ratify or reject a woman suffrage amendment at the regular November elections. Naturally, both the friends and the foes of votes for women lay great stress on the verdict to be given in New Jersey. So, in Presidential years, the Republicans and Democrats used to await eagerly the result of the elections in "the September States." The good, easy men, who really or mythically like to be "on the winning side," are supposed to be affected by a victory.

We don't know how much there is in that conventional and time-honored theory. It may turn out that, pro or anti, defeated in New Jersey, will fight all the harder in the States which are to determine the controversy in November, that the indifferent and the Laodiceans will warm up. Aside from the communicative ardor of triumph, the result in New Jersey will inevitably raise presumptions and hopes, substantial or illusive, as to public opinion in this State, whose relations with its many-ferried neighbor are so manifold and intimate. The great multitude of New Jersey commuters are day scholars of this city; but the fate of the amendment will be decided presumably by the cities, which have an independent life of their own. The woman suffrage amendment of 1897 was accepted by the minor and rural counties, and condemned by the urbans. The country was not conservative, the cities were not in favor of new things, a reversal of traditional political "form."

But woman suffrage is not, or at least is by many not regarded as, a purely political question. And public attention has in the last few years been concentrated on it in the East as never before. Fresh from many successes in the West, it thunders at the door of the long indifference of the Middle and Eastern States. Whether it would work well or ill, it is a matter of grave moment, passionately advocated or opposed by those keenly alive to its value or its danger to the public weal and to women. But what does the majority of the voters in New Jersey, for example, think about it? Nobody knows. Shall we know even on Oct. 20?

Let us hope so fervently. Let us hope that the voters of New Jersey in October, and of Pennsylvania, New York, and Massachusetts in November, will not slink away, as is the American habit, from a constitutional amendment, a referendum. Americans will take the trouble to vote for names, for candidates, but too many of them are too lazy or uninterested to vote No or Yes on a weighty and far-reaching proposed change of the fundamental law. It would be a waste of space to cite figures. The case is the same in every State. Men interest voters; constitutional amendments interest a much smaller number of them. The New Jersey suffrage amendment of 1897 went down in an election at which nearly 130,000 fewer votes were polled than at the ordinary, straight, purely political election a couple of months later.

Irrespective of the merits, friend and enemy of woman suffrage must desire a great "turnout" of the Jersey voters on Oct. 19. Not by an indifferent electorate, not by a scanty handful of ballots, should the decision be made.

GRAIN RATES.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has postponed until February, from Aug. 13, its consideration of the application of the railways for an advance of rates on grain for export. After the Commission has taken up the matter it will be weeks certainly, perhaps months, before a decision is rendered. There are two reasons why this delay is undesirable. It is obvious that a great deal of grain will have moved between now and next March, say. If it is right that the rates should be advanced they ought to be advanced before the movement is approaching its end. If it is not right that rates should be advanced, that also ought to be known sooner, for the rates on export are part of the price of grain.

The fixing of a rate is a matter of business discretion upon which competent men of business would make a decision in a week. But the Commission does not consider rates as matters of business. To it rates seem more like laws, as in fact they are. The Commission therefore considers rates as a permanency, rather than part of fluctuating business conditions. Rates are considered as though there were an absolutely right rate, which could be found and fixed for a long time. The result is that the increases which the Commission has been compelled to grant by force of facts will be much more permanent than if they had been granted more readily, to be withdrawn also readily. There are no longer such reductions of rates as there used to be. We are in a new railway era, when old considerations do not count.

The second reason for regretting the Commission's delay is that the subject is not a new one. The motion for the increase was made after the decision in the Eastern freight case, the railways thinking that the Commission had not allowed a sufficient advance. The subject already had been considered, and the Commission had only to reconsider. Yet there was a suspension from April to August, and now to February, or practically until another April, when another crop will have begun to grow. No doubt the Commission is both industrious and overworked, but unless decisions on rate proposals of this importance can be reached within a year it must be admitted that there is a weak link in regulation. No private business could live if compelled to wait a year to fix the price of its goods.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Some Feeling Remarks About Forests.

It is equally discouraging and confusing to see that those who on fair assumption sincerely want to save the State lands in the Adirondacks from the reckless operations of lumbermen are talking cynically and contemptuously about "scientific forestry," as if there were no such thing, while those who are suspected and accused of wanting for the sake of a little immediate profit to denude the mountains of their trees are pleading for exactly such treatment of the public woods as they certainly ought to receive.

For it is not at all necessary to put derisive quotation marks about the words "scientific forestry," or to speak of it with the inflection that has the same effect. There is such a thing, and it could be applied in the Adirondacks, not only without decreasing either the beauty or the indirect utility of the woods as maintainers of water supplies, but with an increase of both those benefits.

The constitutional provision that these lands should be kept forever "wild" is a disgrace to the State, and there was only one excuse for putting it in, as there is only one excuse for retaining it—the excuse that the people of New York State either can not or will not intrust the control of their forests to honest and competent men, but will, if not prevented by an article in the Constitution, turn them over to men whose one thought with respect to a forest is to cut out of it every big and little stick of timber that can be sold for any price and to leave behind them a desolate and worthless waste.

If that is really the situation, we are indeed a poor lot, desperately and shamefully ignorant of what the German foresters, among others in Europe, have been doing for several generations. Those same Germans, as well they might, would smile superior if they heard men of good intentions pleading in our Constitutional Convention for the perpetuation of a policy that not a few, even of American lumbermen, know is worthy of barbarians, but unworthy of a people who pretend to be civilized and scientific.

What the purposes and motives of the representatives of the lumbering interests at the convention may be we do not pretend to know, but, so far as words go, their statements as to scientific forestry are perfectly correct and sound, while the phrasing of the opposing arguments is calculated to fill with either rage or grief, according to temperament, all those who know what science wants to do, and can do, in a forest.

Likable Form of Unwisdom.

Such an episode as that which had for setting the big Chanler house at Great Neck, before light Sunday morning, raises anew a question often of a personal interest that is literally vital and always of considerable social importance. The question is, What should be done by the man who wakes to find that there are burglars in his house?

Two courses obviously are open to him. The first is to lie perfectly still and allow the invaders to take what they want and to go when they are ready. That is the advice invariably given by the police to honest householders, and there is much to be said for it—among other things, that as practically every burglar is prepared to shoot in case of need, and can do it advantageously as regards both preparation and position, to interfere with or attack him is to invite, and has often been to receive, death merely on the chance of saving some comparatively worthless property.

From the immediate and individualistic point of view the policy of non-interference is wise, and so much the wiser of the two that the other is to be considered only to be condemned as equally foolish and dangerous. And dangerous it certainly is, from any standpoint, but danger, except for those who would buy safety—in larger matters they usually call it "peace"—is not necessarily to be shunned when reasons for taking it exist. Those in whom there is something of the heroic strain accept risks without hesitation for such reasons as the maintenance of their rights and the resistance to wrong, and truly they have their reward in the instinctive admiration and commendation of all their fellows.

When a man, as did the tenant of the Chanler house, STANLEY A. COHEN, instead of lying quiet and letting himself be robbed, leaps out of bed, seizes his revolver, and attacks the enemy without any judicious deliberation on the possible consequences to himself, we may have our doubts as to his judgment, but we do not doubt, or refrain from saying, that he has "acted like a man," with all the large meaning that phrase possesses. In this instance, one of the two burglars fled without booty and the other was captured. The results were greater than that, however—they included the rendering of a distinct and not small service in the way of discouraging burglary in general and tending to make it a far less attractive vocation than it would be if everybody followed the "good advice" which everybody receives as to the proper handling of burglars.

Advice for Amateur Speculators.

If ever there was a time when small boats should keep near the shore of the Wall Street ocean—or not venture on it at all—it is just now. The prices of a good many stocks have, indeed, been rising steadily, some of them rapidly, for several months, and there is in many more or less adventurous minds deep regret for not having made purchases which, as everybody can see now, would have been enormously profitable. That regret, for the predestined "lamb," is lamentably apt to transmute itself into a belated buying, too often at the very top of a long rise in values and on the very day or week when the inevitable decline begins.

That there is more money to be made in this market is possible enough, but the immediate future is about as nearly full of uncertainties as a market could be, and the amateur speculator who takes a "flyer" in such circumstances should clearly realize that he is gambling, not investing, and that he will have no cause of complaint should he lose every cent of his money.

Unfortunately it is the stocks that have gone up most that have attracted the most of public attention, and are most likely, though the most dangerous, to tempt the cupidity of the uninitiate.

But advice on this subject is not the more likely to be taken because it is good, and many will fail to see that in their failure to buy betimes there is the clearest of hints that they are incompetent to buy wisely now. A lot of them will in all probability see it later, to their sorrow.

IRELAND SINCE THE FLOOD.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It would be well if those who presume to write to the press about Ireland would give evidence of having read at least one Irish book. The facts of Irish history are easily available to those who do not wish to cherish hereditary ignorance and bigotry in preference to fact. From the dawn of history till about the period of the Reformation there were always four kingdoms in Ireland—Ulster, of which the O'Neils were Kings; Connaught, governed by the O'Conors; Leinster, the patrimony of the MacMorroughs, and Munster, divided between the MacCarthys, Princes of Desmond, and the O'Briens, Princes of Thomond. Beyond these there was the Kingdom of Meath, in the centre of Ireland, holding a position to the Irish heptarchy similar to the position held by Washington, D. C., in relation to the States of the Union, recognized as the patrimony of the High Kings of Ireland, who were first the O'Melaghlins and later the O'Neils. Thus Ireland was united under its High Kings, but still further united under its community of language, history, religion, law, and literature.

The treasures of Irish law, literature, history, and art are known to few. Their very existence is doubted by the ignoramus and the bigot, and sneered at by the enemy. But those familiar with them know that these things existed before the modern nations of Europe spoke a civilized tongue, and they exist today in profusion and distinctiveness convincing enough to overwhelm the critic and the giber. Those who have gazed on the Book of Kells, or on Ireland's ancient articles in enamel and gold, or on the Round Towers, or on the Rock of Cashel, or on the Dun of Aengus, or on the Celtic crosses, or on the beehive cells, or on the tomes of ancient Brehon law, or have read Ireland's Iliad, called the "Tain," or have looked on the ruins of Clonmacnoise and Glendalough, or have fingered Ireland's ancient manuscripts, knowing these things to be but remnants saved from the deluge, such people can listen only with pity to the witless snob who makes Ireland the butt of his lack of knowledge.

When the barbarians of the north descended on Europe and destroyed the Roman Empire, wiping away all that the civilized labor of eight centuries had built up, the scholars who then made Irish universities the most famous in the world did not point the finger of scorn at the suffering nations of Europe. No; they poured out of Kells, Clonmacnoise, Armagh, Clonard, Glendalough, Iona, and Arran in their thousands and went on foot over stricken Europe educating the barbarian and his victims, and comforting, Christianizing, civilizing, and humanizing the great tribes who were to make up the nations of the modern world. The story of the Irish Mission (600-1050 A. D.) has never yet been told. When the real truth appears the world will then realize to what extent the sense of gratitude in human nature has been dishonored in the ruin of the most noble and ancient nation in Europe, the calumny of its fair fame, and the desecration of its name at the hands of every petty bigot and enemy of truth.

Suffocated Yew Trees.

Regarding the deplorable condition of those once magnificent century old yew trees in front of the library building of Columbia College, the main, if not the actual, trouble with these trees is that when moved they were planted too deep; branches from six to twelve inches in diameter were buried, causing root suffocation.

Of course there may have been contributory causes such as poor condition of the soil, lack of water or poor underdrainage, preventing evaporation and aeration, but the major trouble is that they were buried when transplanted. It is a well-known fact that covering the earth around even vigorous trees, (that have not been subjected to the risk of injury by transplanting,) with soil a few feet deep, causes deterioration and usually death by suffocation.

I notice that the soil which covered the branches of the easterly tree has been removed, but the branches of the tree to the west are still partly buried.

The Merit System.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter in a recent issue, signed by Calvin S. McChesney, explaining the claims of the Spanish war veterans is refreshing. Written apparently in answer to your editorial of July 26, it shows conclusively that these doughty warriors do not seek any unfair advantage whatever, but that on the contrary they are perfectly willing to meet other citizens on equal terms in the examinations. He very ingeniously neglects to state, however, that the even terms proposition ends when the list is made up.

"The Dog of Flanders."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letters of the dog lovers were of peculiar interest to me. One letter, however, is so filled with sophistry that it leads me to request information. What authority has M. C. Tener for declaring that the author of "The Dog of Flanders," Mlle. Louise de la Ramee, was a woman hater? This statement, in view of "Ouida's" sex, must certainly be false.

MILITARISM TO LIVE WITH.

Edgartown, Mass., Aug. 5, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter which you presented in a recent issue from Professor Rudolf Leonard, regarding the phantom of German militarism, is typical of your policy to do justice to all sides. I must confess that Professor Leonard's views, as to the elusive character of German militarism, may not meet with a responsive sentiment on these shores, but I should like to add a little comment.

I have lived four years as an American student in Germany, have attended a number of the military manoeuvres at Tempelhofer Feld and the sham battles held usually at Doberitz. I have been awakened early mornings by the blare of military bands and the interruption of my slumbers was not entirely unpleasant, because at that time Sousa marches were the rage. I have lived in German pensionats, have been a guest at officers' casinos, and believe that I may speak with some little knowledge of this so-called German militarism.

I must confess with absolute sincerity that in all my sojourn in Germany I have not found any evidence, personally or by observation, that militarism is the multi-headed monster that we try to picture to ourselves. True, there is a strong martial spirit in Germany, even in peace times, but it is not rooted in militarism but pride in the army and faith in the might of this military arm to defend the Fatherland against aggression. I have yet to hear or learn of any instance when this military power was used during the past forty-five years for the purpose of conquest, either colonial or by invading adjacent foreign territory. It is true that the legal status of the civilian is not predicated upon the same basis as that of the Prussian officer. But instances have been extremely rare in German legal history where this prerogative of German officers has been exercised against civilians. On the other hand, may I suggest that it would not militate against the peace and public welfare of this country if the uniform of the American Army and Navy were held in a little higher respect than it is?

Although I may be flying into the face of fate and strong preconceived notions in this country, I must agree with Professor Leonard that German militarism as we picture it is truly a myth. Military authority in Germany does not come in contact with personal liberty. Soon after settling in Berlin I was indignant when asked to appear before the police and submit to a cross-examination. It took me some time to calm my outraged Americanism. But I soon found that this system of personal surveillance is for the good of the community and has many fine advantages, incidentally reducing crime, theft, &c., to a minimum. I never heard of Bernhardi during all my four years in Germany, except that his views were not typical of prevailing views in German military or Government circles. I read now and then of the meetings of a handful of Pan-Germans and of the aspirations of the Hanseatic League. But we have many such organizations in our midst to which we do not attach any importance. I repeat, it would be a novelty to learn from any of your correspondents as to how German militarism has manifested itself in a concrete way.

JAMES R. STOWELL.

The Shark Slander.

I should be greatly obliged if you would kindly let me have a reference to the publication where Mr. Oelrichs offered a reward for any one bitten by a shark, provided, of course, you can readily do this. You see I have been waiting over twenty years in the hope of getting this reference, which Dr. Gill, who knew more fish lore than any one who ever lived, could not give me, and you seem to be well acquainted with the subject.

I agitated the question of shark bites a number of years ago in the columns of Forest and Stream and succeeded in getting two fairly reliable references to such cases. One occurred at Bombay, where a man went bathing from a wharf whence it was customary to dump offal. The shark naturally thought all was offal that came his way, and took his leg off. Another occurred in the Hawaiian Islands, where a man started to swim for a boat that had broken adrift from a schooner. A shark came along, found that the man was harmless, and took him in out of the wet.

Ordinarily a shark is a very cautious animal, and it is difficult to get a big one to take a bait to which he is not accustomed. As you say, the danger from shark bite is very small, as the blue shark rarely, and the white shark still more rarely, makes a visit to our shores, and such white sharks as do are usually small animals.

A City's Cacophony.

I have read with interest the several references to street bands, and, while they can truthfully be said to be pretty bad, they are not so bad as some other things. There are other noises that one cannot so easily escape. I live in a neighborhood of eminent respectability, and what I perforce listened to night before last is a fair sample of what these Summer nights bring forth. First, about 8 o'clock, a phonograph began pouring forth music hall ballads, keeping at it persistently. About 8:30 a violinist began tuning up, playing nothing for over an hour but exercises. The phonograph was still going. While both were doing their utmost, about 8:45 a lady vocalist started in to negotiate a high C, and, judging by her many attempts was determined to get it out of her system. Her efforts were a little too much for the others, for they gradually subsided, leaving the field to her, till a dog began wailing vociferously for the return of the other members of the family, (for I haven't the least doubt that they had gone out and left it home alone.) The dog was too much for the singer, apparently, and had the field when I dropped off to sleep. Spite of the fact that it was a warm night, I was only mad at the people who went out and left the dog alone, because my sleeping apparatus is in pretty good order. I only mention this to show that there are other noises than street bands.

Attention of Farmers.

How can we invest a year? We are two young fellows with good jobs and excellent prospects, who have come to a sudden realization that we lack one of the prime elements of success—a robust physique. We are in good health as health goes in the city, but no muscle bunches on our backs when we bend. Toting a heavy grip for two days would knock one of us out. We want to invest a year. We want to get on a farm and work—work till our bodies are fit to harbor the ambitions that fire us.

Is our scheme hare-brained? Can we find a farmer who would take us in and give us board, clothes, and maybe a few dollars a month extra for our work?

I have lived on a farm in my childhood. I know what the first few weeks would mean. But after we toughened up we would be a mighty valuable pair. AMBITIOUS.

Why Canada Fights.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a Canadian with two sons in the allied army, I am opposed to any peace propaganda at the present juncture. This war has brought a shadow to almost every home in the British Empire. We entered the war in defense of the weak, and until Germany, the aggressor, is thoroughly beaten no peace terms can be considered. We have no ambition to crush the German nation nor to confiscate its territory, ships, or other possessions. We do mean to crush Prussian militarism, and this we shall eventually succeed in doing, though the task will be a desperate and long one. We do not base our hopes alone on our vast resources of men and money, but rather on the justice of our cause. C. W. FORD.

THE MORAL RIGHT TO THRIVE ON WAR.

Shall a Great Peace-Preaching Neutral Build Up an Enormous Industry in Arms and So Decide the Issue in Europe?

By KUNO FRANCKE,
Professor of the History of German Culture, Curator of Germanic Museum, Harvard University.

Cambridge, Aug. 9, 1915.

I have worked, during the last months, on the side of those who seek to avert the danger of this country being involved in civil dissensions arising from racial sympathies or antipathies concerning the European conflict. In particular, I have repeatedly expressed my conviction that sympathy with one or the other of the warring nations should not induce American citizens to attempt to coerce our Government into deviating from the strict observance of the accepted rules of neutrality.

I have therefore advocated non-interference on the part of our Government with the internationally legalized traffic in arms and munitions of war, even though, through circumstances over which the United States has no control, this traffic turns out to be of decided advantage to one of the belligerents and of very serious disadvantage to the other. For the inhibition of this traffic would be equally to the advantage of one of the belligerents and to the disadvantage of the other; and, as a positive Governmental measure, it would make the United States in a much stricter sense legally a partisan of one of the warring powers than mere non-interference with this traffic does.

But the time has come, I believe, when this question should also be looked at from another point of view. Through the course of events, it has ceased to be a question of international legality only, and has come to be a vital question of national and international morality.

Is it moral, from the national point of view, that the United States, a nation which officially stands for the policy of peace and against excessive armament, should now permit within its own borders the manufacture of arms on so large a scale that this industry bids fair to become one of the leading industries of the country?

Is it moral, from the national point of view, that our Government should permit the rise in this country of a set of capitalists whose interests are exclusively or predominantly identified with war, and which, therefore, by its own self-interest, is bound to abet and to foster the war spirit among masses of people?

Is it moral, from the international point of view, that this country, while officially holding aloof from the gigantic carnage which is now devastating Europe, should, as a matter of fact, through its continued shipment of arms make itself a participant in this destruction, and indeed thrive upon it?

And if—as is by no means impossible—the continued sale of arms to one of the belligerents from an officially neutral country should finally come to be one of the decisive factors in the issue of this war, would that be an issue to which the United States would have reason to point with pride as a victory of international morality? Would not that be the result of a positive assistance from this country to one of the warring groups which could not any longer be reconciled with moral neutrality?

These are questions so momentous, so far-reaching, and so pressing that Congress should, the sooner the better, have an opportunity to discuss them. They are questions which should be decided without the bias of racial sympathies or antipathies, solely upon the ground of American national welfare.

KUNO FRANCKE.

WHO IN ITALY WANTED WAR?

The Socialists, and Even the Anarchists, Were First of All Patriots.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of today you publish a letter by a Mr. Algernon Lee purporting to give the lie to the news that representatives of American pacifists tried to bribe the Italian Socialists in order to have them fight against Italy's intervention in the war. That news did not come from Paris, but from Rome, and was revealed by the very Socialists whom the said representatives tried to bribe. This, however, was not the first instance of such "civilized and humanitarian" means for preventing that nation from doing what it deemed best. Several months ago Dr. Sudekum, a representative of the German Socialist Party of his Imperial and Royal Majesty the Kaiser, approached the Italian Socialists in order to see whether German gold and influence could be put at their disposal with the view of keeping Italy neutral. That gentleman was obliged to leave the room in a hurry; lest he receive some token of appreciation for his kind proposition.

From the beginning of the European war the "Reformist" wing of the Italian Socialist Party saw that Italy's place was on the battlefield against the Central Empires, and did not leave anything undone to prompt Italy to take that course. The "Revolutionist" wing of the party was against war for theoretical reasons. This absurd point of view caused a split among the revolutionists themselves, the vast majority of them taking the view that Italy's participation in the war was an absolute necessity for her own national life and for the triumph of democracy, liberty and peace in Europe. When the whole Italian nation threatened a revolution if Italy did not go to war, the pro-war Socialists were at the head of the demonstrations, side by side with the hottest patriots. This evidence of the public opinion was so imposing that the minority of the anti-war Socialists did not dare oppose it. Never, neither before nor after Italy's declaration of war against Austria, have the Socialists opposed to war been discriminated against by the Government. On the contrary, the Government was so sure of the loyalty of the reddest Socialists that it released several Socialists who were in prison for crimes committed against property and life. The censor is very strict, but only as regards war news; the rest of the public and private life of the nation is going on as usual; the public liberties have not been in any way curtailed.

As soon as war was declared all the Socialists and anarchists, even those opposed to war, took the most loyal and patriotic attitude. Nearly all the Socialist members of the Parliament and other Socialist leaders joined the colors as volunteers, together with the vast majority of the able-bodied of their followers. On the battlefield they act in the most patriotic way; not later than yesterday an Italian paper of New York published the news of one of the reddest revolutionists who is a private now and who has been decorated with the silver medal for his military valor. And this is one instance out of thousands.

Some few Americans who are sorry to see Italy follow a policy which will give her the position in the world that she deserves, and which will help to insure civilization and peace in Europe, do not cease to spread false news about her political conditions. Some time ago it was the news that Italy was on the verge of a Republican revolution; a few days after the leader of the Republican Party in Italy became a Minister of his Majesty the King. Now it is the turn of the not less unfounded news about the Socialist peril. What next? VITTORIO RACCA.

On the Albany Post Road.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I note that your article "When Roads Are Closed for Repairs" points out one instance to illustrate the statements made therein.

The writer, however, has chosen an unfortunate example, since the detour in question is fully posted in both directions, so that any automobilist who can read letters from two to four inches high and who takes the trouble to do so cannot possibly wander astray. Beginning at either end of the detour he has merely to follow the arrows and lettering, (two to four inches high,) until he again reaches the main road.

In order to convince myself that none of the signs had been injured by the recent storm I have personally gone over the detour today and have found the detour so posted that any one capable of driving an automobile and reading would have no trouble in finding their way. In order further to convince myself that there was no excuse for any one to "get lost," as you term it, I stopped about twelve cars that were evidently touring and asked them whether they experienced any difficulty in finding their way, and in each case was assured that no difficulty was found by any of them. Several of these cars bore "out of State" licenses and were probably total strangers to this part of the country. I might also mention that in this particular case through traffic can leave the Albany Post Road at Ossining and proceed via Kitchawan and Yorktown Heights to Peekskill, where they can again rejoin the Albany Post Road and travel on good macadam roads all the way. This route is a few miles longer, but to the tourist amounts to very little and carries him through a very pretty section of Westchester County. M. TIFFENBRUN,

An Olfactory Nuisance.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The fumes from the chemical works on the Jersey shore, opposite 105th Street, are so intense, even at night, that we cannot draw a long breath, and spend most of our time coughing. Is there absolutely nothing to be done whereby this most dreadful nuisance can be stopped?

FAITH WITH TEACHERS.

The Pity of Disappointing Those Who Have Retired on Pensions.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

How can it be possible for the City of New York to repudiate or default, in part even, in the payment of pensions due to former teachers who have been duly retired and whose names have been placed on the pension list in accordance with the rules and regulations established by the Board of Education? These former teachers entered in good faith into a contract in effect with the city, since it had approved the action of the Board of Education and complied in full thereafter with all the terms and conditions therein exacted. Have they not, therefore, acquired an indubitable equity to the extent of payment annually as prescribed in the established schedule, without loss or other detriment to them?

The threatened trouble would seem to lie largely in our complicated system of municipal bookkeeping, but it would be unfortunate if needless delays should result in anxiety and possibly real suffering among those who have justly earned their reward for faithful service.

That the plan upon which the present pension fund is based is in need of drastic revision there can no longer be any doubt. Having been a member of the original committee which prepared this plan, I am aware of the fact that it lacks those stable assurances which a thorough scientific deduction alone must provide, but at the time there was no promise of any extended list of applicants, and it seemed safe to enter upon the enterprise for which we had had public approval.

There is this to be said: Those who have been so far authoritatively p

PLEASANT COMEDY PERFECTLY PLAYED

IT IS BY SMITH AND MAPES

Mr. Eddinger's Fine Performance Sets the Pace for the Capital Company at the Belasco.

THE BOOMERANG,—A comedy in three acts by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes, in the Belasco Theatre.

Dr. Gerald Sumner.....Arthur Byron
Budd Woodbridge.....Wallace Eddinger
Preston De Witt.....Gilbert Douglas
Heinrich.....Richard Malchien
Hartley.....William Boag
Mr. Stone.....John Clement
Virginia Nelva.....Martha Hedman
Grace Tyler.....Ruth Shepley
Marion Sumner.....Josephine Parks
Gertrude Ludlow.....Dorothy Megrew
Mrs. Woodbridge.....
Mrs. Harriet Otis Dellenbaugh

"The Boomerang," the three-act comedy that was shown to New York for the first time last evening, is a minor Belasco triumph. It is not, like "The Return of Peter Grimm," say, or "Marie-Odile," a big thing admirably presented, but rather is a small thing done to perfection. Though this new play by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes is very amusing, it is by no means extraordinary, and the fact that it provides such good entertainment is due in large measure to the notably fine performance given by the company chosen for its presentation. And in the work of that company there stands out particularly the part played by Wallace Eddinger, whose contribution to "The Boomerang" reveals gifts he has never been permitted hitherto to hint were in his possession.

Last evening was one of the warm ones, and the 10th of August is an unprecedentedly early date for the opening of the Belasco's doors, but neither the season nor the temperature was suffered to interfere with the occasion, which was distinctly gala. The audience, which packed the theatre, found "The Boomerang" altogether to its liking and disbanded shortly after 11 o'clock murmuring, with good reason, all the various synonyms for "Success."

As for the play, it dallies agreeably on the borderline between comedy and farce, with a marked inclination toward the latter. It suffers slightly from the handicap of a give-away title and its simple, elementary plot is quite commonplace and obvious. Its simplicity is almost undergraduate simplicity, but somewhere in the collaboration that evolved the comedy, the hand of a cunning craftsman was at work and it has lifted the curse of obviousness by a score of delightfully ingenious touches.

The story is one of jealousy and the way to treat it. The doctor, who agrees to take a bad case of it under treatment, pretends to administer all manner of modern remedies, but in reality employs only the approved old-fashioned device of affected indifference and independence. As the first rule in the game of love he gives this little maxim:

But the first thing he knows the wrong person adopts his advice, and he is wounded by his own boomerang.

There is one particularly happy moment when the doctor is helplessly prospecting for the cause of the melancholy that has possession of the youth who has come to him. By way of sparring for time in the most professional manner possible he is taking the patient's pulse when, unexpectedly in the room adjoining, some one speaks the name of the girl of girls.

The effect is electrical. You see the doctor's eyebrows mount with the pulse and the burst of applause that greeted the trick from the technically minded audience at the Belasco last evening served to emphasize the notion that in these days, all the world's a stage and all the men and women in it merely playwrights.

And there is another happy moment when the poor lad tries bravely to affect indifference with the girl gazing at him incredulously and the doctor coaching like a malign spirit from behind her back.

There is much food for laughter in the first act, with its glimpse of the young doctor's office and his swift change to an imposingly medical manner as the sound of his first patient heard in the offing. And there is a great deal of fun in the embarrassed and dogged resistance of the normally healthy youth to the blandishments of medical science. He is inclined to suspect all the formulae as so much hanky-panky and seems to be governed by a superstitious conviction that it will be all up with him if he takes off his coat.

If there are precious few surprises in the unfolding of the plot, there is a generous surprise in the performance. That is provided by Mr. Eddinger, whose work in his part is marked by force, delicacy, and variety. He does the scene supremely well. His performance is better than merely right. It is fine.

Those who may have heard with a certain resignation the rumors of his retirement from the stage, after the long run in "Seven Keys to Baldpate," must now beat their brows remorsefully. They must write letters of apology to Mr. Eddinger. They must go to see "The Boomerang."

Of course the big opportunity the play affords is Mr. Eddinger's. In an equally important if less fortunate rôle, Arthur Byron, able and experienced actor, gives an expert performance that is marred a little by a too continuous exuberance. It is innocent of repose. But it is marked at times, especially in the last act, by flashes of delightful comedy.

Martha Hedman plays agreeably the rôle of the nurse who gently follows the doctor's advice to his own complete undoing. And Ruth Shepley, late of "It Pays to Advertise," gives a skillful performance of the one who had been too ardently wooed. She is a vision to behold and looks for all the world as if she had just emerged from a seminary—one little girl from the seminary. In a minor rôle Harriet Otis Dellenbaugh is charming—of course.

All told, Mr. Smith and Mr. Mapes must be profoundly grateful to Mr. Belasco, who, with his familiar nicety, has made a great deal out of "The Boomerang."

THEATRICAL NOTES.

"Rosalind" is the title J. M. Barrie has given his new fifty-minute piece which will be presented with the revival of "The Duke of Killicrankie" in the Lyceum next month. The beauty of middle age is the playwright's theme, and the principal figure is that of Rosalind, an actress of 40. Marie Tempest will play this role.

The opening of the farce, "Some Baby," has been postponed from tomorrow to next Monday night in the Fulton Theatre.

Maurice Farkoa, Francis D. McGinn, and Vivian Rushmore have been added to the cast that will appear with Elsie Janis in the new comedy Charles Dillingham will present in the Globe Theatre following the brief return engagement of "Chin-Chin."

Leon Errol is stacking the new edition of Ziegfeld's "Midnight Frolic," which will be produced soon on the roof of the New Amsterdam.

Fred H. Speare, who played the role of Boris Andreiff in "Potash & Perlmutter," has been engaged by A. H. Woods for a juvenile part in the new Montague Glass comedy concerning the lives of these amiable partners.

The date for the first showing of the "Carmen" pictures, for which Geraldine Farrar acted recently at the Lasky Studios, has been announced for Oct. 31 in the Strand.

Gladys Hulette, one of the child actresses in The New Theatre's production of "The Blue Bird," will return to the legitimate stage this season after acting for films for the Edison Company.

MAY SAVE DEEP-SEA HOTEL.

Rescue Committee Hopes to Raise Permanent Endowment.

Miss Lillian L. Deaver of 111 Manhattan Street, who is Chairman of the "Committee for the Salvation of the Jacob A. Stamler Deep-Sea Hotel for Working Girls," reported late last night that developments during the day indicated that the girls' home would not only be saved, but that it might become a permanent institution.

"I made my appeal to the Arbuckle heirs this afternoon," she said. You know they are the people who can really say what shall be done with the ship, as they are the owners, and originally placed it at the disposal of the girls. They have never been appealed to before, and my interview this afternoon gave me great encouragement.

"My idea in seeing them was to make a permanent arrangement. The old ship is in perfect condition, and would be safe and comfortable for many years. The result of my interview was that I was asked to wait a day or two before the owners reached a decision. During the day I received offers from a number of people who were anxious to donate funds for the further maintenance of the ship hotel.

"After we have saved the home there will be certain arrangements that will have to be made with the Fire and Dock Departments, but I was given to understand today that there would be no objections from these departments to the deep-sea hotel being conducted as before."

PRAYS IN RAIDED POOLROOM

Police in Time to Hear Telephone Race Report Stop Supplication.

As Lieutenant McAuliffe, of Inspector Ryan's staff, and half a dozen detectives broke into Julliette Hall, in Lenox Avenue, near 123d Street, yesterday afternoon, hunting a "floating pool room," twenty-three men stood up and bowed their heads as one of their number led in prayer. At that moment the telephone bell rang irreverently and Lieutenant McAuliffe irreverently answered it. A voice at the other end of the wire said:

Lieutenant McAuliffe turned from the telephone to direct one of the detectives to stop a man who was attempting to slip out of the room with a bundle of cards under his arm. The cards, according to the police, were racing charts.

The twenty-three men were taken to the West 123d Street Station and charged with disorderly conduct. They were released in $100 bail each and will be arraigned in the Harlem Court this morning.

Lieutenant McAuliffe said he recognized a wealthy grocer among the men arrested yesterday, but he would not tell his name.

M. J. BUDLONG RESIGNS.

Head of Packard Agency Company Joins Importing Firm.

It was announced yesterday that Milton J. Budlong, President of the Packard Motor Car Company of New York, Chicago and Philadelphia, had resigned to become Vice President of the importing and exporting firm of Gaston, Williams & Wigmore, Inc., of 140 Broadway. They have been heavy exporters of Packard trucks on war orders, and the offer to Mr. Budlong is said to have resulted from the relationship which grew out of this trade. He has been with the Packard Company seven and a half years, and was considered one of the most valuable officials.

He succeeded as President of the Packard Motor Car Company of New York by E. B. Jackson, manager of the Philadelphia company, who will retain the general supervision of that organization. H. M. Allison, who for years has been manager of the Packard Motor Car Company of Chicago, will follow Mr. Budlong as its President.

REMOVE MRS. ROCKEFELLER

Her Body Is Transferred from Tarrytown to Cleveland.

The body of Mrs. John D. Rockefeller was removed from the private vault of John D. Archbold in Tarrytown, N. Y., yesterday afternoon during a severe electrical storm and put on a train for Cleveland. No relatives were present to witness the removal of the body. Every effort was made to avoid public attention and only the undertaker, Charles Vanderbilt, and Frederick Briggs, Superintendent of the Rockefeller estate at Pocantico Hills, were in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery to superintend the transfer.

The body was carried in a hearse twelve miles to Harmon, where it was placed on the Lake Shore Limited. The same precautions for secrecy were maintained at the Harmon station. So far as the officials of the New York Central know, no one of the Rockefeller family accompanied the body from the Harmon station.

PROF. T. B. STILLMAN, NOTED CHEMIST, DIES

HONORED BY SCIENTISTS

Professor Thomas Bliss Stillman of national reputation as a chemical engineer died of heart disease after an illness of three weeks at his home at the Fairmount Apartments, Jersey City, yesterday in his sixty-fourth year. As the author of many books and pamphlets in technical and applied chemistry, and as a professor at Stevens Institute of Technology for many years, he became one of the most prominent men of his profession in this country.

Professor Stillman was born in Plainfield, N. J., and was a son of the late Dr. Charles H. and Mary Elizabeth Stillman. After attending Alfred University for a short time, he entered Rutgers College, from which he was graduated in 1869 with the degree of M. Sc. Then he went abroad and studied in Germany, being graduated from the Fresenius Laboratory in Wiesbaden in 1877. On his return he attended Stevens Institute for several years, and in 1883 received the degree of Ph. D.

From 1874 until 1883, when he took his final degree, Professor Stillman taught at Stevens, and was first instructor in analytical chemistry and later professor of the same subject. In 1903 he became Professor of Engineering Chemistry, and continued until 1909, when he retired as a beneficiary of the Carnegie Pension Fund.

During his long career Professor Stillman held many important positions in New Jersey. In 1884 he was appointed State Inspector of Oils, in 1911 he was appointed City Chemist of Jersey City and Bayonne, and held these offices until his death. Professor Stillman was also appointed an examiner in chemistry for the Municipal Civil Service in this city in 1911, and was later appointed chemist to the Medical Milk Commission of Newark, N. J.

He was a member of the American Chemical Society, the Society of Chemical Industry of London, the American Institute of Mining Engineers, the International Association for Testing Materials, the American Electro-Chemical Society, the Societe Chimique de Paris and the fraternity of Phi Beta Kappa. Professor Stillman was also a corresponding member of the Edinburgh Society of Arts and Sciences and the Deutsche Chemische Gesellschaft. He became of one of the oldest families in New Jersey and was a member of the Sons of the Revolution, the New York Chapter of the Society of Mayflower Descendants, and the Order of Washington.

Professor Stillman became famous in this city in February, 1906, when he gave his "synthetic dinner" at the Hotel Astor. He created from various chemicals and under the very eyes of his guests, wines, sauces, salads and other foods in every respect as tempting to the palate as if they had been the products of the vineyard and garden. His guests ate them with wonderment and relish, and none suffered evil effect. Furthermore, he started the dinner by mixing chemical cocktails that were every whit as appetizing and potent as the bar-man's creations.

In June, 1908, he found a gold vein in the excavation for the Stevens Institute Annex, and when the ore was assayed it ran as high as $8.50 to the ton. At that time he said that it might be better to mine the property instead of building on it, only that it was too valuable as real estate to make it a paying investment.

At the time of his death, Professor Stillman was working on the first edition of his "Engineering Chemistry," which he had planned to be his life's greatest work.

He is survived by his widow, who was Miss Emma L. Pomplitz, and by two sons and a daughter, Miss Anita Stillman. Secretary of Christ Hospital in Jersey City.

MRS. THORN ASKS DIVORCE.

Conde Raguet Thorn Has Public Trial Set for October.

Nicoll, Anable, Lindsay & Fuller, attorneys for Mrs. Louise Floyd-Jones Thorn, have filed a summons and complaint in a divorce suit which she has started against her wealthy husband, Conde Raguet Thorn, well known in Wall Street. Howard Hasbrouck of 63 Wall Street, attorney for Mr. Thorn, yesterday induced Justice Weeks to sign an order sending the case to a jury in Trial Term, Part Two, of the Supreme Court, when the courts open in October.

Efforts to keep the suit secret were manifested when the lawyers succeeded in having the papers in the case sealed and filed away in the County Clerk's office. Owing to a rule of the Appellate Division of this department, the contents of the complaint have not been open to the public.

ACTRESS SEEKS DAUGHTER.

Mrs. Smythe Fears Estranged Husband Has Taken Her to Europe.

Herman L. Roth and James A. Timony, lawyers for Mrs. Marie Nevins Smythe, an actress, yesterday bent all their efforts in trying to learn whether Mrs. Smythe's husband, William Smythe, an actor, had sailed for Europe in company with Toby Claude, the actress, whom Mrs. Smythe had named as corespondent in a divorce suit started in the Supreme Court. Most important still, to Mrs. Smythe, was whether her husband had taken along her five-year-old daughter, Kathleen.

Supreme Court Justice Ford on Saturday had ordered Smythe to turn the girl over to her mother and the actor promised that he would immediately obey the order, but up to date Mrs. Smythe has not been able to gain the custody of the girl.

Suffragists at Luna's Hopperie.

The Woman Suffrage Party hostesses at the Hopperie at Luna, Coney Island, this evening will be Mrs. T. T. Cotnam and Mrs. O. F. Ellington of the Arkansas Flying Squadron, and they plan distributing bags of Arkansas rice, tied with suffrage color ribbons, to the Hopperie patrons. Tomorrow Miss Martha Klatschken and workers of the Thirty-first Assembly District are to be the hostess, and on Friday members of the College Women's League and the Thirty-first Assembly District will be there. On Saturday Mrs. Oreola Haskell, Miss Mary Williams and others will attend as hostesses.

Suffrage Draws in Maspeth.

Martha Klatschken and Pauline Angell of the Woman Suffrage Party are among the workers who make their headquarters in Maspeth in an abandoned post office building. They say they found a baseball game in progress, but when Miss Rose Bowers started a patriotic air on the bugle the entire male assemblage deserted the game and rallied to the suffrage cause. At Ridgewood the suffragists stopped near a moving picture house, and soon afterward the manager came out and said: "Will you please go away. Nobody ain't coming in to my show."

Suffrage Party Now Has an Auto.

"The Flier," the new black automobile of the Woman Suffrage Party, is the result of Miss Mary Garrett Hay's exertions. A few days ago she decided that a car would be needed in the latter part of the campaign, and put up a sign to that effect at headquarters. The first day $100 came in, and on the fifth day Miss Hay motored down to the office in the new car.

SOLDIER MOURNED LIVES.

French Veteran, Badly Wounded, Returns Here to His Wife.

Through the influence of the French Consul a wounded French soldier, Leon Graux of 347 East Fifty-seventh Street, was released from Ellis Island last night and restored to his wife, who had received news six weeks ago that he had been killed in battle.

After the French liner Rochambeau arrived yesterday morning from Bordeaux at her pier, foot of West Fifteenth Street, Mrs. Graux received word from her brother Pierre that he believed Leon was on the ship. She hurried to the pier and was informed that her husband had gone to Ellis Island with the steerage passengers. She sought the French Consul, who obtained permission from the Immigration Commissioner for Graux to land in New York.

Leon Graux was a crippled and warscarred veteran when he walked ashore from the Ellis Island ferryboat last night leaning on his wife's arm. He had five bullet wounds in his arms, legs, and body. His company of 350 was reduced to 34, he said, after the battle of Solssons, in which both his hands were severely torn by shells. In following engagements Graux had a bullet in his right shoulder, his left leg, and finally had his right thumb shot away. After each engagement he was patched up and sent to the front again and was decorated by the French Government for bravery on the battlefield.

Graux gave up his job as a hairdresser in this city shortly after the war started and went home to fight. Now he is going to become a citizen of the United States and live here with his wife and two children, 8 and 14 years old, respectively.

TWO BABIES ABANDONED.

A boy, three weeks old, strapped in a go-cart, was abandoned yesterday in front of a 5-and-10-cent store at 22 East Fourteenth Street. His crying attracted the attention of Miss Anna Kelly of 3,011 Kingsbridge Avenue, a saleswoman in the store, who inquired among the shoppers for the mother. Failing in this effort, Miss Kelly telephoned to the Mercer Street Police Station and a matron was sent to take the baby to Bellevue Hospital.

Hearing the cries of a baby, Policeman Schraeder of the Beach Street police station pried open the door at 203 Chuch Street last night and found in the hallway a boy about 7 months old lying in the darkness. A bottle of warm milk lay beside him. The little fellow weighed twelve or fifteen pounds and was healthy. He was clothed in a silk lace dress and embroidered stockings, and had apparently been well taken care of. He was sent to the foundling ward at Bellevue Hospital.

CRUSHES MAN, RAMS WAGON

Auto Truck Fractures the Skull of Samuel Solas, Harlem Jeweler.

A motor truck belonging to the Interboro Transfer Company and driven by Alvin Kasberg came down Lenox Avenue yesterday afternoon and near 135th Street struck Samuel Solas, a jeweler, of 240 West 146th Street. Solas was knocked down, and Kasberg, swerving to avoid another man, ran into a butcher wagon at the curb and knocked Herman Haas of 474 Lenox Avenue, the driver, out of the wagon.

Kasberg was arrested on a charge of felonious assault under the new ordinance permitting such action when a policeman sees the offense and the victim makes a complaint. He was taken before Magistrate Ten Eyck in Harlem Court and held in $1,500 bail for examination Friday. Solas, whose skull was fractured, was taken to Harlem Hospital, and Haas was treated for lacerations by Dr. Jennings of that institution.

COURT WARNS POLICEMAN.

Magistrate Says Gambling Raids Are Made Without Evidence.

Magistrate Appleton in Night Court last night told Detectives Barry and Costuna of the Second Inspection District that he would complain to the Police Commissioner if police continued to bring prisoners before him on the charge of gambling without evidence to support it. The detectives had arrested twenty men in a raid at 33 East Eighth Street, but could produce no evidence when they were arraigned.

"I am tired of this sort of thing," said the Magistrate, "and I intend to complain to the Police Commissioner if it continues. Get your evidence first; then go to 100 Mulberry Street and get warrants for your men."

$2,500 MOTOR BOAT BURNS.

The 30-foot power boat Meirah, owned by Harry Merz of 453 King's Avenue, City Island, a clerk in the First District Magistrate's Court, which has won many races at Huntington, burned last night at her mooring 500 feet off shore in Long Island Sound. The blaze was started by a spark from a lamp carried by a watchman named Henry, who was the only person on board.

The flames enveloped the watchman, who jumped overboard and swam to the yawl, which was made fast astern. He cut the painter and rowed to the police launch of Harbor Squad "B," which came off with seven firemen carrying hand grenades to fight the fire. The Meirah, which sank after burning to the water's edge, was valued at $2,500.

KATO HONORED BY EMPEROR

TOKIO, Aug. 10.—Takaaki Kato, who was Foreign Minister in the Cabinet which retired late last month, was appointed by the Emperor today a member of the House of Peers.

Premier Count Okuma issued a statement explaining his decision to remain at the head of the Government. The Count said his decision was due to representations from the Emperor that conditions at home and abroad were such as to make inadvisable a change in the Premiership.

A BIG SHIPPING DIVIDEND.

Danish Company Pays 46 Per Cent. for Six Months of This Year.

LONDON, Wednesday, Aug. 11.—The C. K. Hansen Steamship Company, according to a Copenhagen dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company, declared a dividend of 46 per cent. for the first six months of 1915, which was more than double its earnings for the entire year of 1914.

The correspondent cites this fact to prove that the war has greatly increased the earning capacity of neutral vessels.

Found Dead on Poolroom Stairway.

A man, supposed to have been George Wells Smith of Morrisville, N. Y., was found dead last night on the stairway leading to the poolroom of Louis Wagner, at 108 West Fourteenth Street. There was a wound in the back of his head, and Patrolman Parker of the Charles Street Station was told that he had been in the poolroom a few minutes before, but it was denied that there had been any trouble. Coroner Feinberg has found nothing as yet to indicate that the man did not receive his injuries from a fall. He had been treated for spinal trouble at Bellevue Hospital.

Find Lusitania Victim's Body.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—The American Consul at Cork has reported the finding of the body of M. W. Harvey, presumably a Lusitania victim, washed ashore on a small island off the Irish coast. The last Lusitania pasenger list contained the name of William Harvey as a third cabin passenger.

PLANS FOR TRAINING CITY CENTRE HEADS

New School Will Give Practical Courses in Organizing Communities.

GOOD PAY FOR GRADUATES

Places Paying from $100 to $250 a Month Await Those Qualified to Fill Them.

Plans for the New York Training School for Community Centre Workers, the establishment of which was announced recently, have been entirely completed and the school will open on Oct. 18. This newest professional school will be affiliated with the People's Institute, under the Chairmanship of Luther H. Gulick and the immediate direction of John Collier, organizer of the National Board of Motion-Picture Censorship. The course of the school will take seven months for its completion, and for the first year will be limited to thirty-five students. At the end of this time it is expected that all of the graduates will find places waiting them as community centre leaders.

In fact, places commanding from $100 to $250 a month are now waiting to be filled and are vacant only because properly qualified workers cannot be had in sufficient numbers. This unusual circumstance is responsible for the establishment of the school.

The community centre, ten of which are already operating in New York City, is the latest convolution of the "social mind," and a recent departure from the more widely known recreation centre. Although both have features in common there is one distinct difference; the community centre pays its own way while the city supports the recreation centre.

"In the community centre," Mr. Collier explained, "governing power, subject to general oversight by the Board of Education, rests in a committee or council elected by those who take part in the centre's activities. But, instead of going to some rich man, or to the city, the richest source of all, for money, the community centre gets more and more of its funds from the dues of its members, from the 'movies' it runs, and from the dances it holds. Of course, like any other enterprise, capital is needed to start business and that must be raised where it can be found. But once started a good, healthy community centre ought to be progressively self-supporting and thus far has proved to be so."

To turn out leaders for such community centres in this city and elsewhere is the task of the new training course. The school will hold no formal entrance examinations, and its requirements are equally informal. They are, first and foremost, natural ability to do this kind of work; and, secondly, enough education, whether gained in college or by experience, to form a foundation upon which to build. The community centre leader must have, according to Mr. Collier, "the temperament of a district leader, the will power and unquenchable spirits of a commercial traveler plus the discrimination, the 'know-how,' which our courses are planned to provide."

When admitted the prospective community worker will find his course of study divided into three departments: Practice, seminars, and "practicum," which in uplift vocabulary signifies a social workers' experience meeting. This work includes social and written reports, required reading, original themes, and so forth.

Under practice, the student will be sent out to try his hand at some particular task in one of the ten community centres in New York City. He will be required to spend fifteen hours or more each week in this sort of laboratory work.

The seminars will, in the course of the seven months, thrash out fifteen different social subjects such as city planning, immigration, and social insurance. Among studies of greatest value to the initiated are such topics as "psychic mechanisms," "what it means to be an economic institution," "the local approach," and "the problem of leisure." The seminars will call sixty hours of classroom attendance, in addition to preparation, and will be directed by twenty-five specialists in the various subjects treated. Among the lecturers will be George B. Ford, an authority on city planning; Lee Hanmer of the Sage Foundation, Dr. A. A. Brill, Hutchins Hapgood, Immigration Commissioner Howe, Burdette G. Lewis of the Correction Department, Samuel McCune Lindsey of Columbia University, Percy MacKaye, Mrs. V. G. Simkhovitch, and Frederick C. Whitin, Secretary to the Committee of Fourteen.

DEATH RATE INCREASES.

In the week ended on Saturday last there were 1,451 deaths in the greater city, compared with 1,314 for the corresponding week of last year, according to figures made public yesterday by the Health Department.

The respective rates were 13.04 and 12.28. Making allowance for increase in population, there was still an increase of 85 deaths.

While there were no deaths directly from insolation, the deaths from diarrheal diseases were more numreous in the last week than in the corresponding week of last year. Heart disease, pulmonary tuberculosis, and violence showed an increase.

The rate for the first thirty-two weeks of 1915 was 13.78, compared with 14.57 for the corresponding period of 1914.

KINDRED BAFFLES POLICE.

Say They Have Clues to Missing Clerk, but No News.

Captain of Detectives Deevy, who is in charge of the search for Edward C. Kindred, yesterday received a postal card, dated Aug. 7 and mailed from Station W, Eighty-third Street, near Columbus Avenue, on which it was written that many people believed Kindred had met with foul play and that a close search for him should be made in the hospitals.

Counsel for the Flinn-O'Rourke Contracting Company yesterday told the police that Kindred had paid $1,500 to a woman's grandfather to be released from any claim for his alleged conduct with her in the northern part of the State. Captain Deevy said last night that his men were at work on several clues, but that he could say nothing further of what had been accomplished.

WEST POINT CADETS FINED.

They Struck Intoxicated Man Who Insulted United States Army.

Because they resented an insult to their uniform and struck the insulter, Edward Coffee, 22 years old, of 695 Ninth Avenue, and Kenneth Park, 19 years old, of Sayre, Penn., two West Point cadets, were fined $10 each yesterday by Magistrate Levy in the West Side Court. The cadets were arrested by Policeman Bolls of the West Forty-seventh Street Station on complaint of John McManus of 695 Ninth Avenue, who, when intoxicated, made a slurring remark about the United States Army as the cadets walked through Fifty-fourth Street, near Sixth Avenue. When Bolls appeared McManus had received a discolored eye and several bruises about the face.

In imposing the fine Magistrate Levy said:

"It's all right to be patriotic, and there is no one more patriotic than I am, and I would be one of the first to resent an insult to the flag. But you men, who are taught self-restraint in your academy at West Point, should have practiced it. This man was intoxicated when he passed the remark, and I find you guilty."

V. FYLES DIES OF POISON.

Dramatic Critic Takes Bichloride of Mercury by Mistake.

Vanderheyden Fyles, 38 years old, a dramatic critic and writer living at 170 West Seventy-fourth Street, died yesterday of bichloride of mercury poisoning in a private sanitarium at West End Avenue and Seventy-seventh Street. Mr. Fyles was under the care of Dr. John C. Moore of 136 West Ninety-second Street, who said he had taken the poison by mistake. Mr. Fyles, he said, has been suffering from severe pains in the ears and he had directed him to use the poison externally in hope of gaining relief.

On Monday morning, according to the physician, Mr. Fyles suffered severe pains and took the bichloride tablets, believing them to be headache tablets. Yesterday morning he suffered severe pains, and when he realized the mistake he had made summoned the physician.

Mr. Fyles contributed articles about the theatre to a number of newspapers outside of New York as well as to a number of magazines. He was the son of the late Franklyn Fyles, a dramatic critic.

WILLIAM S. PORTER DEAD.

California Oil Man Had Been in Poor Health for Several Years.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 10.—William Sterling Porter, Vice President and General Manager of the Associated Oil Company of California, died at a hospital here last night, following a stroke of apoplexy. He was 49 years old. Besides his executive position with the Associated Oil Company, he was Vice President of the Amalgamated Oil Company and was associated in the directorate of several other oil concerns.

Mr. Porter had not been in good health for some years. In September, 1909, after a conference with Judge R. S. Lovett, then the newly elected Chairman of the Executive Committee of the board of directors of the Southern Pacific Railroad, he staggered out of the office and fell unconscious. He was taken to a sanitarium, and later recovered from what was said to have been an attack of vertigo.

In April, 1910, in company with George C. Priest, he organized the Central Fuel Company, a $15,000,000 corporation. This company held options on a large acreage of Oklahoma oil lands, and it was announced would contract to furnish fuel for the Southern Pacific. Through Samuel Untermyer much of the capital for the company was raised in London, and here it was said at that time that Mr. Porter's associates represented a group of oil men only second to those of the Standard Oil Company.

ERASMUS TEACHERS GO TO POUNDS'S AID

ADAMSON STANDS FIRM

Fire Commissioner Again Points Out That His Experts Believe the Structures Are Unsafe.

Borough President Lewis H. Pounds of Brooklyn is beginning a determined fight to save the old wooden buildings of the Erasmus Hall High School, which have been declared unsafe by the experts of the Fire Department. Mr. Pounds, who has said that he considers the buildings reasonably safe and who wishes to avoid the putting of the school's 3,500 pupils on half time, which he thinks would follow from the sending of the 1,400 now accommodated in the wooden buildings to join the others in the new fireproof building, has made a request that he be heard by the Sinking Fund Commission when that body takes up the request of the Board of Education for permission to tear the buildings down. The matter may come up at the commission's meeting tomorrow.

Mr. Pounds has also pointed out to the Board of Education that Fire Commissioner Adamson, in his letter of July 30, did not order the buildings torn down, but merely expressed his judgment that they were unsafe and left the question of their removal to the Board of Education.

"I have told Fire Department officials," said Mr. Pounds last night, "that I do not consider the wooden buildings unsafe and that I am basing that opinion on the judgment of experts quite as good as any the Fire Commissioner has in his department. These men, who are engineers and architects and have done a good deal of work in removing fire risk in other buildings, have been through the frame structures at Erasmus and do not find them unsafe. They have suggested a few things that might be done for added security, such as the installation of a wire system which would give instantaneous alarm on the outbreak of fire, but they do not seem to think these are essential."

When Fire Commissioner Adamson returned on Monday from a few days' absence from the city he found waiting for him a letter under date of Aug. 4 from President Thomas W. Churchill of the Board of Education, inclosing a letter from Mrs. Frank Stoll, one of the principal teachers of the school. Mrs. Stoll had written to Mr. Churchill, who told her that his department was following out any suggestions made by the Fire Commissioner, and that she would have to write to the latter if she wanted to put in a word for the wooden buildings at Erasmus.

After detailing the improvements that have been made in the wooden buildings and expressing her opinion that this insures a high degree of safety, Mrs. Stoll asked that execution of any order for the destruction of the buildings be "postponed for at least six months." She explained that the Faculty had spent two weeks' work after school was out, in addition to extra work for the last two months of last term on the part of the Principals and head teachers, in programing the students for the coming year, and had finished this work so that the next year could start smoothly. If the students in the old buildings were thrown into the new ones, she explained, all this would have to be done over in a great hurry, to the considerable detriment of the school.

"Discouraged students will leave Erasmus without notification," she said, "and will demoralize the organization of other Brooklyn high schools by seeking admission in large numbers. If postponed until Feb. 1, 1916, the Faculty could prepare to open a new term on time without the use of the frame buildings."

In the Commissioner's reply to Mr. Churchill's accompanying letter he said: "Regarding the belief of the teachers at Erasmus that the buildings are safe, Chief Kenlon, Chief Lally, Chief Bergin, and Chief Dougherty of the uniformed force and Chief Hammitt of the Bureau of Fire Prevention have given their opinion that the buildings are not safe and should be abandoned as soon as possible. In view of the fact that these men are experts of long experience, I feel compelled to accept their view in preference to the views of those of less experience in matters of this kind. I do not believe the ordinary layman understands the tremendous rapidity with which fire may spread in a wooden building of this style.

"Her next point is that if the wooden buildings have to be abandoned it would cause a great deal of extra work and confusion. I regret this as much as any one possibly can, but if the verdict as to the safety of the buildings is correct, then the Fire Commissioner and the Board of Education would not be justified in permitting the buildings to stand merely in order to avoid the extra work and confusion referred to.

"As you, of course, understand, I have not reached a decision in this matter except after long and careful consideration. I have had every desire to do nothing to inconvenience either the Faculty or the students of this great school, but, in view of the unqualified opinions of men of the uniformed force upon whom I have to rely in such matters, I cannot assume the responsibility of consenting to the continued use of these buildings."

This is rather stronger language than has been used in any of the Commissioner's previous letters. The Fire Department has not asked that the buildings be torn down—only that their use be discontinued. The request to the Sinking Fund Commission for permission to remove them was made by President Churchill as soon as he found that the Fire Department considered them unsafe.

CAPTAIN WRIGHT HURT.

After hearing damaging evidence aginst himself, Henry Goldberg, an east side gangster, 20 years old, of 235 Forsyth Street, interrupted his trial for murder before Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions yesterday to enter a plea of guilty to manslaughter in the first degree. Goldberg is accused of killing "Moshie" Rubenstein, another gangster, in Allen Street last March. Judge Mulqueen accepted his plea and immediately sentenced him to twelve years in Sing Sing.

Goldberg's accomplice in the murder, Izzy Presser of 125 Orchard Street, announced his desire to plead guilty to manslaughter in the first degree, and he was sentenced to Sing Sing for twelve years and ten months.

The defense in the trial of Goldberg broke down after the jury heard the testimony of Mrs. Lena Blank of 183 Allen Street, in front of whose home the shooting had taken place.

"Presser, Goldberg, and another man met Rubenstein in front of my house," testified the witness. "They shook hands with him. Presser and Goldberg drew revolvers from their pockets and Goldberg shot Rubenstein in the stomach. Rubeinstein fell to the ground and, Presser leaning over him, fire two shots into his head. Then Goldberg and Presser walked away."

BRIDE LOYAL TO PRISONER.

C. H. Lang, Arrested on Honeymoon, Held for Grand Jury.

A dejected-looking bridegroom, Charles H. Lang, 22 years old, was taken by Detective Markey to Police Headquarters yesterday on a charge of stealing $1,200 worth of jewelry from his sister, Miss Marie Lang of 145 West Twelfth Street. His 16-year-old bride, whom he married while both were spending a vacation near Narrowsburg, N. Y., on July 31, accompanied him from that town on his trip yesterday with the detective, and later sat among the spectators in Jefferson Market Court when Lang waived examination and was held in $1,000 bail for the Grand Jury.

Lang's arrest was brought about by the New York police after his mother, Mrs. Charles Lang, and his sister had reported that the jewelry was missing from their apartment. A bell boy said Lang visited the apartment during their absence. The police learned of Lang's whereabouts when his wedding was reported in Narrowsburg, and the police there were instructed to arrest him. The sister said yesterday that she received a letter from her brother containing pawn tickets for the jewelry and asking forgiveness. His young bride, before her marriage, was Miss Katherine M. Hehn, daughter of Anton Hehn, a Flatbush market owner. She said yesterday that she would "stick to him."

Rabbi Joseph Silverman of the Temple Emanu-El announced the winners of the contest for the best essay, which was participated in by the boys of the alliance. The interest of a perpetually endowed fund, established by Jacob H. Schiff in memory of his father, is given to the boy who submits the best essay. Professor Israel Friedlaender of the Jewish Theological Seminary delivered an address, praising the memory of Moses Schiff, and also predicted an early era of peace for the warring nations in Europe.

MURPHY GETS NAMES FOR COUNTY TICKET

Edward E. McCall and Other Leaders Tell Him to Nominate Perkins.

FOLEY WITHDRAWS SMITH

Ex-Sheriff Convinces ex-Speaker of Mighty Drawbacks to Job That Pays $135,000 for Two Years.

Charles F. Murphy and more than twenty district leaders were at Tammany Hall yesterday to discuss a slate for the Fall campaign. Three names were mentioned for District Attorney: Charles A. Perkins, the present incumbent; Thomas W. Churchill, President of the Board of Education, and Judge Edward Swann of General Sessions.

It was said that Edward E. McCall has told Murphy it would be good politics to nominate Perkins. According to one story, McCall was allowed to remain as Chairman of the Public Service Commission upon his promise to Governor Whitman that he would do all in his power to have Tammany nominate Perkins. Many of the Tammany leaders are opposed to the Tammany nomination for District Attorneyship going outside of the organization.

President Churchill had backers, but several of his friends said he would not be a candidate for the office under any circumstance. Mr. Murphy's personal choice, it was said, is Judge Swann.

One thing definitely decided at yesterday was the elimination of Alfred E. Smith, former Speaker of the Assembly, as a candidate for Sheriff. Tom Foley, leader of the Second District, where Mr. Smith lives, told him he was entitled to the nomination and that he could have it, but he strongly advised him not to take it. Foley said:

"It is true that you will get about $125,000 for the two years of the job, but everybody in the district will know how much you are getting and the demands upon you will be enormous. This will mean that you will come out about $10,000 or $15,000 ahead, unless you want to give them all the marble heart. Also, you can get out of the district and live uptown, but that will mean deserting all your lifelong friends. Take it from me, the office isn't worth such a sacrifice."

Smith was told that several of his friends were keeping him in mind for the nomination of Borough President in 1917. At any rate, Foley told Murphy yesterday that Smith would not consider the nomination for Sheriff.

It was the first time Murphy has been at the Fourteenth Street headquarters all Summer. He stayed several hours.

"It is too early to talk politics," was all he would say to the reporters.

The Gansevoort Market Business Men's Association adopted resolutions yesterday recommending by independent petition the nomination of Judge Edward Swann of Special Sessions for District Attorney. Signatures to the petition will be received at the association's headquarters, 51 Little West Twelfth Street, until the required 1,000 names are obtained. John Buckle is President of the association.

LAWYERS HAVE CANDIDATES.

Committee to Put Justices Clarke and Greenbaum in Primaries.

A non-partisan committee, made up in part of the Bar Association and the New York County Lawyers' Association Judiciary Committees, announced its plans yesterday to bring about the nomination of Justices John Proctor Clarke, Republican, and Samuel Greenbaum, Democrat, for another term by all three parties at the coming primaries.

The committee purposes to obtain on the nominating petitions signatures of 1,500 enrolled voters of each of the Republican and Democratic parties and 600 voters enrolled in the Progressive party. Yesterday's announcement, which invites all lawyers to join in the effort, is signed by Joseph H. Choate, Elihu Root, Herbert Parsons, George W. Wickersham, Job E. Hedges, William D. Guthrie, Louis Marshall, Edgar M. Cullen, Alton B. Parker, Morgan J. O'Brien, Henry A. Gildersleeve, Francis Lynde Stetson, and forty other lawyers.

The committee has drafted a letter which will be sent to other members of the bar, requesting their co-operation and inviting them to become members of the General Committee. The committee's letter says, in part:

"The function of the committee will be confined to the renomination and reelection of Justices Clarke and Greenbaum. The committee will contend for the maintenance of the principle that Judges who have served for a full elective term and shown legal scholarship, ability, impartiality, industry and independence ought to be renominated and reëlected upon a non-partisan basis, that they ought not to have to seek renomination or be under obligations to any party or group for their reëlection, and that the members of the bar, who are of all citizens best able to judge in such a matter, should take it upon themselves to secure their renomination."

Edgar M. Cullen is Chairman of the committee; William M. Chadbourne, Treasurer; John Caldwell Myers, Secretary, and James Byrne, Chairman of the Finance Committee.

DAVENPORT DOOMS MOOSE.

Says This Is a Two-Party Country —War May Re-elect Wilson.

In an article in the current number of The Outlook, entitled "The March of Political Liberalism," Frederick M. Davenport, last year's candidate for Governor on the Bull Moose ticket, who recently announced that he had gone back to the Republicans, says no third-party movement will have any chance of success in 1916. He asserts that the path of least resistance for liberalism is to make the fight within the primaries of the old parties. He says, in part:

The permanence and dominance of third parties seem foreign to the political genius of the American people. This is a two-party country.

The Progressive Party accomplished two purposes: it palsied the power of the corrupt bipartisan machines and extended the range of freedom within party organizations. Let not the temporary recrudescence in some parts of the country of the old arrogance beneath the shadow of the world war and the world depression cloud our judgment about that. Bourbonism is badly hurt.

And the other purpose which the Progressive Party accomplished was the holding of a vision of national power and freedom and welfare, if only for an hour, before the eyes of a hundred millions of people. The platform of the party was a vision. No country ever could accomplish a program like that in one campaign. It is not in collective human stuff to work with such swiftness and vehemence. Step by step and day by day is the natural course of human progress.

In the separate States the great majority of the four millions who voted for Roosevelt will probably enroll in the primaries of the old parties, most of these with the Republican, although a considerable percentage will undoubtedly go into the Democratic ranks.

So far as the Presidency is concerned, the European war may in a flash re-elect Mr. Wilson. But, disregarding that, if the Republican Convention next year violates, by candidate or platform, the spirit of liberalism which is in the West, the outlook would be dubious for the Republican nominee. A majority of those who voted the Progressive Party ticket in 1912 would, in my judgment, directly support Mr. Wilson in 1916. And Mr. Wilson would be re-elected, though he might have to run far in advance of the Democratic vote upon Congressmen to accomplish it.

Mr. Davenport ends his article by saying that between the West and the leaders of commerce and industry in the East a union of sympathy and effort would be of immense advantage to the nation.

BULL MOOSE APPEAL TO ROOT.

Ask His Influence in Killing Proposals Affecting Party Machinery.

The New York County Committee of the National Progressive Party sent a letter yesterday to Elihu Root as President of the Constitutional Convention urging him to use his influence in the convention "to prevent the passage of any constitutional amendment that will deprive the Legislature of the State of New York of the power to control party machinery and party government, and to further such proposed amendments as shall direct the Legislature to continue the enactment of laws providing for the direct nomination of public officers."

A demand is also made for "genuine home rule." The Progressives also hit at William Barnes's proposed amendment to the election laws.

HARTFORD GIRL LOST ON WAY TO NEW YORK

NO TRACE OF HER IS FOUND

Elvira Guidone, the sixteen-year-old daughter of Dr. Ralph G. Guidone, an Italian specialist, living at Lincoln Court, Washington Street, Hartford, Conn., disappeared from a train somewhere between this city and Hartford yesterday, and all efforts on the part of the police and her friends to trace her have failed.

She was put on the train leaving Hartford at 8:36 A. M. for New York, where she was expected to visit her cousin, A. L. Guidone, living at 2,445 Grand Avenue. Mr. Guidone said he had received a letter from Miss Guidone saying how pleased she was to come, and he went to meet her at the Harlem station at 125th Street at 11:30 o'clock yesterday morning.

When she failed to arrive he called up the doctor in Hartford to learn if his cousin's plans had been changed at the last moment. Dr. Guidone said he had bid his daughter good-bye at the Hartford station that morning and had no idea what could have become of her. He suggested that she might have got off to visit her aunt, Mrs. Sorentinos, of Bridgeport, but the latter, when notified by telephone, declared she had not seen her niece.

Conductor Manning, who was in charge of the train from New Haven to New York, remembered having seen a girl answering the description of Miss Guidone in the company of an old woman who had presented two tickets from Hartford to New York via Waterbury.

When he was told of this, Dr. Guidone said he knew of no friend of his daughter's who was on the train, and declared that her ticket had not been purchased by way of Waterbury.

Miss Guidone is a brunette, five feet two inches tall and weighing 123 pounds. When she left Hartford she wore a tan-colored suit, white laid shoes, and a leghorn straw hat. She carried a black Gladstone bag and a white polo coat.

FIRE LOSSES DECREASE.

Chief Kenlon Reports 257 Fewer Alarms in Second Quarter.

A decrease of 257 fires for the second quarter of this year, as compared with the corresponding quarter of 1914, is shown in Chief Kenlon's report for that period submitted to Fire Commissioner Adamson yesterday. The total losses show a decrease of $331,320. There were 3,137 fires during the second quarter, with a total loss of $1,284,454.

During the quarter 3,486 alarms were received, of which 349 were false or unnecessary. The department used 17,422,225 gallons of water in putting out fires.

On June 30 the uniformed force consisted of 4,966 members, with the exception of 74 chief officers, of whom ten were medical officers.

$375,000 TO STUDY PORT.

Controller Recommends Commission to Suggest Improvements.

The Committee on Port and Terminal Facilities, of which Controller Prendergast is Chairman, has submitted a report to the Board of Estimate concerning a proposal for a comprehensive study of the present harbor and railway terminals, suggesting ways of improving the port so that the railway and shipping interests may be assured. The report recommends the appointment of John F. Stevens, Chief Engineer of the Panama Canal from 1905 to 1907, and Vice President of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, in charge of operations, from 1907 to 1909, as one of the members of a commission to study the question.

Other members of the commission recommended are George Fillmore Swain, Professor of Civil Engineering, Graduate School of Applied Science, Harvard University, and William C. Loree, who has been connected with many railroad corporations, and who retired from railroad service a year ago. It is estimated that the cost of the commission will be $125,000 a year for three years. The report says that two years will be about the time necessary for the completion of the work.

DISCUSS FLEET'S WAR ZONE.

Officers Gather at Newport Naval College to Talk Over Plans.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Aug. 10.—As many officers as could be spared from the ships of the Atlantic Fleet assembled at the Naval War College this morning to discuss the war game which will take place off Block Island next week. Half of the fleet will defend the coast hereabouts, while the remainder will try to "destroy" it.

Admiral Fletcher will direct the war game. Next Monday all the ships of the fleet, save the submarines, will depart for the war game, returning the following Friday. They will then remain until Aug. 23, when they will leave for the Southern Drill Grounds for manoeuvres en route and annual target practice.

Following this target practice the fleet will return to the Atlantic Coast, where another big war game will be held, for which the Naval College is preparing plans.

APPEAL FOR A FAMILY.

Forty dollars a month is not a bad wage for a seventeen-year-old boy, but it does not go far when there are seven younger brothers and sisters, a delicate mother, and an aged grandmother to provide for. The church gives $3 a week, and the Charity Organization Society $50 a month, of which $19 is for rent, $9 for milk, and the balance for food. Next December a brother, who will then be 16 years old, but whose progress in school has been slow, will be able to secure his working papers and help share the burden. In the meantime about $250 is needed to keep this large family united in their own home—which is the best place for them, especially the children. Gifts toward this amount may be made payable to the Charity Organization Society and addressed to its office at 105 East Twenty-second Street.

The society acknowledges, with thanks, the following contributions sent in response to previous appeals in THE TIMES for other families: Mrs. Adolf Liebmann, $15; C. H. J., $15; T. J. R., $5; Mrs. F. G. S., $2; Mrs. T. A. G., $20; Mrs. C. Hulsman, $1; Mrs. F. C. Whittelsey, $30; F. T., $1; Edward B. Sexton, $10; Mrs. Edward B. Sexton, $5; Henry Wollman, $2; Cash, $1; Anonymous, $10.

Large users of building space please note

Unless you have been extremely fortunate, you have at some time had to lease more space than your business required, simply because the distribution of floor space did not permit of your getting exactly what you needed—in other words, you were compelled to lease some useless space to get some useful space, and you had to pay for both varieties.

No such condition obtains in the Equitable—the interiors are so designed as to permit of the utmost flexibility, and you can lease the exact amount of space you need, without being under the necessity of paying for a solitary useless foot.

MAKE BITTER FIGHT ON BUDGET PLAN

STIMSON URGES REFORM

Warns Delegates That State Must Practice Economy — Tammany Spokesmen Head the Opposition.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 10.—Tammany Democrats and Republicans of the reactionary type in the Constitutional Convention joined hands today in an attempt to defeat or weaken the new budget plan proposed by the Committee on State Finances. When the convention adjourned at 11 o'clock tonight a vote on the motion to advance the proposal had not been reached. The vote, it is expected, will be taken tomorrow and the leaders of the convention predict that the proposed new plan will go through.

The attack on the measure from the Democratic camp was led by Senator Robert F. Wagner and ex-Speaker Alfred E. Smith, Tammany's leaders in the Legislature. Democrats like John B. Stanchfield, De Lancey Nicoll, and William F. Sheehan supported the reforms proposed by the committee in speeches from the floor.

Throughout the night session President Elihu Root occupied a seat in the body of the convention. He was watching, with a view of taking a hand in the fight for the proposed amendment if the critical stage was reached. Lemuel E. Quigg was the only Republican of first importance to speak in opposition to the committee plan. He assailed it on the ground that it would shatter tradition and "demolish the bulwarks" which have kept separate and distinct the three departments of government in American Commonwealths.

Mr. Quigg addressed himself almost exclusively to a provision of the new article which would give the Legislature the power to ask the Governor and other State officers to explain items in the budget bills. The Democratic opposition as expressed by ex-Speaker Smith was directed against the failure of the new proposal to hobble the Legislature by a two-thirds vote requirement in the enactment of so-called "pork-barrel" bills.

While under the Finance Committee plan the initiative in budget making is shifted from the Legislature to the Governor, there is nothing in the proposal to prevent the Legislature from initiating this sort of financial legislation to its heart's content.

A note of defiance against President Root and the other convention leaders who are strong in their support of the committee proposal was sounded tonight by Edward J. Byrne, a Brooklyn Democrat.

"We heard this afternoon that the fagots had been cut, that the fire was burning in the forum, that Rome had spoken and that there was nothing more to say," said Mr. Byrne. "I do not believe that a deliberate body of this character will be silenced by the voice of any member or group of members, no matter with what prestige their words may come."

Mr. Nicoll, in speaking for the amendment, said that while it would not settle the riddle of the universe, and while men could not be made over by a constitution, the plan would provide an automatic check against legislative extravagance.

Stimson Leads the Fight.

The debate on the budget article monopolized the attention of the convention today. Henry L. Stimson, Chairman of the Committee on State Finances, under whose auspices the article had been drafted, led the fight for the measure. He spoke for nearly three hours. He showed how the expenditures of the State had increased from $7,000,000 in 1885 to $42,000,000 this year, and asserted that, with the limit of revenues from indirect taxation undoubtedly reached, it would be necessary for the State to curtail its expenses in order to prevent an increase in direct taxation, which in the end would spell bankruptcy and ruin.

"We are facing a $60,000,000 budget next year, and the direct tax can be kept down only by keeping down expenses," said Mr. Stimson. "Legislatures have been equipped all these years with the power necessary to do that, but have shifted responsibility to the Governor, who every year after the Legislature has adjourned has been compelled to veto many millions of appropriations recklessly made by the lawmaking body. Now we propose to reverse the plan and place the power of initiating the budget with the Governor, whom the Legislature has compelled to bear the responsibility, and place the veto power with the Legislature, where it should be. We feel that our plan will keep the direct tax rate at or below its present level.

"Not only the Legislature but the Controller, under the plan proposed, will act as a critic and check on the administration.

"How much time was afforded for discussion of the appropriation bills in the Legislature this Spring? Scarcely any, for the final draft came out only on the same Sunday morning that it was finally passed just prior to the final adjournment of the Legislature. Why, it was not even before the legislators in its final printed form. Not even the leaders knew what was in it."

Mr. Stimson insisted that the Legislature inherently was not qualified to initiate the budget.

"A legislator," Mr. Stimson said, "represents only a district. His viewpoint is that of the district he represents. That local viewpoint will continue to exist as long as a legislator is forced to regard himself as the attorney for his particular constituency instead of the servant of all the State. And in the Legislature that spirit of mutual accommodation, sometimes unpleasantly referred to as log-rolling, will continue to manifest itself. This condition will prevail as long as you put administrative duties in a legislative body, just as long as men are men and Legislatures are Legislatures."

Alfred E. Smith, the former Tammany Speaker of the Assembly followed Mr. Stimson. The Stimson plan, he said, failed to reach the root of the evil—the special and local appropriation bills.

"In the appropriations of this year, the regular items for the support of Government aggregated some $32,000,000," he said. "The items embodied in special and local bills aggregated $31,600,000. About 80 per cent. of the amount involved in the general appropriation bill is immutably fixed by statute. Only about 20 per cent. is subject to reduction by the Legislature.

"The principal defect of this plan is its failure to limit the power of the Legislature in connection with the passage of special and local appropriations, where it is charged log-rolling occurs. This plan will not prevent log-rolling for it leaves the Legislature free to initiate special and local appropriation bills after the general appropriation bill has been enacted."

Mr. Smith read from the record of the last session the titles of a number of such bills which had been passed by the Legislature and signed by the Governor.

"Some of these bills have been introduced so often that there is no further need of introducing them," Mr. Smith said amid laughter. "Just leave them about somewhere in the document room and they, from sheer force of habit, will find their way to the bill box at the Speaker's desk without assistance. I tell you they know their way about the legislative halls—these same special bills."

Mr. Smith urged that the Constitution be amended so as to require a two-thirds vote for the passage of special appropriation bills. He urged the adoption of constitutional provision prohibiting State officials from contracting obligations in excess of their appropriations on the ground that the present statutory prohibition is no deterrent. He wanted the budget estimates made by department heads sworn to by these officials, and he also said that the budget should be prepared not by the Governor but by the Controller.

"The Governor," Mr. Smith asserted, "may be said to be personally interested in the appropriations and not always on the side of economy where departments are concerned, of which his personal appointees are in charge. The Controller, on the other hand, does not appoint any department heads and is not personally interested in the budget. The Controller has the financial experts in his office, so that in any event the Governor would be dependent upon the Controller's office for all the information required in connection with the making of the budget."

Ex-Senator J. G. Saxe, another Democrat, said that he would support the Stimson plan enthusiastically, if it were amended so as to eliminate the provision requiring the Governor to appear before the lawmakers and explain the budget when requested so to do by either house.

Wagner Fears Executive Power.

Senator Robert F. Wagner, Democratic leader of the upper house, indorsed the changes recommended by Mr. Smith, but said that it was a mistake to shift from the Legislature to the Governor the power of budget making.

"You are creating a king—that's what you are doing," he said, "by taking the powers now vested in the representatives of the people, who are human beings, and vesting them in a superhuman being of your own creation. You will find out before long if this plan goes through that the same weaknesses exist in the Executive Chamber that exist in the legislative halls."

Mr. Wagner said that it was not the present system of budget making, but great projects which the people had ratified at the polls, such as the Barge Canal, the assumption by the State of the care for the insane, the creation of the Palisades Park, and other costly undertakings of that nature, that were responsible for the increase in State expenditures.

Mr. Wagner urged that the budget article be amended to require the Governor to make his decision on all local bills fifteen days after the opening of the legislative session.

President Jacob Gould Schurman of Cornell University said that his experience as the head of an institution which spent about $2,500,000 annually had convinced him that the "executive budget" made for good administration and sound business methods and that the State should adopt it.

T. J. FOSTER FIRM FAILS.

Receiver Appointed for Dupont Railway and Land Company.

Special to The New York Times.

SCRANTON, Aug. 10.—One more of the Foster-Connell-Griffith promotions has gone into the hands of a receiver, another will be placed in that position tomorrow and, according to the announced intentions of T. J. Foster and his associates, many more concerns will go into the hands of receivers during the balance of the month unless the stockholders are willing to put up a cash assessment on their holdings.

The Dupont Railway and Land Company, capitalized at $2,500,000, was placed in receivership today in the Federal Court in Florida. The properties and assets of this company are located at Dupont, Fla. It was announced by the Directors of the Tippecanoe Securities Company today that an application would be made tomorrow morning to Judge Wittmer in the Federal courts here for a receivership for this company, which holds all the common stock of the Dupont company. The officers and Directors of the two companies are the same.

SAVED BY MOTORMAN'S WIT.

Little Girl Pushed Off Track Ahead of Speeding Train.

James Lavelle, a motorman of the B. R. T., was running a four-car train from Coney Island to Manhattan on the West End Line last night at 9 o'clock, when he saw a little white figure toddling along a short distance ahead of the train. He had just rounded the curve where Tenth Avenue crosses New Utrecht Avenue, which had prevented his seeing the figure sooner. He perceived that the figure was a girl about 4 years old.

The motorman blew the train's whistle, but the child seemed to ignore it. He put on the emergency brakes. It was too late for them. The child was only a few yards ahead, with her back to the train. Leaping from his walled-off compartment and lying flat upon the front platform of the car he gripped the rail on the platform for support and leaned far out. He reached the position just in the nick of time, and with a vigorous push hurled the child from before the train, which would have been on her in another second.

The little girl was struck a glancing blow by the shoe which runs on the third rail, as the train sped by her. She was picked up a few moments later somewhat bruised and with her face badly scratched, but it was believed she was not seriously injured. She was taken to the Norwegian Hospital for the night, while the police of the Fourth Avenue Station sought her parents. She was unable to tell her name or address.

NAVY EMPLOYE MISSING.

When Last Seen Wireless Operator Said He Had Been Robbed.

Carl Bruce Rowd, for eight years an electrician and wireless operator in the United States Navy who returned from Panama two weeks ago, has been missing since Saturday, according to information received by the Brooklyn police last night from a friend of Rowd's, Dr. H. P. Stevens, a dentist, of 64 Court Street.

Dr. Stevens said that Rowd returned from Panama with $300, and has since been staying with some people on Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn. Last Saturday he told the doctor that he was going to a public bath. He had $200 with him then. Rowd returned later, declared Dr. Stevens, saying that he had been robbed and was going out to find the money. He seemed very much disturbed over his loss.

Dr. Stevens said that Rowd's home was in Hermiston, Ore., where he lived with his mother and brother.

FINDS A MINE IN THE SOUND.

Lobsterman Hooks Container Marked "Explosive" in Steamer Lane.

What appeared to be a floating mine, labeled "168 pounds explosive," was found off Execution Rock in Long Island Sound yesterday by Adelbert Van Wicklen, a lobster fisherman of Port Washington, L. I. The mine was in the path of Sound steamers and pleasure boats and it was supposed that it had broken loose from its moorings near Willets Point. Van Wicklen found it entangled in his lines while he was tending lobster pots off Execution Light and notified the officials at Fort Totten.

Colonel Hearn, commanding at Fort Totten, said last night that he had ordered an investigation, but that it was not customary to leave loaded mines in harbors in times of peace. Pending the investigation, he said, he could give no opinion as to what the mine was, where it came from, or whether it really was loaded.

Woman Grapples with Intruder.

Returning from a store yesterday forenoon, Mrs. Gertrude Schneider of 224 Metropolitan Avenue, Williamsburg, detected a man who, she says, was trying to get into her flat with false keys. The woman grappled with him, but he succeeded in getting away. As he reached the first floor he was confronted by a number of tenants, who blocked his path to the street. The fugitive retreated to the roof and then ran to a vacant apartment at 222 Metropolitan Avenue, where a policeman arrested him. He said he was Jerry Jinnott, 19 years old. He was taken to Manhattan Avenue Court and remanded without bail.

PAY RAISED A HALF AND MAY BE DOUBLED

Chemical Companies Share War Profits with Employes—Men Move in Local Strike.

GARY, Ind., Aug. 10.—Employes of the Aetna Chemical Company and the Aetna Explosive Company of New York, which operate plants at Aetna, a suburb of Gary; Thebes, Ill., and Ishpeming, Mich., have received a guarantee of wage increases of 50 per cent., and the companies say the employes probably will get a further increase of 50 per cent. if the European war last beyond next December.

Effective Aug. 1, the employes receive a voluntary increase of 10 per cent. in wages, and a similar monthly increase will be made for five months. If, at the end of that period, the war still continues and the experiment is a success, monthly advances will continue until June 1, 1916, when the workers will be receiving 100 per cent. increase over today's wages.

Several thousand men share in the increases.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 10.—The Bosch Magneto Company of this city, employing 1,000 men, announced today that on and after Sept. 2 the company would operate on the eight-hour day basis, instead of 9½ hours, as at present. The reduction in hours will be made with increases in the present piece work wage schedules. This will mean that the men will receive as much pay for eight hours as they now receive for 9½ hours. This is the first independent industry in the metal trades here to establish the eight-hour day.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 10.—The action of Mayor Clifford B. Wilson in forbidding certain labor leaders to address a mass meeting of employes of the Locomobile Company of America on a plot of ground near the factory last week was declared legal under the charter by Deputy Judge Frank L. Wilder today, who found the labor men guilty of breach of the peace. They were each fine $1 and costs, with sentence suspended, as the court said this was a test case. The men, who were arrested last Thursday, were George J. Bowen, Business Agent of the Machinists' Union; ex-Alderman Frederick Cederholm, and Louis J. Nelson.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Aug. 10.—The machinists of the Spicer Manufacturing Company met last night and decided to give the plant until Thursday to grant the 8-hour day, on pain of a probable strike. Seven hundred men are affected. A majority of the local shops have placed the shorter day in operation.

C. V. GUNTHER A SUICIDE.

Stock Broker, Victim of Breakdown, Fled from Sanitarium.

The body of Charles V. Gunther, until recently a stock broker with an office in the Wall Street district, was found in a room of the hotel at 1,530 Third Avenue last night, after the odor of escaping gas had been traced to his room. Gas was flowing from a jet, and the windows and door had been stuffed with paper. Near his body was found the following note:

"I am C. V. Gunther, and my telephone number is 297 Mamaroneck."

The body was identified at midnight by his brother, J. J. Gunther of 48 East Eighty-first Street. It was said that Mr. Gunther, who was 37 years old and married, with two children, has suffered a breakdown recently and had been confined in a sanitarium in Stamford. He escaped from the sanitarium on Monday, it was said, and an alarm was sent out in this and neighboring States for him.

At the hotel it was said that Gunther registered there Monday. In his pockets were found $64, and he had taken to the room a monkey wrench and a screw driver, which it was supposed he had intended to use to loosen the gas jet if the flow of gas was too thin. Gunther leaves a large estate near Stamford. He was a son of the late Charles B. Gunther, a stock broker, who died in 1910.

Ignatz Malinoski, a farmer of Holyoke, Mass., 50 years old, went to Police Headquarters here yesterday morning to ask aid in a search for his runaway wife, who is 22 years old. The farmer said he married the woman, whose first name he gave as Victoria, ten weeks ago and settled with her on his farm in the outskirts of Holyoke. The bride soon tired of rural life, he said, and pursuaded him to sell the farm. He disposed of the property for $1,700, and gave the money to his wife to deposit in a Holyoke Bank. She took the money and disappeared with it on last Saturday, he said.

Malinoski added that his wife had written to her sister in Holyoke since her disappearance, saying that she intended to sail from Hoboken at noon yesterday for Rotterdam on the steamer Rijndam. He was advised to communicate with the Hoboken police, which he promised to do.

'I'M LOST,' GIRL SAYS.

Catherine Murray Tells Police She's 14, but Looks 10.

A little girl, expensively dressed, last night walked up to Policeman Dougherty of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station and told him she was lost. She said she was Catherine Murray, 14 years old, and that she could not remember where she lived. She did not look as if she was more than 10.

Dougherty took her to the station, where she told the Lieutenant that she was left an orphan several years ago in the care of a guardian, and that the guardian eventually turned her over to another family, who deserted her.

The police, however, are inclined to think that she wandered away from home, and that perhaps she may have come from Long Island via the Queensboro Bridge. She was turned over to the Children's Society.

CHINATOWN HAS NEW MAYOR

Yee Wong Ging Arrives from Canton to Assume Office.

A spare little Chinaman with a wrinkled, grinning face and close-cropped gray head, alighted from a taxi-cab last night at 15 Pell Street, where he was greeted by a number of Chinatown's influential citizens. Yee Wong Ging, as he is known, has just come all the way from Canton, China, to assume his religious and civil duties as Mayor of Chinatown, which title Chinatown dwellers have bestowed upon him in the place of Yee Bow Kong, who died last April.

The mayor is a priest when he presides over the Joss House and a Judge when he settles the various disputes of the inhabitants of Chinatown. To hold office he must have received the approval of the Chinese Consul here.

SEE BIG INVASION FILM.

'Battle Cry of Peace' Given in Washington Before Leading Officials.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Government officials, officers of the army, the navy, and Marine Corps and many others gathered at the National Press Club tonight to see a film production, "The Battle Cry of Peace," written by Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, which will be exhibited throughout the country to arouse interest in the necessity of preparedness for war. Commodore Blackton announced that the film would be shown at the Naval War College at Newport before the officers and men of the Atlantic Fleet, and later would be exhibited to the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, the Governors and legislators of every State in the Union, and in practically every city, town, and village in America. The plan of campaign was so complete, he said, that 50,000,000 people would see the film story before Congress convened in December.

Included in the film is a representation of an imaginary invasion of America through New York City. Enemy battleships are shown approaching New York's land fortifications, whose guns they outdistance, and there are pictures of the appalling effects of the explosion of big shells in the congested districts of New York, hostile airmen dropping bombs into the heart of the city, the march of the columns of the enemy through the streets of Manhattan, preceded by panic-stricken crowds of Americans, and scenes of violence in American homes. The film story is punctuated with striking assertions, among them that the available mobile army of the United States is only twice as strong numerically as New York City's police force.

Among the names on the list of sponsors for this film campaign are those of Secretary of War Garrison, Admiral Dewey, Major Gen. Leonard Wood, and the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott. Tonight's audience at the Press Club included Postmaster General Burleson, Senators Pomerene, Martin, Shields, and Clapp, Chairman Hay of the House Military Committee; Lieut. Gen. S. B. M. Young, Major Gen. T. H. Bliss, Assistant Chief of the Army General Staff; Major Gen. J. F. McCain, Adjutant General of the Army; Brig. Gen. William C. Crozier, Chief of the Army Ordnance Department; Paymaster Gen. McGowan, and Judge Advocate Gen. McLean of the Navy; Colonel J. A. Lejeune of the Marine Corps, and many other military and naval men.

FIVE HURT IN AUTO UPSET.

Two Philadelphia Men May Die from Injuries.

EGG HARBOR, N. J., Aug. 10.—An automobile containing five men, all of Philadelphia, turned turtle in this place this evening, and two were so badly hurt they may die. All five were thrown out of the machine and injured.

Those the car were Max Lauri and Joseph Fischer of 527 North Eighth Street; Joseph Diamond, 607 Callowhill Street; Max Louis, 605 North Tenth Street, and William Singer, 431 Franklin Street.

Louis suffered a broken right arm, gashes on the head and face, and probable internal injuries. His condition is critical. Fischer is thought also to have been internally injured. He was also cut and bruised about the head, face, and body.

The other three suffered bruises and cuts, but were able to aid their two companions when they regained their feet. The auto, which was wrecked, was making a turn at high speed, when it skidded and went over, burying Lauri and Fischer beneath it and throwing the other three men several feet. A passing automobile hurried the five men to a physician's office.

RAID NOTED ALBANY RESORT

Police Swoop Down on the "White House" and Arrest Proprietor.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 10.—Two spectacular raids on gambling houses on opposite sides of James Street, near Steuben Street, were made by Captain John Patten and a squad of police of the Second Precinct this afternoon.

Acting under direction of District Attorney Harold B. Alexander, Henry H. Spery, a private detective of Schenectady, obtained the information on which the police acted. One of the places was the White House, known the country over, and the other was that of the Eastern Telegraph Company.

About thirty persons were in each place when the police entered. These were allowed to go after their names were taken. The persons arrested were those in charge, owners or their representatives. They were held in bail. The police took away several wagon loads of gambling paraphernalia.

FINDS LONG-LOST HUSBAND.

De Vaux Disappeared Six Years Ago —Wife Has Him Arrested.

On May 16, 1909, which was Sunday, Felix de Vaux and his wife, Mayme, went to mass as usual. Afterward they went back to their home at 15 Marshall Street, Newark, and after a little while de Vaux put on his hat and told his wife he was going out for a smoke. He never came back.

In due time the police were notified and there began a long search, which ended in the almost total expenditure of Mrs. de Vaux's means. Notices were published far and wide in newspapers and trade organs of the jewelry business, in which he was engaged; police and private detectives busied themselves, and Mrs. de Vaux made constant visits to all the hospitals and morgues in the metropolitan district. Her friends were convinced that he had gone away willingly, perhaps even with another woman, and a Grand Jury indicted him for abandonment; but his wife never lost her faith in him and would never believe anything but that he had been a victim of violence or of some mental disorder.

De Vaux's mother and sister, who live at Woodhaven, L. I., professed to have heard nothing of him and to have no idea as to why he disappeared. For six years they remained on friendly terms with his wife, and visits were exchanged frequently. Yesterday Mrs. de Vaux went out to Woodhaven for luncheon and found some evidence—just what, she would not say—that led her to believe that her husband was living at 241 West Eleventh Street, Manhattan. Giving no indication to her hostesses that her suspicions had been aroused, she came back to town and with a Newark friend visited the house and found that the suspicion was correct.

Then she went to Police Headquarters and asked Lieutenant Farley to recover the man she had mourned as lost for more than six years. Farley said he had no right to arrest him in New York, where he had committed no crime, but on learning that de Vaux was still under indictment in New Jersey he told Mrs. de Vaux to communicate with the police of her home town.

A few hours later County Detective Wyman of Newark telephoned to the New York police, and Detectives Rasberg and Shea of the First Branch went to de Vaux's apartment and arrested him, with his wife waiting across the street for her first sight of him since the May morning when he went away.

De Vaux refused to talk. He was living alone, and there is no clue as to why he left his wife.

CITY BREVITIES.

Policeman John P. Soden of the Charles Street Station was wounded yesterday by a bullet that struck him in the leg after glancing from the skull of a horse shot by an officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The bullet passed through the fleshy part of the policeman's thigh.

The body of Christian Feldman, a peddler's helper, who lived at 337 East Ninety-fifth Street, was found floating in the East River at the foot of 102d Street yesterday. From bruises on the body it was at first thought that the man had been murdered, but it was afterward found that he had fallen from the pier.

The Christian Aid Society acknowledges the receipt of $10 for the Sick Children's Mission from J. E. G., Jersey City Heights.

Louis Leszofsky, 10 years old, of 339 East Forty-fifth Street, fell from the roof of his home last night to the bottom of the airshaft and suffered a fracture of the skull and a compound fracture of the right leg. He was removed to Flower Hospital.

TRACE SUICIDE'S HISTORY.

Denver's Man of Mystery an Adventurer from Munich.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Aug. 10.—The investigations of the police have cleared up much of the mystery surrounding the man who was known as Count Richard von Millar, whose body now lies in the morgue. The man, under arrest for passing bad checks, leaped from a fast train last Wednesday and received injuries which caused his death. Dispatches from Milwaukee this morning identified the man of mystery. These dispatches said that he was Richard W. von Weinmann, son of Leopold von Weinmann of Munich, Germany.

The Milwaukee advices said that the man was an adventurer, disgraced in his own country, and a constant source of worry to his parents, persons of prominence in Munich.

The manager of the hotel who caused the arrest of von Millar said today that the hotel proprietors would give von Millar burial in Riverside Cemetery. The manager said that the hotel would pay all the funeral expenses. The motive, it was asserted, was humanitarian.

TO APPEAL FOR OIL LANDS.

Southern Pacific Will Take Fight to Higher Courts.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 10.—An appeal to both the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and the United States Supreme Court is in preparation today by attorneys for the Southern Pacific Company from a decree rendered here yesterday in the United States District Court by Judge Bean of Oregon restoring to the public domain more than 6,100 acres of oil lands in Kern County. Millions are said to have been produced in petroleum from the property, which is situated in one of the heaviest oil-producing sections of the State.

The decision settles on its merits one of the first of the original oil land suits brought by the Government against the railroad. It was instituted five years ago, after similar suits had been disposed of on a demurrer. Patents issued to the railroad company in December, 1904, covering the Elk Hills properties were canceled by the decree.

The following trust deeds were also declared by the court null and void: One to the Central Trust Company of New York of Sept. 13, 1893; a supplemental deed of Aug. 18, 1898; another to the Equitable Trust Company of New York of Jan. 3, 1905, and still another to Homer S. King and James K. Wilson, surviving trustees of a group in whose favor a deed was executed April 1, 1875.

KIDNAPS A STREET CLEANER

Broker Bundles Him Into a Taxi as a Joke and Is Arrested.

Charles Smith, 29 years old, of 452 Fort Washington Avenue, and four other brokers played a practical joke last night. They kidnapped Alphonse Pirase, 45 years old, of 1,114 Thirty-eighth Street, Brooklyn, a street cleaner who is employed by the Brokers' Association in Wall Street, and carried him off in a taxicab. The ride began at Wall and Broad Streets as Pirase was on the way home. The street cleaner got into the cab without objection, but he strongly opposed being carried past the entrance to the Brooklyn Bridge. The brokers refused to let him get out and carried him on. He expostulated so violently that the driver of the taxicab stopped at Broadway and Seventy-second Street to learn the cause of the disturbance.

Pirase immediately jumped to the street and Smith sprang after him. Policeman Donohue saw them dodging about the cab and arrested both for disorderly conduct. When they were arraigned before Magistrate Appleton in the Men's Night Court, Smith said that he had been joking. As the street cleaner refused to have Smith sent to the Workhouse for thirty days, both were discharged. The other brokers went off in the cab while Smith and Pirase were being arrested.

FIGHT FOR BANK CHARTER.

Rival Factions in Great Neck Ready to Start New Institution.

Rival factions of financiers are enlisting support among business men and residents of Great Neck for the establishment of a State bank in the vicinity of Great Neck station. There is now a bank in Great Neck Village, but it is several miles from the station. Both factions have made application for a charter, and the Banking Department will hold a public hearing to decide which will get the charter.

One faction has chosen the name of the Plaza Bank of Great Neck Station, with a capital stock of $25,000, and the proposed incorporators are Dr. George H. Dowsey, Albert J. Magee, Jose E. O'Kelly, George Uhl, John B. Vandereven, Leslie Wears, Frank R. Howe, and Charles H. Stoll.

The second group has chosen the name of the Bank of Nassau County, its proposed capital is $50,000, and the proposed incorporators are Walter E. Frew, Roswell P. Eldridge, Daniel E. Wooley, Joseph P. Grace, and J. Louis Schaefer. Mr. Frew is President of the Corn Exchange Bank of this city.

STABBED, SEEKS REVENGE.

Wounded Ironworker Arrested as He Goes in Search for Brother.

Royal Keller, 19 years old, an ironworker, of 227 West Sixty-seventh Street, was in the centre of a fight at Amsterdam Avenue and Sixty-second Street shortly before midnight last night, and when his three assailants ran they left him lying on the sidewalk with three stab wounds in his back. Policeman Allmendinger of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station took him to Roosevelt Hospital in a delivery wagon, where it was found his wounds were not serious. Only a few minutes later Policeman Hughes of the same station saw him at Amsterdam Avenue with a suspicious bundle under his arm, and found it to be a butcher's cleaver.

"I'm going to get my brother," he said, when asked for an explanation. Hughes locked him up on a concealed weapon charge.

At the time of his rescue he disclaimed all knowledge of his assailants, but bystanders said he had had a bitter quarrel with his brother during the afternoon.

NO ROCK ISLAND HEARING.

Interstate Commerce Commission Denies Application of Directors.

It was learned here yesterday that individual Directors of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, which went into receivers' hands in April, had applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for a reopening of the hearing bearing on the receivership. This application, made formally by lawyers who were sent to Washington, was denied. This came out on the heels of reports from Washington that the Department of Justice had instructed the Federal District Attorney at Chicago to conduct a Grand Jury investigation of the circumstances immediately preceding the receivership.

The ground for a re-opening of the hearing, according to a representative of local Rock Island officials and ex-officials, was that evidence had been discovered tending to show who was responsible for the rapid rise of the Rock Island stock on the New York Stock Exchange just before the receivership and after the receivership papers had actually been drawn up.

The inferences cast at the investigation conducted several months ago at the request of N. L. Amster and Samuel Untermyer were that "insiders" had rigged the market at a time when they knew that a receivership had been decided upon. Testimony was adduced to show that a number of the Directors had sold out their holdings at the highest price in the course of the rise.

According to the Rock Island spokesman, however, the men and firms really responsible for the rise in the stock have been found. It was said that three men figured in the stock buying and that one of these men had accumulated 18,000 shares.

The lawyers who went to Washington, it was said, offered to produce witnesses who would swear that they had bought the stock in large quantities on the assumption that Rock Island was a good purchase. According to the story told yesterday these men lost heavily on their speculation.

WEEK'S EXPORTS DECLINE.

Compared with Previous Week, They Showed a Drop of $6,000,000.

Exports fell off sharply in the week ended Aug. 7, compared with the week before, according to the Custom House report issued yesterday. Outward shipments for the week amounted to $29,158,310, or more than $6,000,000 less than the total of the week before. In the corresponding week of 1914 exports totaled only $12,071,056. Exports at this port to date for the year were reported yesterday at $825,424,948, against $547,281,299 the same period last year.

England took war supplies and general merchandise valued at $10,328,105, while exports for France were manifested at $6,777,511. Shipments to the British Possessions reached $2,323,738, while Italian shipments totaled $1,452,360. Russia's purchases of war munitions, motor trucks and other supplies reached $1,313,641. These goods were forwarded by the Far Eastern route, while shipments to Archangel totaled $358,263. In some manner unexplained at the Custom House, supplies were shipped to Turkey in Europe worth $567,563. Exports to the Netherlands were down to $350,477. Goods for Arabia were manifested at $113,478.

Exports to the Scandinavian countries were unusually heavy during the week. Shipments to the Philippines had a value of $480,429. Cuba took merchandise worth $837,561. The Argentine led the South American countries with exports valued at $814,125, while Brazil came next with shipments valued at $775,074. Mexican exports amounted to $350,477, an improvement over many former weeks. Panama's exports were valued at $277,057.

Exports of domestics for the week totaled $600,744, while cotton duck shipments had a value of $139,284. The largest exports of domestics to any single country were to the Philippines, which had a value of $229,316. Arabia came next with $110,920. The British Possessions bought domestics worth $65,462. England was the largest buyer of duck, with shipments valued at $82,013. The next largest amount went to the Argentine, its value being $18,171.

Railroad Stocks Notably Strong Some Industrials Also Advance Despite Reaction.

The most noteworthy phase of yesterday's trading on the Stock Exchange was the strength of a number of the railroad stocks. Several of the stocks which had been bid up most vigorously on war orders were reactionary throughout the session, but a number of industrials, under the lead of United States Steel, moved forward. The advance in the railroads was the more noteworthy, both because of its greater novelty and because the railroads, for the first time in a long period, assumed yesterday the role of market leaders.

The two main factors which supported this movement, other than the general influence of the growing belief in a better period for the railroads, were the excellent crop report of the previous day, which promised large tonnage for the granger lines, and the renewal of the reports from Washington that the Commerce Commission's decision in the Western rate case would be in favor of the railroads. No time has been set for the publication of that decision, but it is looked for at an early date. These were sufficiently important influences to arouse greater interest in the railroads among traders, and they gave a larger share of attention to those issues than they had on any day since the war stocks began to absorb their interest to the practical exclusion of other things.

Price movements were more irregular than on many earlier days of the advance. This was in part due to internal and in part to external causes. There appeared to be under way a good deal of profit taking in some of the war stocks, and this at last had the effect of halting the rise in other parts of the list. This reactionary tendency was increased by the interpretation put upon the latest advices from the Russian area of the war. Indeed, the talk which is going about that Germany might be able to force a separate peace with Russia had something to do with the day's reaction in certain of the war stocks themselves, for it was argued that that would lead to a cancellation of some of the war orders. It would in a broader sense be regarded as bad market news, and this talk, therefore, exerted reactionary effect when it was pointed with the news of further German successes in Russia. This influence was not controlling, however, and the advance was resumed after the reaction. The market did not close at the best prices of the day, but the list showed many good net gains.

The special influence in the industrial list, and more particularly in the market for United States Steel, was the corporation's report of unfilled tonnage on August 1, showing an increase of more than 250,000 tons during July. That was above the estimates current last week, although when the stock was showing great strength before the tonnage figures were given out it came to be rumored that the increase would amount to 500,000 tons or more. That was unlikely in view of the increased rate at which the mills have been working, and the increase actually recorded is, as a matter of fact, very satisfactory.

The good news contained in the crop report, which bears most directly on the railroads, but hardly less importantly on the industrial situation, was favorably supplemented yesterday by the Department of Agriculture's figures showing the composite condition of the crops. It was not only well above the ten-year average, but it was also above the condition on July 1, showing that neither the major crops reported on the previous day nor the crops as a whole underwent the deterioration which was feared during July. We will again have a great abundance of farm products out of which to sell a large surplus to Europe. The problem which Europe faces is not to obtain supplies here, but to pay for them here.

The shipment of gold to New York direct from London which is now under way shows how awkward the situation is for our European customers, for they are giving up gold which they greatly need and sending it to us, who do not need it at all. It is hardly likely, however, that shipments of gold will be made to take the place permanently of the credit which it has been proposed to establish here. England would have to denude herself of gold to cover all the purchases which are being made here in excess of the goods which are being sold here by Europe. The probability is that eventually England will borrow here on American securities. In anticipation of such a step, the Bank of England has been buying American bonds in the English market.

U. S. STEEL TONNAGE GAINS.

Unfilled Orders Increase 250,000 Tons in July.

The monthly statement of unfilled orders on the books of the United States Steel Corporation as of July 31, made public yesterday, showed a total of 4,928,540 tons, an increase of 250,344 tons, as compared with the total on June 30. This was better than had been looked for, in view of the greatly increased scale of production, although over-optimistic reports which gained circulation shortly before the report appeared put the increase over June at a much larger figure.

On May 31 the unfilled tonnage was 4,264,596 tons and on April 30, 4,162,244.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

A Real Bull Market.

Those who have been finding fault with the character of the bull market that has been under way, owing to its convergence upon the war stocks to the neglect of the more important issues, had no fault to find with yesterday's million-share session. For the first time in weeks there was shown an active interest in the standard rails. In fact, the best gains of the day were scored by transportation stocks, while the most marked of the few declines for the session were in the two leading speculative war stocks, Bethlehem and Crucible, the first losing 3 points and the latter 8⅝. NEW RATE FOR FELT PADS.

To be 10 Per Cent. Higher Because Not Fit for Roofing.

The Treasury Department has notified Collector Malone of a change in the classification under the Tariff act of felt pads measuring about 7⅞ by 8¼ by 1 inches, composed of cattle hair, tarred, used in the construction of railroads and buildings as moisture absorbers and for deadening sound. The Treasury officials have been conducting an investigation from which it appears that it has been the practice to classify this merchandise as roofing felt carrying a duty of 5 per cent. ad valorem under Paragraph 320.

The investigation disclosed to the satisfaction of the department that the thickness of the merchandise renders it incapable of use as roofing felt. In general composition, it appears, it is similar to adhesive felt for sheathing vessels, but on account of size and thickness it is excluded from the provision for sheathing felt, as commercial felt for vessel sheathing is in the form of sheets, 32 by 40 inches, and not over one-quarter of an inch thick. The tarring of the merchandise, also, the officials hold, renders it unsuitable for use like woven felts.

Assistant Secretary Malburn states that the department has reached the conclusion that the felt pads are apparently unenumerated manufactured articles. It is therefore ordered that at the expiration of thirty days the pads when imported or withdrawn from bonded warehouses shall be assessed at 15 per cent. ad valorem under Paragraph 385.

Ribbon Outlook Brighter.

Reports from Paris agree that ribbons will be exceedingly well featured in the coming fashions. Graduated ribbons are being shown on costume and dress models by practically all the leading style creators. The yardage of ribbon to be required by the new styles will undoubtedly call for a large production. So far, actual business in the ribbon trade has shown very little improvement as a result of these favorable reports from the French fashion centre, but the tone of the market has become better and the outlook more promising.

Chinese Need Mechanical Supplies.

The local branch of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has received copies of specifications for telephone material, machinery and parts that are wanted by the Ministry of Communications, Department of Telegraphs, Post and Navigation, Peking. Among the machines wanted is a large printing press for newspaper and job printing and similar work. Other requirements of the Chinese Government include aerial telephone cables, cable heads, two-clamp arms, &c. American firms interested in making bids for these supplies may obtain full information and look over the specifications by applying to E. C. Porter, agent in charge, Room 409, Custom House.

About the Shoe Situation.

It may be of interest to know, according to the Morse & Rogers bulletin, that while the back-lace shoe had a short life and was the laughing stock of the shoe business, one dealer on Fifth Avenue, who made a specialty of them, sold more than a thousand pairs during the Spring and early Summer and is buying some more for Fall. Many buyers who came to the city from the extreme West recently bought a few of these shoes as the latest novelties. The bulletin also says that the sale of misses' and children's shoes in regular heights is increasing, and that black kid button shoes for women, in the gypsy cut, are selling well. The call for men's rubber-heeled shoes is reported to be increasing.

Coal Trade Is Still Quiet.

The Coal Trade Journal will say today that unless the demand takes a sudden and unexpected spurt, August will be another month of light tonnage movement in the anthracite trade. If the present rate of production continues, the total will be about the same as in July, when shipments dropped slightly below the 5,000,000-ton month. This was somewhat under what has come to be considered a normal tonnage for that month, although the comparison is not so unfavorable as in several of the earlier months. Perhaps the most encouraging feature about the bituminous situation is the fact that consumers are beginning to take a little more interest in coal. The number of inquiries coming in by mail has increased of late, and salesmen find it not quite so difficult to get buyers to listen to the propositions they have to advance.

Men's Wear Mills Well Sold Up.

Sellers of men's wear piece goods believe that if the orders for lightweight goods they are now taking can be held, the mills they represent will be well occupied for the Spring manufacturing season. Ordinarily, sellers would make allowances for the usual amount of cancellations, but overselling at the present time is regarded dangerous. All the mills are not fortunate in having dyes enough to last them for a year's time, and the less fortunate ones are not willing to accept orders for deliveries which they may not be able to make. The demand from the clothing trade is well distributed, and the lines of all-worsted fabrics that have been opened are meeting with as much favor as has been accorded to woolens. Serges are not as strong as sellers would like to see them, but there has not been as great a loss of business on this staple as it was first anticipated would be the case.

Gray Goods Buying Fair.

There was a fair amount of business done on staple gray goods here yesterday, the bulk of it being on printcloths. Sales for delivery during the next two months were made on these constructions: 39-inch 80 squares at 5⅝ cents, 38½-inch 64-60s at 3⅝ cents, 38½-inch 64-56s at 3⅝ cents and 38½-inch 60-52s at 3⅝ cents. There was little, if any, contract business done on these goods, mills being unwilling to sell past Oct. 1 at present figures. Sheetings and drills were featureless, but business on fancy and special goods was said to have kept up well. Staple printcloth prices follow:

Importers Will Protest Today.

The Hotel Biltmore Executive Committee of Importers, of which P. J. Cunningham of Dezell & Helwig is Chairman, completed final arrangements yesterday for today's meeting to protest against the British embargo on the shipment of German and Austrian goods purchased by American merchants. In order to make the meeting more fully representative, exporters have been invited to join the importers in making their demands plain to the Department of State. The chief speakers will be Lee Smith, United States Senator from Georgia. It is understood that he will demand that the United States place an embargo on the exportation of arms and other war supplies for the Allies unless Great Britain agrees to allow trading between this country and neutral ports in non-contraband goods. The meeting will be called to order at 2 o'clock. Mr. Cunningham will preside.

Record Peach Crop in Sight.

All indications at present are that the 1915 peach crop of the United States will be the largest in the history of the country. According to a commerce report, the 58,000,000 bushels reported on July 1 showed an increase of 8 per cent. over last year's figures for the corresponding period, but it is thought that the final extent of the crop, when completed, will be greater than is indicated by these figures. Many of the larger producing areas will have substantially increased yields, in some of which there was a dearth last year, while in the entire country there is only one district—Colorado—in which the crop is noticeably shorter than in 1914. As the fruit of several of the big producing districts will be ready for consumption at about the same time, the marketing problem involved will be one requiring the most expert attention, according to the report, in order that the distribution may be made to the best advantage.

Burlap Market Is Steady.

As yet there has been no evidence of excitement in the local burlap market as a result of recent cables from Calcutta saying that the British Government had commandeered from a third to a half of the output of the burlap mills of that city from Oct. 1 to the end of the year. Business is not large here on staple goods, either light or heavy. The bulk of the buying activities of the last week or so have been more or less centred on the odd widths and weights. Prices continue firm at recent levels, and, in the opinion of at least one experienced burlap man, there is little chance of their going much higher. This opinion is voiced in the face of the fact that the Calcutta market is reported excited and that prices are stronger there as the result of the reported Government action. These spot and near-by arrival prices were quoted here yesterday on forthcoming goods: 7½-ounce, 6.15c.; 8-ounce, 6.25c.; 10-ounce, 7.65c., and 10½-ounce, 7.75c.

Drawback Payments Increase.

As the war progresses, the Treasury Department is being called upon by domestic manufacturers to pay a continually increasing amount of drawback on imported raw materials used in the manufacture of exported goods. The demands for drawback now being made indicate, according to Customs officials, that manufacturers here are finding markets for their products which did not exist abroad up to the outbreak of hostilities. While at present the largest sums are being paid by the Government to American automobile manufacturers on account of war orders, other lines are making a strong showing. Last week's official list of drawbacks, for instance, affected such export goods as flavoring extracts, cleaned currants and package dates, Panama hats, rice, hosiery, automobiles, motor trucks, and parts, confectionery, honey syrup, toilet and medicinal preparations, pillow slips, scarfs and cigarettes.

B. & O. PLACES MORE ORDERS

$1,000,000 Will Be Spent for Rails and Hopper Car Bodies.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Aug. 10.—The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad announced today that it had placed contracts with several steel mills for 17,000 tons of steel rails and with car manufacturers for 1,000 steel hopper car bodies for immediate delivery. The material covered by the contract will cost about $1,000,000.

Practically all of the rails will be of the heavy type, weighing 100 pounds to the yard, and will be used for replacement on the company's Chicago line. The new steel car bodies, which are of 100,000 pounds capacity, will be placed on trucks rebuilt at the company's own shops, and for practical purposes are equivalent to new cars.

Announcement of the orders today supplements contracts placed the middle of July for 2,000 steel hopper cars and 50 passenger cars, costing approximately $2,500,000, and which with the present order bring the total cost of Baltimore & Ohio's recent equipment purchases up to $3,500,000.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Silk and Cotton Pincushions Are Dutiable as Artificial Fruit.

It was decided yesterday by the Board of General Appraisers that Blake, Moffitt & Towne, San Francisco, had failed to prove that certain paper under protest was generally recognized throughout the trade as "common paper-box board." The paper in question was classified by the Collector as cardboard, with duty at the rate of 25 per cent. ad valorem under the specific provision in the present tariff law for such merchandise. The importers insisted that the proper rate should be 5 per cent., under the paper-box board provision but Judge Fischer held that they failed to prove the Collector's classification erroneous, and the Collector was affirmed.

Mogi, Momonoi & Co. were overruled in claims relating to artificial fruit, which was returned for duty at the rate of 60 per cent. ad valorem under the provision in the present tariff for "artificial and ornamental fruits." The articles were claimed to be dutiable at 50 per cent. ad valorem as manufactures of silk or at the rate applicable to manufactures of cotton. As made up, the articles consisted of an outer covering of colored silk inclosing cotton. The testimony was to the effect that the goods are used as pincushions. Taking into consideration former rulings of the board, Judge Waite held that no mistake was made in the duty levied.

G. W. Sheldon & Co. lost in an appeal against the Collector's action of imposing an additional duty on antimony. The facts in the case, as brought out in the testimony, are that on an importation of antimony while the 1909 tariff was in force, the entered value was advanced 20 per cent. by the Appraiser, from whose action the importers took no appeal. The merchandise, however, was not withdrawn for consumption until after the passage of the present Tariff act. Under the provisions of the act in effect on the date of importation, the advance then made imposed no penalty on the importers, as their goods were then subject to a specific rate of duty.

Under the present act, however, which was in force at the time of the withdrawal, the goods were subjected to an ad valorem duty, and if imported thereunder would undoubtedly, as conceded by the importers, be liable to a penalty of 1 per cent. each 1 per cent. advance. In the light of these facts the importers contended that no penalty could be imposed legally by reason of the advance made by the Appraiser at the time of importation, when no penalty attached under the then existing law, and that to penalize the importation now would in effect be a retroactive, and consequently an allegal, act. Judge Fischer disagreed and held that the provisions of the old act applied to importations made under it, but withdrawn for consumption under the new law.

Charles H. Wyman & Co., St. Louis, failed in a contention that linen crash with fancy borders should be given entry at 30 per cent. as plain woven fabrics of flax. The Collector was affirmed in returning the goods at 35 per cent. ad valorem, under the provision for manufactures of flax.

WHEAT.

The wheat market contains so many unusual elements that the trade is somewhat bewildered regarding probable future price changes. Monday's Government report indicated by far the largest yield ever produced in this country, but while the prospects of tremendous supplies have created a very bearish sentiment, there is in reality very little actual wheat available with which to do business. The market yesterday declined 1 to 1¾c early in the day under selling on the brilliant crop prospects, but the decline was brought to a sudden halt by the absence of offerings and later the market experienced an advance of 1⅞c to 2¼c, closing at ⅛ to ¼c net advance. In the local cash market No. 2 red Winter wheat was quoted at $1.19 cost, insurance, and freight. New York spot and No. 2 hard, $1.27½ cost, insurance, and freight, New York to arrive; No. 1 Northern Duluth, $1.12¼, and No. 1, Northern Manitoba, $1.09½, cost, insurance, and freight, Buffalo.

CORN.

Prices in the corn market were ¼@⅜c lower early in the day under moderate selling on the Government report figures, but offerings of cash corn were very light, with little or no pressure from the country, and during the day a firmer tone developed and final quotations were ⅜@⅝c net higher. In the local cash market No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at 89½c, lake and rail, prompt shipment.

OATS.

The oats market followed much the same course as wheat and corn, prices opening lower and closing firm, with net gains of ⅛@⅜c. The Government report figures were considered bearish, but there was little pressure on the market and shorts were nervous. The local cash market was steady; standard quoted at 66¼c; No. 2 white, 67c; No. 3 white, 66½c; No. 4 white, 65½c; fancy clipped white, 69@69½c; ordinary clipped white, 66@69c, all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market was quiet and easy during the first part of the day under moderate liquidation and in absence of more than a quiet demand, but toward the close a firmer feeling developed in sympathy with grain. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 9,000; estimated for Wednesday, 22,000; Kansas City received 9,000 and Omaha 7,800.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The market for cottonseed oil was easy during the forenoon under scattered selling prompted by the action of lard and the decline in the cotton market, but toward the close there was a partial rally on covering, due to the rally in lard, and final prices were 3 to 5 points net lower.

COFFEE.

Tremendous receipts at primary points took precedence over all other features in the coffee market yesterday, and prices were weak and lower. There was further liquidation in September, and that position declined to 6 points under December, after having been selling on an even basis. Early in the day there was pressure throughout the entire list, but toward the close there was a little better demand for the late months, and final prices ranged from 6 to 11 points net lower. Total sales for the day were 46,750 bags. The local spot market was quiet and unchanged, with Rio 7s quoted at 7¼c.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts for week, 64,277 packages; last week, 68,068 packages. Exports for week to Europe, 400 packages; to other countries, 625 packages. The market has advanced from the low point reached early last week. An active out-of-town demand and more export inquiry have been the chief causes of the reaction. Exporters have picked up several thousand tubs of butter here, much of it high-grade stock. At the higher prices ruling at the close trade has quieted down, and exporters are again holding off, and there is some doubt that present values can be long maintained. Creamery, extras, (92 score,) 26½@26¾c; higher scoring, 27@27½c; firsts, 24@26c; seconds, 23½@25¼c; thirds, 21½@22c; State dairy, finest, 25½@26c; good to prime, 23½@25c; common to fair, 20@23c; renovated, extras, 23@23½c; firsts, 22@22½c; lower grades, 20@21c; imitation creamery, firsts, 22@22½c; ladles, current make, firsts, 20½@21c; seconds, 19¼c; lower grades, 18@19c; packing stock, June make, fine, 20c; current make, No. 2, 18½c; lower grades, 16@18c.

EGGS.—Receipts for week, 75,038 cases; exports for week, 4,000 cases. Arrivals decreased considerably toward the close, and with a fair movement to the trade, due to effect a reduction in the accumulations outside of cold storage. The market continued extremely irregular as to prices. There was pressure to clean up ordinary and poor qualities, for which comparatively low figures were still accepted. But good to fine qualities ruled firmer, and closed with the tendency in sellers' favor and a better average of sales. A large part of the current supply of Western eggs is selling at a range of 17@20c, with seriously defective lots ranging downward, but higher qualities are commanding better prices, ranging up to 22c for occasional cars of fine Northern candled and graded stock, though exceptional qualities commanding still higher prices. Scarcely anything doing in storage eggs and values uncertain. There are offers to sell prime to choice early packed at a range of 22@23½c. Nearby eggs in light supply and fancy qualities have improved, market closing strong for the highest grades of nearby stock. Fresh gathered extras, per dozen, 23½@25c; extra firsts, 21@23c; firsts, 19@20¼c; seconds, 16½@18½c; thirds and poorer, 10@16c; dirties, No. 1, 14½@15c; No. 2 and poorer, 10@14c; checks, choice, dry, 13½@14c; fair to good, 12¼@13c; culls and inferior, 8@12c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery whites, fine to fancy, 32@33c; ordinary to good, 28@31c; gathered whites, as to size and quality, 24@31c; Western gathered whites, 28@28c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery browns, 25@28c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 18@24c; duck eggs, State and nearby, Indian runner, 24@26c.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD.

Wilson Estate Property, Forty-third Street and Fifth Avenue, Sold as Site for Sixteen-Story Commercial Structure—$200,000 Dyckman Deal—Builders Buy Ten Lots on Washington Heights.

Reported sold on several occasions during the past couple of years, the residence and property of the late Richard T. Wilson, on the southeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Forty-third Street, was finally disposed of yesterday to a building syndicate as a site for a sixteen-story commercial structure.

About $3,000,000 is involved in the transaction, making it one of the largest of the year. The purchaser is the 511 Fifth Avenue Company, incorporated at Albany last week and represented by Stoddard Mark. Among others interested in the corporation are Harris and Maurice Mandelbaum, who have been active builders and operators in the Washington Heights apartment house section.

The new structure, plans for which have been prepared by York & Sawyer, will be built by the Columbus Circle Construction Company. It is to be called the Guaranty Building, as the Guaranty Trust Company will occupy under a long-term lease the banking floor basement and first floor.

The plot fronts 62 feet 11 inches on Fifth Avenue by 108 feet on Forty-third Street and 123 feet on the southerly line.

For the operation the Prudential Life Insurance Company has agreed to make a loan of $1,250,000 to run for a term of twenty years, acting as both a building and permanent loan. The work of tearing down the old mansion and private stable on the property will begin at once, and it is expected that the new structure will be ready for occupancy in June, 1916.

The plans have been arranged to meet the requirements of the Guaranty Trust Company, which will rent the banking floor basement and first floor under a twenty-year lease. Negotiations are also reported for several other floors. The property is assessed for taxation purposes for the present year at $1,000,000 with the improvements, the assessment on the land alone being $1,000,000.

The property was transferred yesterday to the 511 Fifth Avenue Company for a consideration of $1,200,000, the company giving a mortgage of $1,150,000.

Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown Company, conducted all of the negotiations, and the sale, lease and mortgage. Stoddard & Mark represented the purchasers as attorneys, and James A. Edwards represented the Wilson Estate as their counsel.

$200,000 Dyckman Deal.

The Alliance Realty Company, W. H. Chesebrough, President, has sold the plot 150 by 100 on the north side of 214th Street, 200 feet east of Tenth Avenue. The purchasers, the H. M. Construction Company, (Messrs. Herman & Minskoff) will erect on the premises two five-story apartment houses, each seventy-five feet in frontage, of the most modern type. The entire operation will amount to about $200,000. Arrangements have been made with F. A. Snow for a building loan, and it is expected that Andrew J. Thomas will be the architect.

Most of the building in the Dyckman tract has centred around 207th Street and has been west of the elevated subway structure. However, the sale of this property for immediate improvement and the recent sales for improvement of property on 212th and 213th Streets by the City Investing Company, and the sale by Max Marx of property on 215th Street, all situated east of the subway, indicates that the builders and owners in this section are commencing to realize the possibilities of this area of unimproved land lying so convenient to transportation.

This is the third plot in the Dyckman district which the Alliance Realty Company has resold for a profit in the last two years. Arnold, Byrne & Baumann were the brokers in the transaction. The H. M. Construction Company is just completing a building operation on the corner of Valentine Avenue and 188th Street.

Syndicate Buys Ten Lots in Fort George Section.

One of the largest recent sales in the Fort George section of the Heights was reported yesterday by George V. McNally, who sold to a building syndicate for Mrs. Gertie A. Gorman a plot of ten lots for immediate improvement.

The property involved comprises a frontage of 125 feet on the south side of 190th Street and a similar frontage on the north side of 189th Street, beginning 125 feet east of St. Nicholas Avenue.

The buyers will form a new company for the improvement of the lots with four five-story apartment houses, each covering a frontage of 62.6 feet. The sale of the property is the first since 1872, when the father of the present seller acquired the land from Alfred N. Lawrence.

Although this is the first improvement on the block, a number of five and six story apartments are in course of construction in the immediate vicinity. M. S. & I. S. Isaacs represented the buyers.

Investor Increases West End Avenue Holdings.

Charles Noller has increased his holdings on West End Avenue by the purchase of 849, a five-story flat, on a lot 24.6 by 100, located between 101st and 102d Streets. A. M. Gleises, the seller, has held title to the property since 1904. Mr. Noller owns the adjoining property, a similar structure, and now controls a plot 49.9 by 100 feet.

Resale on Bradhurst Avenue.

Ennis & Sinnott, operators, have resold to Frank Merklee 25 Bradhurst Avenue, a five-story flat, on a plot 40 by 55 by irregular, located near 142d Street. W. J. Huston & Son negotiated the sale.

Tenement Property Deals.

An investor has purchased from Wolf B. Bornstein of Brooklyn 133-135 East 100th Street, a six-story new-law house with stores, on plot 37.6 by 100.11, adjoining the northwest corner of Lexington Avenue. The seller acquired the house in February, 1913.

Bronx Sales.

Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown Company, in conjunction with O'Hara Brothers, has sold for Elvie S. Wachenheim and Jessie E. Sempter the lot 25 by 100 feet on the west side of Briggs Avenue, sixty-six feet south of 196th Street. The buyer, K. A. Zimmerman, will improve at once with a store building.

Ten Brooklyn Flats.

Excavation has been started for ten apartment houses to be erected by the Rose Building Company, Brooklyn, N. Y., on the entire block located on the south side of Myrtle Avenue, from Epsilon Place to Delta Place, Brooklyn. Plans for this operation were filed by Maxwell A. Cantor recently.

Long Island.

Goldschmidt & Macdonald have sold for the Adams Realty Company to Percy Heineman a plot on Lafayette Place, 75 by 156, at Woodmere, L. I. The purchaser will improve the property by building a cottage for his own occupancy.

The Whitestone Realty Company has sold three lots at Kenmore, Whitestone, to Michael De Renzie of New Rochelle.

King S. Jones of Manhattan has purchased from William E. Keeling the plot 32.6 by 150 on the south side of Twentieth Street, 267 feet east of Eighth Avenue, Whitestone.

Private Dwelling Leased.

Douglas L. Elliman & Co. have leased for a term of years for the estate of Russell Sage, 35 East Sixty-fifth Street, a four-story dwelling on a lot 16.8 by 100, to Robert G. Hutchins, Vice-President of the National Bank of Commerce.

Real Estate Notes.

William H. Mills, who was located for some years at 503 Fifth Avenue, has become associated with S. Osgood Pell & Co. Mr. Mills is a member of the Real Estate Board of New York and Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Real Estate Association of the State of New York.

BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS.

The New York Times Mid-Week Pictorial contains pictures of the latest battlefields—scenes of victory and defeat, the terrible modern engines of destruction at work on sea and land and in the air; the personalities uppermost in the war news, the life of non-combatants under war conditions in many regions, the picturesque and notable localities brought into notice as the battle lines swing back and forth. On all news stands, ten cents. Times Square, New York.—Advt.

EDUCATION NOTES.

Vacation playground at P. S. 35, the Bronx, has been discontinued on account of poor attendance.

The Bureau of Buildings of the Education Board will reassign to duty five of the draughtsmen who were granted leaves of absence without pay owing to lack of work, but who will now be employed, as funds have been made available for the alteration of certain schools in the Bronx in the "Gary experiment."

Josiah H. Pitts will submit to the Board of Education today a statement of the administration of the fund for providing lunches to needy school children.

The Municipal Civil Service Commission has approved the naming of Associate City Superintendents Haaren and Shallow and Director Davis as a Board of Examiners for non-competitive classes in the education department. It has also approved the naming as institutional examiners of Hobart H. Todd for the New York Parental School and Mary N. Leonard for the Manhattan Truant School.

Pupils in P. S. 89, Brooklyn, where the Gary plan is being tried, will open this morning a vegetable market to the mothers of the neighborhood. The vegetables were raised by the children on a plot of land opposite the school.

An examination for inspector of foods (milk) has been ordered. The subjects are duties and experience. The duties are to inspect milk and all conditions and methods surrounding its production, distribution and sale, including the inspection of dairies, creameries, and pasteurization plants; to instruct farmers and dealers in the improvement and correction of conditions found to be contrary to the regulations of the Health Department. Candidates must have had particular experience in dairying or other equivalent experience. The age limits are 21 to 45 years. The usual salary is $1,200 a year.

United States.

The commission invites attention to the fact that for the open competitive examination for chief engineer in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, for which applications may be filed at any time, the maximum age limit has been changed from 45 to 50 years, so that hereafter applicants for this examination must have reached their twenty-fifth but not their fiftieth birthday on the date of the examination. Information in regard to the examination is contained in Form 1,250, which, together with the proper application form, may be obtained from the Secretary of the United States Civil Service Board, Custom House, New York.

OSBORNE TO STAY, SAYS WHITMAN

NO THOUGHT OF OUSTING HIM

ORR NOT AFTER THE PLACE

Has Better Office as Governor's Secretary—Church Club Praises Osborne.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 10.—"I have no intention of removing Thomas Mott Osborne from the Wardenship of Sing Sing Prison," said Governor Whitman in answer to the direct question by THE TIMES correspondent as he alighted from the train arriving late tonight from Plattsburg. "My mind is not different on the subject now from what it has been at any time. Warden Osborne is trying out a new plan of prison management, and it has been my purpose from the start to let his plan have a fair trial."

The Governor could not see why so much commotion had grown out of what he considered to be nothing. Superintendent Riley had performed certain acts, which were his right. Whether Warden Osborne liked them or not, it was within his superior's province to have them executed. The Governor made it plain that he had no intention of disturbing Superintendent Riley, and, further, that it was never in his mind to make William Orr, his private secretary, Superintendent of Prisons. Mr. Orr has a better place now, and gets a bigger salary, with fewer annoying details to look after than he would have if he were made Superintendent of Prisons.

The Governor said the Sing Sing imbroglio, if it could so be described, was not referred to during his visit to Cliff Haven or Plattsburg. His trip to Plattsburg was planned long before the clash occurred between Superintendent Riley and Warden Osborne. He had promised to visit the Catholic Summer School and Clinton Prison several weeks ago, and was simply fulfilling his promise.

HIGH PRAISE FOR OSBORNE.

Church Club, After Hearing Warden, Wires Governor to Keep Him.

Thomas Mott Osborne of Sing Sing was praised and applauded last night by about 400 prominent residents of Dobbs Ferry and vicinity at a meeting gotten up by the Men's Club of the Greenburgh Presbyterian Church to hear an address by the Warden. The meeting was held on the church lawn, and Dr. Robert Deniston of Dobbs Ferry presided.

The audience applauded frequently as Mr. Osborne told of the work he has been doing at Sing Sing and of some of the reforms he hoped to accomplish. He carefully avoided any reference to the recent controversy with State Prison Superintendent Riley. At the conclusion of his address he invited the audience to ask questions, but a man who had helped to organize the meeting said that he felt "satisfied that the Warden was doing noble work" and that no questions were necessary. Others agreed. A resolution was adopted unanimously making Mr. Osborne an honorary member of the Men's Club.

Another resolution, unanimously adopted, put those present on record as favoring Osborne's régime at Sing Sing, and it was voted to send a telegram to Governor Whitman urging him to retain Warden Osborne in office for the work he has done and hopes to do.

The only statement in his speech which those in the audience thought referred to the persons who the Warden has recently charged tried to discredit his administration by crooked methods was an assertion that "it is a pity that we haven't got all of the thieves inside of the prison."

Warden Osborne returned to Ossining shortly before midnight in his automobile. Before leaving he was asked by reporters if he had had any word from Governor Whitman concerning the recent quarrel over the management of Sing Sing, but Mr. Osborne said he did not think it wise for him to discuss the subject.

MUST HONOR SPLIT TICKETS

Commerce Commission Upholds Right to Check Baggage Through.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—The Interstate Commerce Commission in a decision today abrogated the proposed rules of railroads, which would have prohibited the through checking of baggage and sale of through parlor or sleeping car tickets on combination railroad tickets used in connection with joint fares from junction points.

For years travelers from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other trunk line territory going to points in the South and Southeast have checked baggage through to destination and have secured through Pullman car accommodations on combinations of tickets or split transportation to and from the gateways to Southern and Southeastern territory. The Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio Railroads proposed to abolish the practice for protection of their joint fares to conserve their revenues.

The rules were to apply to combinations of all forms of tickets issued by the roads and by their Southern connections to and and from the gateways involved, but were aimed mainly at combinations involving the use of mileage books of Southern railroads or Southeastern Passenger Association interchangeable mileage exchange orders which effect lower fares than the published joint through fares.

The commission held that no railroad receiving the equivalent of its full local fare to the junction, whatever the character of transportation accepted by the connecting line, may lawfully withhold provision for incidental services universally in demand. Commissioner Harlan dissented, saying the majority action permitted evasions of the through fare.

YEAR'S TRADE SUMMED UP.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—The final footings of official returns from all ports on foreign business for June, and the complete fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, show that imports fell off during the year by $219,755,917. The increase in value of exports for the year as compared with the previous fiscal year was $386,494,440. The trade balance in our favor for the fiscal year was $1,042,008,725. The large increases in June in the various lines of exports is shown in the following summary:

Crude materials for use in manufacturing	$32,872,355	$30,478,641
Foodstuffs in crude condition and food animals	11,047,074	25,954,226
Foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured.	20,075,216	46,394,585
Manufactures for further use, in manufacturing	31,755,039	40,242,472
Miscellaneous	285,102	10,698,278

The item of "miscellaneous" which increased over the business of 1914 embraces the horse and mule exportations for the month. Horses were shipped abroad to the value of $8,003,419, and mules to the value of $2,542,302. The value of horses shipped to Europe during the entire fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, and embracing ten months of the war, was $64,046,534, and of mules $12,726,143.

The trade balance for last week fell off more than $10,000,000 from that of the previous week. It was only $13,045,455, as compared with $23,975,871. Exports were $48,239,137 and imports $34,294,282. Duties collected amounted to $3,432,077, of which there was collected at the Port of New York $2,535,329. Cotton was exported during the week to the amount of 37,484 bales, making the total export since Aug. 1, 1914, 8,548,051 bales.

MRS. VOLLMER SUES MAJOR NOW IN WAR

Granddaughter of Clyde Line's Founder Asks for a Commission in Germany.

NAMES SHIP'S MANICURIST

Captain Vollmer, Formerly of Garden City, Has Been Promoted and Decorated with Iron Cross.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., Aug. 10.—Through the filing here of an order issued on Saturday by Supreme Court Justice Callaghan in Brooklyn, appointing a commission to take testimony in Germany, it became known that Mrs. Ethel Clyde Vollmer, a daughter of William P. Clyde, the capitalist and son of the founder of the Clyde Line, is suing for divorce from a Major in the German Army.

Miss Clyde was married at St. George's, Hanover Square, London, on Oct. 14, 1907, to Ernst Gottfried Vollmer, at that time a Field Captain in the German artillery. They lived for several years on the Jaegerallee, Potsdam, and in March of 1914 they came to the United States and leased a large house in Third Street, Garden City. Their two sons—Wilhelm P. C., aged 6, and Goetz G. C., aged 4—were with them.

In September of last year Captain Vollmer left New York and said he was going to the front. Since that time, according to Mrs. Vollmer's statement, she has received a number of letters from her husband, the last one on Jan. 19, 1915, in which Vollmer said he had been promoted to the rank of Major and had received the order of the Iron Cross.

On Feb. 5 Vollmer was served by publication with notice of his wife's suit for divorce. The papers show that Emma Steffen, who, in 1914, was a manicure on the liner George Washington, is named as co-respondent. She is believed to be in Germany, according to the statement made to Justice Callaghan by Cullen & Dykman, of 2 Wall Street, Mrs. Vollmer's counsel, in their request for the order for the appointment of the Commission.

The counsel for Mrs. Vollmer also told the Justice that their client relied almost entirely for information upon her sister-in-law, Anna Vollmer; Clara Morchardt, formerly a stewardess on the George Washington, and Molitor, a barber on the same ship. These three also are believed to be in Germany at the present time, and it is largely on account of this fact that Mrs. Vollmer wanted the testimony taken in Germany.

It is understood that she is anxious to get hold of some letters which Major Vollmer is alleged to have written to his sister, in which the name of the co-respondent, according to Mrs. Vollmer, is mentioned.

Mrs. Vollmer has named William Weckman to represent her in the taking of testimony by the Commission in Germany.

At the house in Garden City it was said today that Mrs. Vollmer and the children were in New Hamburg, N. Y., and would not return to Garden City until October.

HORTON ESTATE $2,876,955.

James Madison Horton, founder and President of the J. M. Horton Ice Cream Company, left a net estate of $2,876,955 when he died on June 26, 1914, according to the appraisal filed in the office of the State Controller yesterday by Transfer Tax Appraiser Kopp.

All but $15,000 of the estate goes in equal shares to the son, James C., and the daughter, Mrs. Mary Hope Lewis. There are bequests of $5,000 each to Mrs. Susan Robertson and James M. Horton; $3,000 to Horace T. Horton, and $2,000 to Burrie L. Horton, none of whom are related to the testator, according to the report.

The report contains a memorandum of an agreement entered into between the testator and other holders of the stock of the ice cream concern, Harry C. Horton, Chauncey E. Horton, Edward B. Lewis, Henry Grube and Joseph G. Umpleby. It is specified that at the death of a stockholder the surviving holders may purchase, pro rata, the decedent's shares at $3,625 a share.

The report also contains an affidavit by Harry C. Horton, son of the decedent, to the effect that he and his sister, Mrs. Lewis, are willing to sell their shares at less than $3,000 each. Between them they hold 171 shares, appraised at an aggregate of $619,875, or $3,625 each.

Items enumerated in the report show that the estate held stocks aggregating $1,120,195, the largest parcel of which was 3,200 shares of the preferred stock of the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Memphis Railroad, appraised at $224,000; a large list of bonds aggregating $1,643,431; notes and mortgages appraised at $109,531; and real estate at Yonkers, appraised at $84,000. There are minor holdings that aggregate about $10,000.

CADY SAYS HE FIRED HIGH.

Bayonne Police Inspector Held for a Death in $5,000 Bail.

Police Inspector Daniel Cady, of Bayonne, who was charged by Prosecutor's Detective William J. Charlock, before Coroner Burke's court Monday, with having fired the shot that killed John Steranesoak, 19 years old, in the Standard Oil strike riots in Bayonne on July 21, pleaded not guilty yesterday before Judge George G. Tennant in the Hudson County Special Sessions Court in Jersey City. Cady testified that he had fired high to intimidate the strikers and did not hit any one. His bail was fixed at $5,000, which was furnished by James Grady of Bayonne. His case will come before the Grand Jury in September.

At Coroner Burke's inquest last night in the case of Nicholay Inosskin and Basil Nierovekow, of Bayonne, who were killed on July 22 in the strike riots, Fred Smart of 288 Avenue C, Bayonne, declared that he heard Superintendent Coates and J. B. Edwards of the Tide Water plant order the guards to shoot. Other witnesses described the shooting. The jury's verdict was that the deceased had met their death by shots, but it failed to fix any blame.

Director of Public Safety Wilson of Bayonne submitted to the commission yesterday a report on the recent strike, ordered after Sheriff Eugene F. Kinkead had criticised the attitude of the city officials during the trouble. Mr. Wilson's report declared the Bayonne authorities had given the Sheriff every possible assistance during the trouble, and recommended that the police force be increased.

LOSE GREAT COAL LANDS.

Guggenheims Also Turn Over Big Cash Payment to the Government.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Aug. 10.—A tremendous fortune in coal land holdings and another comfortable fortune in cash have been obtained for the United States by United States District Attorney H. B. Tedrow, wh oyesterday afternoon effected a settlement with the American Smelting and Refining Company, part of the great Guggenheim holdings, in a case which has long been pending in the United States Courts. The United States Court also handed down a decision today which took away 120 acres of valuable coal land from the Exploration Company, Limited, of London, England, doing business in Colorado and said to have secured these Government coal lands through fraud.

The cash sum of $112,766 paid to District Attorney Tedrow by the Guggenheim interests and forwarded by Mr. Tedrow to the Federal Government is payment for coal actually taken from the mines at Aguilar and Cokedale which were said to be part of the coal lands obtained by the Guggenheim Company through fraud.

Also, a total of 3,475 acres of as valuable coal land as may be found in the State has been returned from the American Smelting and Refining Company to the United States Government on the ground that it was originally obtained through fraud.

HAITI PLANS TO PICK PRESIDENT TOMORROW

PORT AU PRINCE, Haiti, Aug. 10.—The next meeting of the National Assembly for the election of a President of Haiti in succession to the late President Guillaume, who lost his life during the revolutionary operations of Dr. Rosalvo Bobo, has been called for next Thursday.

The American authorities in control at Port au Prince have restored to the National Bank the Treasury service of the Republic, which this bank had been performing under contract. It was relieved of its duties in this regard by the Government of President Guillaume. Quiet has been re-established at St. Marc and Aux Cayes.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Fairly satisfactory conditions prevail in Haiti, according to dispatches to the State Department from Chargé d'Affaires Davis at Port au Prince. One dispatch, however, says that the "bank" has been instructed to collect customs fees from incoming Dutch vessels, and the bank's branch office at Cape Haitien reports collections of customs revenues by it at that place.

A dispatch sent Aug. 8 from Port au Prince says that rebels pillaged Grande Rivière and pillaged and burned most of the important plantations in the interior. These rebels were reported to be murdering persons in the country. They were accusing General Bobo of having abandoned them.

Mention is made in a dispatch filed at Port au Prince Aug. 9 that an anonymous proclamation would be circulated to arouse opposition to American occupation. This proclamation proposes the formation of a provisional government by delegates from all sections of the country and the reorganization of Government departments, with revision of the Constitution.

Evacuation of Fort Liberté by the Haitian Government troops and the departure of the gunboat Castine for St. Marc, where an uprising was recently reported, was announced by Rear Admiral Caperton in a report to the Navy Department today.

Port au Prince, Cape Haitien, and Port au Paix were reported quiet.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 10.—Carrying 862 marines, the United States cruiser Tennessee sailed from the Philadelphia Navy Yard today for Haiti. Colonel L. W. T. Waller, who sailed on the Tennessee, will assume command of all the marines in Haiti. The Tennessee carries enough supplies for a three months' campaign.

WANTS KULTUR IN BELGIUM.

Belgian Actress Would Like to See Kaiser at Head of Her Country.

Mademoiselle Phillipine Artois, a Belgian actress, told a pro-German audience at Terrace Garden last night that if Belgium were a republic she'd like to nominate the Kaiser for President. Mademoiselle thought the Kaiser a bit rude when he invaded Belgium last fall. Did not the presence of his soldiers force her to walk forty miles into Antwerp? But, believe Mademoiselle Artois, it is all for the best interests of Belgium.

In broken English she read a typewritten speech, the keynote of which was that Belgium was only a tool of England. She said King Albert was to blame for sacrificing his country in a vain cause. She denied the stories of German atrocities, but said that she had not been in Belgium since last September.

"King Albert is popular," she said. "He has no streak of yellow, but he has very little gray matter. He should have investigated the worth of the promises of the Triple Entente; he should have investigated the strength of the Germans. He investigated nothing and almost ruined his country when there was nothing for Belgium to gain."

She said Germany was an open enemy; England a sneaking friend. She got prolonged applause when she concluded with a declaration that the best thing that could happen to Belgium would be for it to remain under German Kultur.

Mademoiselle was asked if she was open for a theatrical engagement in America and Mademoiselle said she was.

Held in Meisters Murder Case.

Magistrate Nash, in the Flatbush Police Court, Brooklyn, yesterday held George Miller and Peter J. McCourt without bail for the Grand Jury in connection with the murder of Gerhard Meisters, who was shot in his shoe store at 1,096 Flatbush Avenue on June 3. John McDonald and William Steiner, electricians, failed to identify Miller as the man who called at their store at 4,820 New Utrecht Avenue on the afternoon of the murder and asked for the address of Meisters. Both men had previously picked Miller out of a "line-up" as the man.

EASTLAND JURY REPORTS.

Six Indicted for the Disaster—Wilson to Take Up Case.

CHICAGO, Aug. 10.—Six persons were indicted today by the State Grand Jury which investigated the Eastland disaster. No action was taken against any of the Government officials, as it was said that evidence concerning them is proper matter for the Federal Grand Jury. The names of those indicated were not made public. State's Attorney Hoyne said that the State Grand Jury was given evidence that the Eastland was overcrowded.

The Eastland, which has been lying on her side almost completely submerged since the disaster of two weeks ago, will be placed on even keel by wreckers tomorrow, according to announcement made this afternoon.

CORNISH, N. H., Aug. 10.—President Wilson is planning, it became known today, to confer with Secretary Redfield soon after reaching Washington, and go over thoroughly all of the facts connected with the Eastland disaster, in order to learn whether any Federal official was to olame for the loss of life resulting from the overturning of the excursion steamer. On the President's inquiry will depend whether he will recommend to Congress legislation to further safeguard the lives of passengers on steamers.

PIGNATELLI A BANKRUPT.

Prince Ludovic Pignatelli d'Aragon, living at Merrick, L. I., filed a petition in bankruptcy yesterday in Brooklyn. He put his assets at $887.28 and his liabilities at $6,542.32, his chief creditor being Mrs. Alice F. O'Connell of 1,963 Sixtieth Street, Brooklyn, who got a judgment against him on July 3 last for $15,959.86 for the death of her husband, who was killed in an automobile collision between his car and the Prince's near Massapequa, L. I., on July 19, 1914. Mr. and Mrs. William C. Yeager, who were riding with Mr. and Mrs. O'Connell, have also sued the Prince for damages.

Among the Prince's liabilities are $1,926 to the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, $6,302 to the Empire State Furniture Company, and $5,296 to F. B. Sherwood. The Prince's assets consist of 28 cents, clothes, $187, and an uncollected bill for $700.

Prince Pignatelli's adventures have made him a public character since 1908, when he came to America first. In 1911 he was Secretary of the Spanish Legation in Washington, and announced that he had been engaged to Miss Helen Hilton of New York, but that the engagement had been broken down because of religious differences.

Later he was reported engaged to Miss Mary L. Duke, daughter of Benjamin N. Duke, but Mr. Duke denied it. In July, 1912, the Prince shot himself in Paris because, it was said, he had lost his suit for Miss Duke's hand. In the Fall of that year he again appeared in New York after he had been detained for twenty-four hours at Ellis Island on the rumor that he had been expelled from France. On May 5 last he eloped with Miss Ruth Morgan Waters, daughter of George Jason Waters of New York.

7 NATIONS FRAME MEDIATION NOTE TO MEXICANS

American Supervision of Polling Said to be Contemplated by Conference Plan.

WILSON'S PURPOSE FIRM

President Returning to Capital Determined to Protect Foreigners in Mexico.

VERA CRUZ QUIET AGAIN

Warships Held Ready for Emergency—Carranza Resents Mediation—Border Raiding Continues.

The United States and the six Latin-American republics which, as representative of Central and South America, have joined with this country in an effort to bring peace and order to Mexico, have agreed upon a course of action and have framed a note setting forth what in their opinion should be done to insure such a result.

This note, framed at a conference of representatives of the seven countries held at the Hotel Biltmore in this city yesterday, is addressed to the leaders of the Mexican factions. It contains a review of the situation in Mexico, points to the havoc wrought by continued warfare, and appeals to the warring leaders in the name of humanity and for their country's sake to put aside selfish purposes and compose their differences—offering the good offices of the seven countries represented at the conference in effecting a peaceful regime in Mexico. Further, the conferees reached an agreement as to the form the pacification of the country should take.

The United States was represented in the conference by Robert Lansing, Secretary of States, and the Latin-American republics by their diplomatic representatives in this country as follows: Ignacio Calderon, the Bolivian Minister; Joaquín Mendez, the Guatemalan Minister; Domicio da Gama, the Brazilian Ambassador; Eduardo Suarez Mujica, the Chilean Ambassador; Romulo S. Naon, the Argentine Ambassador, and Carlos Maria de Pena, the Uruguayan Minister.

Adjourn to Await a Reply.

The note agreed upon will be signed by these seven representatives on behalf of their Governments and will be sent to all the leaders, civil and military, in Mexico. No further conference will be held until the situation becomes more definite. If it is decided to go on, discussion of the form of government for Mexico will be resumed. Secrecy has been drawn about the plan as thus far decided upon, but it is said to contemplate an election in Mexico supervised by the United States for the seven mediating Governments.

At the conclusion of the conference, which consumed three hours, Secretary Lansing made this statement:

"We agreed or assented to a proposition that a communication be addressed to the different factions in Mexico urging them to compose their differences. Also, we agreed upon the form which we will recommend to our governments with reference to the recognition of some form of government in Mexico."

It was intimated to the Secretary that the phraseology of the latter sentence was cloudy.

"Put it in the puzzle column if you want to," was the reply. "That's all I have to say today."

"There will be other conferences," the Secretary added. "I don't know when or where, but they will be after there has been some reply to the note."

The note, it is understood, calls upon the leaders of the factions in Mexico to assemble a peace conference. The action taken was not of a joint character, but identical.

When the conference adjourned there was a feeling of optimism, and confidence that a decisive step toward restoring Mexico to her place in the family of nations had been taken. The appeal which is brief and courteously phrased, calls upon the Mexicans to consider the injurious effect throughout the world, which the constant turbulance in Mexico has caused. The petition suggests that a peace conference be held on neutral territory in Mexico far from the roar of cannon. The Governments signing it express their willingness to act, if invited, in any practicable way to assist in bringing the various factions together for the conference.

Expect Replies in Ten Days.

Replies are definitely asked for, the hope being expressed that these will be received within ten days after the communication reaches the leaders unless some just cause for delay present itself.

Secretary Lansing left for Washington tonight. After a conference with President Wilson a statement will be prepared by Mr. Lansing explanatory of the purposes of the appeal.

No step of any definite character in the future has been finally determined upon. Tentatively, however, it has been agreed to await the result of the peace conference, and if all the factions do not participate, the Government set up by those elements which do attend will receive recognition nevertheless, provided it gives promise of stability. Immediately an embargo on arms would be enforced against all other factions and an amnesty declared permitting contending groups to lay down their arms without fear of punitive measures. Through this process it is hoped by the

TO TRY SOUKHOMLINOFF FOR ARMS SHORTAGE

Russian Authorities Charge Former Minister With Being Responsible for It.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—A commission of inquiry has been appointed, according to the Daily Mail's Petrograd correspondent, to investigate charges against General W. A. Soukhomlinoff, ex-Russian Minister of War, and others, in connection with the shorttage of munitions, which has seriously interfered with the operations of the Russian Army.

The resignation of General Soukhomlinoff was announced on June 26. The reason for his retirement has never been officially announced, but it has been assumed that it was due to the failure of the military authorities to provide adequate supplies for the armies in the field.

THINK PETROGRAD MAY BE GERMAN GOAL

Russian Papers Discuss Possibility of German Advance to the Capital.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 11, (Dispatch to The London Times.)—In connection with the enemy's attempt to gain the line of the Dvina the newspapers discuss the question of the possibility of a further advance in the direction of Petrograd. It is authoritatively affirmed, however, that whatever the enemy's plans he will scarcely be permitted to reach the capital.

The Pskov Province is honeycombed with lakes and marshes, affording a powerful tactical and strategical line on which, in the event of the enemy's attempt to advance on Petrograd, he would be checked.

In an article in the Novoe Vremya, which is attracting widespread attention, M. Menshikoff suggests that the true ultimate objective of the German offensive is Petrograd. The writer justly points out the enormous difference between a national war of 1812 and the present conflict of nations, in that the Germans are hurling against Russia colossal forces tantamount to seven such invasions as Napoleon's and supported by the latest technical appliances, whereas in 1812 the Russian Army in the latter respect was fully on a par with the French.

The Germans are infinitely better posted as to the position of Russia than Napoleon was and they are incapable of regarding Moscow as the key to the empire. They well know that Petrograd is the political centre and that it is only half as far from Riga as Moscow; There is only a night's railway journey between Riga and Petrograd; and although invasion is not accomplished by express, nevertheless the distance or 260 odd miles over good roads and two lines of railway does not offer insuperable difficulties.

This is no second war of 1812, but something far more serious, and it is necessary boldly to recognize the fact that it is imperative for the Germans to finish the campaign on the Russian front as soon as possible in order to deal with the western powers, and, therefore, they aim not at Moscow, but at Petrograd, the loss of which, unlike the loss of Moscow, would greatly impair Russia's capacity for producing munitions, besides cutting her off from the Baltic.

ITALIAN SUBMARINE SINKS AUSTRIAN U-12

Three of Italy's Adriatic Ports Shelled in Raid by Two Destroyers.

ROME, Aug. 11.—It is announced officially that the Austrian submarine U-12 has been torpedoed and sunk with all hands in the upper Adriatic Sea by an Italian submarine.

The announcement was made in a statement issued by the Navy Department, which added:

This morning two Austrian torpedo boat destroyers bombarded Bari, Santo Spirito and Molfetta (southern Italy on the Adriatic.) One civilian was killed and seven were wounded. There was no appreciable material damage.

The U-12, of which type there are three boats, was completed at Pola since the war began. Her displacement was 1,000 tons submerged, her speed was supposed to be 15 knots on the surface and 10 knos submerged, and she was armed with five 21-inch torpedo tubes. Her officers and men probably numbered from twenty-five to thirty.

She is the second ship to be sunk by the Italians, the other being an unknown Austrian gunboat sunk in Porto Buzo, at the head of the Adriatic, on May 24. Italy's loss is five—the two armored cruisers, the Amalfi and Giuseppe Garibaldi, the destroyer Turbine, and the two submarines, Medusa and Nereide.

The loss of the two Italian submarines, like that of the Austrian U-12, was the result of duels between submarines.

SIR DAVID BEATTY NOW A VICE ADMIRAL

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—The Official Gazette announces today that Sir David Beatty has been promoted to be a Vice Admiral.

Sir David Beatty commanded the British squadrons, which in August, 1914, sank four German warships off Heligoland and won a victory over a German squadron in the North Sea the following January. In the January fight the German cruiser Blücher was sent to the bottom.

Vice Admiral Beatty is only 45 years old and the youngest officer ever promoted to the rank of Vice Admiral in the British Navy. His wife was Miss Edith Field, a daughter of Marshall Field of Chicago.

NEW BUDGET PLAN WINS AT ALBANY OVER TAMMANY

ONLY 15 VOTES OPPOSE

Shorter Ballot Plan Introduced by Committee Reorganizes the State Government.

PUTS OFFICES IN GROUPS

Drops Three Elective State Officials and Establishes Many Departments.

GIVES GOVERNOR A CABINET

New Tax Department Abolished—Penal and Charitable Institutions Under One Head.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 11.—The Constitutional Convention today advanced the Finance Committee's new budget proposal which makes it the duty of the Governor to prepare the schedule of proposed expenditures. It also received in its complete and final form the plan for a reorganization of the State Government proposed by the Committee on Governor and other State officers.

The budget plan on which Tammany and the reactionary Republicans had made common war was advanced in practically the form it was submitted by the committee, with only fifteen opposing votes. Ex-Senator E. T. Brackett was the Republican to vote against it. The other adverse votes were cast by Tammany Democrats. Thirteen amendments either were withdrawn or rejected. The only prevailing amendment to the proposal was a friendly one suggested by Henry L. Stimson, Chairman of the Committee on State Finances.

The debate on the budget plan occupied all or the forenoon session and most of the afternoon session of the convention. Mr. Stimson's amendment provided that department heads in submitting to the Governor their estimates of the needs of their departments, must accompany these with "a statement in detail of all moneys for which any general or special appropriation is desired at the ensuing session of the Legislature."

The leaders of the convention were jubilant after the proposal had been put to a vote. The result showed the weakness of the opposition within the Republican ranks and made manifest for the first time since the convention went into session the fact that Tammany Hall does not dominate the Democratic minority in that body.

Frederick C. Tanner, Chairman of the Committee on Governor and Other State Officers, was perhaps the happiest member of the convention tonight. In his opinion the prospects are bright for the final adoption of the plan of his committee, which is opposed by the same persons who sought to defeat the budget proposal.

President Elihu Root sat in the convention today prepared to go on the firing line to aid the budget reform, but his help was not required. Mr. Root intends to take the floor to help the Tanner reorganization plan, and that, in the opinion of the leaders, assures victory.

The Shorter Ballot Plan.

The proposal coming from the Committee on Governor provides for the reorganization of all the civil department of the State and a regrouping of the administrative functions generally. It centres responsibility in the Governor by substituting for a majority of the present elective officers of the State heads of departments to be appointed by the Governor. Only the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor, the Attorney General and the Controller, would remain elective officers under the plan.

President Root, in a speech before the Tanner Committee recently, urged the reorganization plan as the best way of substituting for "invisible" government, a government that is responsible to the people.

In detail the plan provides for an entirely new Article V of the Constitution. This article in the present Constitution defines the powers and functions of the administrative departments, which are comparatively few. Under the new plan, the entire framework of government will be protected by the Constitution, and thus virtually taken out of politics.

Under the proposed new article the Legislature would be prohibited from organizing any new department. The Legislature, however, is permitted to create bureaus or agencies to undertake new activities, as the need may arise, but these must all be such that they can readily be assimilated by the departments.

The State Departments are put in three groups. In the first group are the departments of the Attorney General and the Controller who would be the head of the Department of Audit and in that capacity would be shorn of nearly all the patronage he now enjoys and all the administrative functions his department now performs.

In the second group are departments which, besides administrative functions, also exercise functions, quasi-legislative or judicial in their nature. There are

Serbian Parliament Summoned for Monday to Consider Renewal of the Balkan League

NISH, Serbia, Aug. 11, (Via London, Thursday, Aug. 12.)—The Serbian Parliament will meet Monday, Aug. 16, in order to deliberate on conditions for renewing the Balkan League.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—The Daily Mail this morning expresses the hope that the meeting of the Serbian Parliament Monday may show that the present answer is not final, but says that in view of the local enmities and dissensions in the Balkans it would be oversanguine to expect any immediate development.

"Both political and strategic considerations," says The Daily News, "make Bulgaria the deciding factor in the Balkan situation and the closing of the discussion between Nish and Sofia would be unfortunate in the extreme."

PARIS, Aug. 11.—A dispatch to the Journal des Debats from Rome says: "The general opinion here is that Serbia will answer the communication of the Quadruple Entente Powers by offering to cede territory for a fixed sum, in order to avoid responsibility for the failure of the negotiations with the Balkan States regarding their participation in the war.

"It is difficult to forecast the decision of Bulgaria, for Greece apparently is refusing to make any concessions to Bulgaria."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Aug. 11, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—Telegrams from Switzerland and Saloniki state that the Germans have massed in Bosnia and Herzegovina an army of 300,000 men, which will shortly march against Serbia, hoping to crush the Serbians and open a way across Greece to Saloniki, thus succoring the Ottoman Empire.

BIG YACHT NOW JUNK AFTER 6 WEEKS' USE

COSTLY EXPERIMENT FAILS

Alexander Smith Cochran's schooner yacht Sea Call, after being in commission only six weeks, is now being broken up for scrap in the yards of her builders at Neponset, Mass.

The Sea Call is a splendid sailing yacht with auxiliary gasoline engine. She is being knocked to pieces on account of the disintegration of her bottom through electrical action. The yacht was designed by William Gardner & Son of 1 Broadway, who also designed for Mr. Cochran the Vanitie, built as a possible cup defender in the international races projected for last year, and was built by George A. Lawley & Son, Inc., of Neponset.

The electrolysis which has damaged the bottom of the boat is said to be due to the use of a steel skeleton and a bottom of monel metal, an expensive alloy composed of, roughly, two parts nickel to one part copper, with small additions of other metals. Monel metal has been used much about ships because it requires no painting, and is susceptible of high polish and thus adds speed to the vessel on whose hulls it is used.

The Sea Call was the first ship ever built with a bottom entirely of monel metal. It has been extensively used for deck fittings and for parts of vessels such as propeller shaft boxes, and wooden ships have been sheathed with it to prevent fouling. There has been no trouble on any of these vesseis, it is understood, and officials of the Bayonne Casting Company, which has the district agency for the metal, denied yesterday that there was any corrosion of the monel metal. They said they were making an investigation, and pending its result could say nothing further. It was understood that electrolysis affected the steel skeleton and not the plates of the bottom, but reports from Neponset say that, while the action did start around the stem and stern posts, which are of steel, it resulted in the deterioration of the monel into "a chalky substance." It is said that there are evidences of deterioration in the monel plates of the bottom, but the suggestion has been made that this is only discoloration due to the electrolysis of the steel.

The United States Navy, it is understood, has used monel metal extensively, though never to the extent that it was employed in the Sea Call. It has been used on many under water parts of the vessels, and there has never been any trouble with it. In these instances, however, it was insulated with zinc wherever it was in contact with steel, and persons familiar with the metal were inclined yesterday to attribute the attraction between the two metals in salt water, which started the electrolytic action, to the fact that the monel metal was not thus insulated in the Sea Call.

There has never been any trouble in wooden ships which have monel metal bottoms, so far as has been learned, but in them there would be no chance of the interaction of the two metals which started the trouble in the Sea Call. As a precaution against fouling the alloy bottoms on wooden ships have been quite successful. But this is another mysterious feature of the present case; it is understood that when the Sea Call was taken into dock at Neponset her bottom was very foul, though she had been in commission only a few weeks.

Mr. Cochran is at the training camp in Plattsburg, and it is understood that he takes the loss of the Sea Call as an incident of a day; an unfortunate, but not necessarily discouraging result of an experiment.

Officials of William Gardner & Son said they could make no statement, although they denied that the boat would have gone to pieces within a month if she had not been scrapped. It was said that the boat could have been made as good as new by putting on a steel bottom, but that apparently Mr. Cochran preferred not to do that.

The disintegrating action of electrolysis from the electricity in salt water and salt air has given yachtsmen a good deal of trouble of various kinds. Aluminium utensils, for example, were much used for a time in the table service of yachts, as they were light, stood rough wear, and looked almost as well as silver. But it was presently discovered that overnight they became covered with a fine powder due to the action of the electricity in the salt air.

Monel metal, which is not particularly light but has great strength and durability, has been used much in deck fittings on yachts and is said to have given excellent results. Here, of course, there is not the constant contact at once with steel and salt water which is supposed to have brought about the disaster to the Sea Call.

The Sea Call, which was launched in April, and commissioned June 26, was 215 feet long, and had a 34-foot beam. She had made fourteen knots before a fair wind. How much the boat cost could not be ascertained yesterday, but inasmuch as she was luxuriously fitted out, and as the cost of the monel metal is high, it is considered as certain that it is well up in the hundreds of thousands.

FOUR ARE RESCUED ON BRINK OF FALLS

CRAFT SMASHED ON ROCKS

Negro Boy Swims to Girl on Verge of Eighty-Foot Plunge and Rope Cast from Shore Saves Them.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., Aug. 11.—While 300 persons cheered him and prayed for him, a negro boy swam out from a bank of the swollen Passaic River this afternoon into the rushing current until he was within a few feet of the eighty-foot drop of Great Falls and certain death, tied a rope about the limp body of Josephine Dermico and held fast to her until willing hands pulled the unconscious girl and her rescuer to safety. A moment later the motor boat from which Miss Dermico and three others had been hurled, and another craft that went to their rescue, went crashing over the falls into a thousand splinters on the rocks below.

Miss Dermico's three companions on an afternoon's outing had been rescued by other motor boats that would not dare death at the edge of the eighty-foot falls to go after the twirling body of Miss Dermico, helpless as flotsam in the swollen stream. It was then that black little John Sisco darted from the crowd, stripped off his shirt and jumped into the river.

He swam out and up stream, allowing the current to bear him down upon the girl drifting so swiftly ever nearer the brink of the falls. While the spectators alternately held their breath and cheered him, he reached the girl's side. He grasped her dress in one hand and tried to swim against the current, but lost distance. He took her hair in his teeth and tried with both hands, but he was swept slowly toward the falls.

The brave effort seemed vain when, from a motor boat tied by a long cable to the bank, a rope sailed almost to Sisco. Again it was thrown, this time failing over the struggling boy and the helpless girl. Treading water, Sisco wrapped the rope twice around the girl, tied it, clasped his arms about her body, and gave the signal to pull away. When they were dragged upon the bank Miss Dermico was turned over to a physician's care. The little black hero took a rest and a drink of brandy, recovered his shirt, and vanished.

Tony Placo, his wife, Margaret, and Miss Dermico, all of 159 Twelfth Avenue, and Vincent Juliano of 47 Market Street were out in Placo's new motor boat for a pleasure trip on the Passaic River, when the engine went dead about 600 feet above the Great Falls. While Placo tried to start the engine the boat drifted rapidly down toward the eighty-foot drop in the river swollen by the recent rains. Juliano tried to stop the boat with the only car aboard, but it was quickly snapped in two.

Policeman James Kelley, in the city police patrol boat, saw the danger of the party and set out to rescue its members. He got close to them, when he saw he could not succeed, and, shouting to them to jump, he leaped into the current as both boats went over a six-foot dam 100 feet above the falls. Placo's boat kept upright for a dozen feet and then upset, throwing the occupants into the river. Kelley seized Mrs. Placo and started for shore. A rope was thrown them from another boat and they were dragged to safety. Other rescuers, led by James Arnot of 55 Oak Street, rescued Placo and Juliano by throwing them ropes from motor boats. A stalled engine on any of the boats meant a struggle for life for the occupants.

SUBMARINES DESTROY ELEVEN MORE CRAFT

Still Another Vessel, the British Steamer Rosalie, Is Run Ashore in War Zone.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—German submarines have renewed their activity, and in the last three days have sunk eighteen vessels, ten of which were British trawlers, and four of which belonged to neutral countries.

The sinking of eleven craft was announced this afternoon. They were the British steamer Oakwood, the Norwegian bark Morna, the French bark François, the Russian bark Baltzer, and seven trawlers—the Young Admiral, the George Crabbe, the Illustrious, Calm, Trevire, Welcome and Utopia. The crews of all the vessels were saved.

The British steamer Rosalie of 2,720 tons net, which sailed from Shields on Aug. 10 for San Francisco, has been beached. Her crew was saved.

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 11.—The French bark François and the Norwegian bark Morna, reported today sunk by German submarines, both cleared from the Columbia River in March with cargoes of wheat. The Morna carried 81,807 bushels of wheat, valued at $131,087 and was bound for Queenstown for orders. The cargo of the François consisted of 111,293 bushels of wheat, valued at $178,070. Both cargoes were exported by M. H. Houser of Portland.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 11.—The British steamer Rosalie, reported to have been beached after leaving Shields, England, yesterday, was bound for Portland, Ore., where she was to load grain for Houser Co. for shipment to England.

GERMANY SEEKS PEACE THROUGH POPE? SAID TO CONSENT TO RESTORE BELGIUM; TERMS SHE OFFERED TO RUSSIA OUT

German Auxiliary Sinks British Patrol Ship, Hemmed In, Her Captain Blows Her Up

LONDON, Aug. 11.—The British patrol boat Ramsey has been sunk in the North Sea by the German steamer Meteor, according to an official statement issued tonight. The Meteor, as she was being chased by British vessels, was blown up by her commander. The statement says:

H. M. S. Ramsey, Lieutenant S. Raby, R. N. R., a small armed patrol vessel, was sunk by the German armed fleet auxiliary steamer Meteor on the 8th of August in the North Sea. Four officers and thirty-nine men were saved.

The Meteor subsequently sighted a squadron of British cruisers, and her commanding officer, realizing that escape was impossible, ordered the crew to abandon the ship and then blew her up.

The Admiralty, in a casualty list issued tonight, said that five officers were lost in the taking of the Ramsey.

The Meteor was formerly owned by the Hamburg-American Steamship Company and was of 3,613 gross tons.

The Ramsey was a merchant vessel which went into commission in the British Navy in November.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 11.—The German version of the exploits of the auxiliary Meteor is contained in this official statement issued by the Admiralty at Berlin:

The auxiliary vessel Meteor, after having boldly broken through the British watching forces, waged a commercial war. Saturday night she encountered the British auxiliary cruiser Ramsey, which the Meteor attacked and destroyed, saving forty members of the crew and four officers.

The following day four British cruisers surrounded the Meteor. As battle was hopeless, and escape impossible, Commander Behnke sank the Meteor after the crew, British prisoners, and the crew of a sailing vessel which it had sunk as a prize had been secured [probably means made their escape]. The Meteor's entire crew safely reached a German port.

The report states that the Meteor was outfitted as a mine-layer.

The Goeben and Breslau Are Reported Torpedoed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—Two separate dispatches from Athens, to London morning newspapers report that the former German warships Goeben and Breslau, which were bought by Turkey after the war began, have been torpedoed.

A dispatch to The London Daily News says:

"British submarines have succeeded in entering the Black Sea and have torpedoed the cruiser Breslau.

"They also torpedoed one transport gunboat."

A dispatch to The Daily Telegraph says:

"The Goeben has been torpedoed. She was run aground in a narrow creek in the Bosporus, where she is lying alongside shore in default of a dry or floating dock in Turkey sufficiently large to accommodate a vessel of her size.

"A dike has been built around her from which the Turks are pumping out water. All the approaches to the creek are severely guarded and no one is allowed to pass.

"My informant, however, succeeded by a bypath in getting at the place and verifying these facts."

ALLIES INCREASE GALLIPOLI GAINS

LANDED 50,000 NEW TROOPS

But Enver Pasha Asserts the Turks Still Outnumber and Outfight the Invaders.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—While the Russians are fighting desperately to extricate themselves from the cordon of Austro-German troops which is steadily pressing them more closely in Poland, their allies are working feverishly and with considerable success to open the Dardanelles, through which they hope to pour into Russia the much needed munitions of war.

Since Saturday night, when fresh British forces were landed on the Gallipoli Peninsula, there has been almost continuous fighting on the Krithia Road. In these operations Australians and New Zealanders in the "Anzac" region (a name taken from the initial letters of the words "Australia-New Zealand Army Corps") have co-operated with new forces to the north. Following up the successes of the troops on the Krithia Road and those to the north of the "Anzac" zone, the Australians and New Zealanders took the offensive yesterday and succeeded in trebling the area formerly held by them. Their comrades to the north, who assisted them, made no further progress, however.

Simultaneously the French battleship St. Louis attacked the Turkish batteries on the Asiatic side of the straits, which had been bombarding the allied positions on the peninsula, and put five guns out of commission.

These actions are believed here to be preliminary to a much more ambitious attempt which has been planned by the Anglo-French Commanders to sweep the Turks before them. Very heavy losses, which already have been inflicted on the Turks, have had a discouraging effect upon the Ottoman troops, according to reports from Greece.

The announcements were made in an official statement given out tonight, which read:

The latest report from Sir Ian Hamilton states that severe fighting continued yesterday in the Gallipoli Peninsula, mainly in the Anzac zone (on the western side of the peninsula) and in that to the north. The positions occupied were slightly varied in places, but the general result is that the area held at Anzac has been nearly trebled, owing chiefly to the gallantry and dash of the Australian and New Zealand army corps.

While to the north no further progress has yet been made, the troops have inflicted heavy losses on the enemy, and the French battleship St. Louis is reported to have put out of

Capture the Junction South of Ostrov—Fears Felt for Dvinsk.

KOVNO FRONT HARD PRESSED

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—On the eastern front Kovno is now the danger point in the Russian line. The armies of Grand Duke Nicholas apparently have arrested the German offensive against Riga and Dvinsk, but are being hard pressed on the Kovno front, which the Germans are attacking with guns of all calibres, including the famous sixteen-inch cannon, which no fortress hitherto has been able to withstand.

The German official report announces the occupation of the forest at Benjaminov, east of the fortress of Novo Georgievsk, and that the Warsaw-Petrograd Railroad has been reached at the junction southeast of Ostrov.

Reuter's correspondent at Petrograd points out that the village of Pipie, on which the Germans have retained their hold, notwithstanding the fierce counter-attacks of the Russians, is only six miles west of Kovno. It lies on the left bank of the Niemen.

Preparations are under way for the possible evacuation of the fortress. All military supplies and Government properties have been removed and factories are being dismantled.

A Zeppelin has appeared for the first time over the fortress of Dvinsk, on the Dvina, 110 miles southeast of Riga. The airship circled the ramparts.

The Reuter correspondent adds that it is evident from the latest official communications that the invaders are well established in very strong force on a forty-mile bow-shaped front from Lomza to Ostrow, and he predicts that an effort will be made to reach the important railroad junction of Dvinsk, southwest of Riga. The civilians are already evacuating the place. General Ruzsky has gone on a visit of inspection there with the commandant of the military district.

Russian military authorities expect that the Germans will persist in the offensive, notwithstanding checks, but they express strong doubts whether an advance on Petrograd enters seriously into the Germans' plans. The lake and marsh country in the Government of Pskov, south of the Government of Petrograd, is well adapted for defensive operations should the German advance extend in that direction.

The correspondent in Petrograd of the London Evening News, also discussing the possibility of an attempt by the Germans to reach Petrograd, in view of their activities in the Kovno and Dvinsk regions, says:

"The success gained by the Russian fleet at Riga reassured the capital, as no advance against Petrograd is likely unless the Germans obtain command of

In the overtures both Germany and Austria manifested great unwillingness to face another winter campaign.

Tells Peace Terms Russia Refused.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—A dispatch from Petrograd to The Times says:

"The Novoe Vremya confirms the rumors of German overtures for a separate peace.

"It is alleged that Germany offered to Russia Galicia and the Dardanelles, with a guarantee of the integrity of her frontiers, Germany stipulating for Egypt on the pretext of ceding the same to Turkey, and for a free hand to deal with Russia's allies.

"'This attempt,' says the Novoe Vremya, 'testifies that in spite of her brilliantly organized espionage, Germany entirely fails to discount the sentiment of the Russian authorities and of the whole Russian people, while the cynicism of the proposals themselves can no longer surprise anybody.'"

Petrograd advices to London newspapers of last Monday asserted that Germany, through Denmark, had proposed to Russia a separate peace, Russia to receive Galicia, while Germany would retain the western districts of Poland.

The answer sent by the Czar to the King of Denmark, according to the Börse Gazette, stated that peace negotiations could not be considered at the present time.

King of Bavaria on German Desires.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—The Times says that during the public celebration of the fall of Warsaw in Munich the King of Bavaria addressed a large crowd from the balcony of the Wittelsbach Palace. He said:

"This has brought us a good step forward toward peace. Peace, however, is still far away, for we are fighting against the whole world. In the east we are fighting with good success, and in the west we are fighting against superior enemies and defending a line which, notwithstanding all attacks, cannot be broken and cannot be taken.

"I have no doubt that if we continue to be victorious in the east it will also be possible to make a fresh advance in the west."

The King then appealed to the endurance and patience of the people, and repeated as follows a demand for annexation of territory:

"The grievous sacrifices which have been made by the whole German people and the families whose dear ones have been left upon the field of honor all demand that we should not conclude peace until the enemy has been overthrown and until we have won a peace which for as long a time as we can see will assure the free continuation of the development of the German people, until we have obtained frontiers which will leave our enemies no taste for fresh attacks upon us and for gathering together against us enemy after enemy.

"I hope that the next victory we celebrate will be a victory of which we can say that it brings us the lasting peace which we so earnestly desire."

GERMAN PROFESSORS STATE PEACE TERMS

Demand Belgium, Poland, Baltic Provinces, Part of France, and an Indemnity.

BERNE, Aug. 11, (via Paris.)—The Tageblatt prints the text of a manifesto issued by a group of German professors and intellectuals enumerating their ideas of the only acceptable peace terms.

These, according to the manifesto, must insure the free expansion of German culture, industry, and commerce; Belgium, for military and commercial purposes, must be subject to Germany;

France must cede to Germany all territory north of a line from Belfort to the mouth of the River Somme, and pay a large indemnity, and Russia must cede Poland and the greater part of the Baltic provinces and other territory in lieu of indemnity, which she could not pay.

The manifesto is signed by Professors Meincke, Seeberg, and Schaefer of Berlin University; Oncken of Heidelberg, Schumacher of Reichenau, Director Kirdolin of the Gelsenkirchen Mines, and Imperial Minister von Schwerin, Mayor of Frankfort-on-the-Oder.

IRISH BISHOP FOR PEACE.

Dr. O'Dwyer Calls on Redmond to Support the Pope's Appeal.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—The Times says:

"Dr. O'Dwyer, the Catholic Bishop of Limerick, has addressed a letter to Mr. Redmond calling on him to support the Pope's proposal and urge the British Government to take the first steps toward the support of the Pontiff's appeal for establishing peace. The Bishop says:

"'It is time to look the facts in the face; and recent events show that all the belligerents, including Germany, have had a profound lesson in the terrible destruction of this colossal war, and must long for some way out of it. It is especially ruinous to Ireland, and Mr. Redmond would be doing a service to the country and the whole world by exercising his influence with the Government in the interest of peace.'"

GERMANS WOULD ANNEX BELGIUM

Professors, Peasants, Landlords and Manufacturers Demand Its Retention.

PARIS, Aug. 11.—What purports to be the text of a confidential memorandum sent to the Imperial German Chancellor, Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg, on May 20 by representatives of German manufacturing and agricultural associations, is published by the Temps. The memorandum, according to the newspaper, covers financial, territorial, industrial, and military concessions to be demanded of the Entente Allies as Germany's terms for peace and to insure the development of a greater Germany. It is signed by the following men:

Dr. Roesicke, of the Agrarian League; Vachorst von Wente, of the German Peasants' League; Baron von Twickel, of the Association of Westphalian Peasants; Herr Rouger, of the Central German Manufacturers' League; Herr Friedricks, of the Manufacturers' League, and Professor Eberle, of the Union of the Middle Classes of the Empire.

The memorandum, after calling for peace terms which shall insure the development of greater Germany and "guarantee an improvement of the bases of the German Empire," says: "A peace which has not these results will render new struggles inevitable at an early date, but with the chances much less favorable for Germany."

Referring to Belgium, it says:

"Because it is necessary to assure our credit on the sea and the future military and economic situation with respect to England; because Belgian territory, so economically important, is closely linked with our principal industrial territory, Belgium should be from a monetary, financial, and postal point of view subject to the legislation of the Empire. Its railroads and waterways should be most closely connected with our communications."

ASSERTS GERMAN CODE MESSAGES STILL COME

Providence Journal Says Nauen Sends Them Despite This Government's Prohibition.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, Aug. 11.—The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning:

"The United States Government, acting through the Naval Radio Service, has notified the officials of the Nauen wireless telegraph station in Germany that they must absolutely respect the terms under which Sayville is used for commercial messages.

"The following wireless message has been sent to Nauen:

In future no messages will be accepted at this station unless they are in full and plain language. Neither commercial terms nor code will be allowed. Ambiguous expressions must be written out to show full meaning. No explanations of messages or terms will be accepted.

"This message is the outcome of a series of attempts that have been made ever since the Government took over Sayville to fool the censors and to evade the law on the part of the German Government and its agents.

"The Journal has called the attention of the Government to great numbers of these messages that have come from Germany since the United States took over the Sayville station, and in every case the Government has taken prompt action and refused delivery of such messages.

"Since the Germans were removed from control of Sayville, a largely increased number of code messages sent out from Nauen with no particular receiving station named, have been picked up by The Journal's wireless operators. These messages are being received by some unknown wireless station on the Atlantic Coast. They are sent out on what is known as a 12,600 meter wave, and the transmission power used to forward them proves beyond any question that they can be meant for no other part of the world than the Atlantic seaboard of the United States.

"These code messages are very strong and easily read. Following is a sample of a set of these code messages picked up by The Journal during the past week:

Exlegakken afnihatfig biasmenzak budoregudi piaggatote ecanzandam hybodaemon afuiaroma feculelixx ebbhulamn eulefacity ecangolmil cultrayera basigandam hybodamics forugesuto lysovuelar hupoxallex appulefano felipebenz ehgiderful suppleiard offizolfen plostumnyi ockimaleco ebiegocliz cykafecosi renesayera ecuztemhof dunuhulimmn hobuxezita buellathos olcofageux.

"The above, not being addressed to care of Sayville, have not been copied by Sayville operators, but somewhere along the coast they have been copied and transmitted to the person or persons for whom they are intended."

REVENTLOW IS MENACING.

Says Russian Influence in Balkans Must Be Destroyed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—The Times says that Count Reventlow has an article in the Deutsche Tageszeitung to the effect that it will not be sufficient for Germany "to destroy Russian influence in the Balkans," and that Germany must cut her way through to Constantinople and make a reality of "the new Triple Alliance," namely, Germany, Austria, and Turkey.

The Times says by way of comment:

"We cordially welcome Count Reventlow's seasonable candor as a valuable aid to the political education of the Balkan populations. They are fairly warned; they know what is before them under the new Triple Alliance with a conquering Turkey as one of the partners, and they know what they can expect from the triumph of Russia and of the Western powers. The choice is theirs; can they hesitate what it should be?"

WARSAW VERY CALM AS GERMANS ENTER

FIGHTING A FEW YARDS OFF

Capital Bare of Everything That Would Have Been Useful to Conquerors, German Officer Says.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROTTERDAM, Aug. 11, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—A remarkable story of the German entry into Warsaw is contributed to the Vossische Zeitung and Berliner Morgenpost by "a highly-placed officer." It confirms in every particular the reports of the completeness with which the Russians removed everything that would be of the slightest use to their enemy, and provides a telling word picture of conditions in the city immediately after the evacuation.

Even while the fighting was proceeding in the streets the inhabitants sipped their coffee stoically at cafés only a few houses away from the barricades. The officer writes:

"Quickly our car runs along the road of the Russian retreat toward Warsaw. Scorched fields and burned farms and villages fly past on both sides of the road. Wrecks of carts, soldiers' coats, cartridge cases, here and there boots and bread carts, also many fresh graves, mark the road along which the Russian army went for its regrouping. Felled trees placed across the road as obstacles have to be removed by our men.

"German soldiers are standing on the green walls of the forts in which was fighting this morning. Then come the walls of the town and the fortress itself, earthen walls with antiquated earthen works. In the suburbs there seems no end to the long streams of refugees coming out by the same roads along which the German troops are marching into the town. Along the high sides of the road thousands of people are standing watching the entrance of the German troops. Then we go through an old gate into old Warsaw itself.

"All the windows and balconies of the high palace-like houses are occupied. Hitherto a heavy load had lain upon the town, probably anxiety of the last few days as to what scene would now be played in the world's history and what would happen when the Russians withdrew. The anxiety has not yet disappeared, but the people are breathing again now. There are in the town German soldiers accustomed to order and discipline, commanded by German officers who, notwithstanding all the experience of the war, have not lost their sense of justice and chivalry.

"Everywhere one turns one sees bright faces, and roses are thrown by black-eyed beauties. A fine rain does not keep the beauties of Warsaw indoors, although they have on diaphanous blouses with slender thighs. They have come out to watch this historic event. The cafés are crowded with brightly dressed people. Nearly all the shops are open. Picture postcards with views of the city are finding a lively sale.

"Suddenly we come to a plain completely empty of people. The only noise here is the zipping of bullets and explosives from the other side of the river. Fighting is still going on. On this side are the Germans; on the other the Russians. On the other side are trenches and on this side our men are lying behind street barricades and corners of houses and firing across the river. The Russians return a lively fire. Machine guns rattle from both sides. Now and then comes a bigger greeting from guns. Here all is the activity of the big town, and scarcely 100 yards away a struggle for life and death.

"It is an extraordinary scene there in front of us. The Russian positions on the opposite bank are clearly visible with the naked eye. Guns roar and shells crash into the walls. We turn round and have in front of us the life of the big city. At yonder corner is a big café. Men and women are sipping their coffee as if it were peace times, many of them reading newspapers; and a few houses away death is seeking its prey. On a balcony is a lady with highly painted face and fashionable dress with a book in her heavily jeweled hand. Now and then she casts a glance at the fighting on the other side of the Vistula. We can scarcely tear ourselves away from this spot.

"Thin smoke rises on the other side of the river, where the Russians are continuing their work of destruction. The public buildings are empty. All furniture, even to spittoons, has gone. There are empty walls and empty rooms, &c., everywhere. The means of communication has been carried away. Telephone and telegraph apparatus of all kinds is gone. Everywhere, even in private houses, there is a gaping emptiness. The Russians felt they would have to give up this fortress perhaps for ever.

"Evening comes, lights appear, and the various occupations of the city are continued as usual. We leave the town with difficulty, forcing our way through columns of men and road trains. Still long streams of refugees continue to flow away from Warsaw. We still hear the rattle of machine guns and now and then the fire of a big field gun.

"The air becomes clearer. No longer the smell of burning is perceived. We breathe again, and repeat to ourselves, 'Warsaw, the impregnable, has fallen.'"

NIGHTLY FIRES IN WARSAW.

Fifteen Civilians Accidentally Killed, 200 Wounded in Praga Fighting.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ZURICH, Aug. 11, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—A correspondent of the Budapest newspaper As Est telegraphs from Warsaw that mysterious fires and explosions have taken place nightly in various quarters of the Polish capital since the occupation. The military authorities are determined to take stern action against any incendiaries discovered.

The correspondent adds that the Russians set fire to the important railway station of Praga before evacuation. In street fighting in this suburb between Russians and Germans fifteen townspeople were accidentally killed and 200 wounded.

REPULSE ITALIAN ATTACKS.

Austrians Report Fierce Fighting on the Doberdo Plateau.

VIENNA, Aug. 11, (via London.)—Concerning the operations on the Italian front the War Office tonight issued the following:

Yesterday the artillery fire and other offensive actions on the part of the Italians on the Italian front in the coastal district increased.

On the edge of the Doberdo Plateau strong hostile forces attacked our positions east of Monfalcone, which, however, after bitter fighting, remained in our possession without exception. The repulsed enemy sustained heavy losses, especially through a flanking artillery fire.

Two attacks against the section of the plateau jutting to the west were repulsed by our artillery.

At the Gorizia bridgehead Italian attempts near Perma to approach our intrenchments were repulsed by hand-grenades. During the darkness attacks were attempted near Zagora, southeast of Plava, but they miscarried.

SAW AEROPLANES DESTROY A ZEPPELIN

Observer Describes Fate of One of Dirigibles That Raided English Coast.

HAD BEEN TOWED TO SHORE

Could Not Hide from Aircraft, Which Came Searching for Prey —Explosion Finished Her.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROTTERDAM, Aug. 11, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—Notwithstanding the strictest watch kept by the Germans in and around Ostend to prevent any news from leaking out as to the fate of the damaged Zeppelin which raided England on Monday night, I am enabled to give from a reliable source interesting details of its destruction.

Today a gentleman has crossed the frontier from Bruges, and brings the following story of the Zeppelin's end. Yesterday morning, he states, the Germans in Ostend, who would naturally know of the intended raid on England, showed more activity than usual, and a keener watch was kept. Suddenly the shadowy form of a Zeppelin was observed from over the sea, coming from a northwesterly direction, and it was easy to discern that it was in difficulties.

It was also known that no such vessel had left Belgium on the previous day, and the news soon spread that a Zeppelin, damaged in a raid on England, was seeking safety in the town.

The airship as it slowed and came nearer was seen to be dropping, and the Germans immediately rushed a steamer out of the harbor to render aid to their comrades in trouble.

Do what he would, the commander of the Zeppelin could not keep his craft in the air, and it came down with a rather nasty crash into the sea off Ostend, increasing its injuries in its fall.

A tug from the port was soon on the spot, and managed to attach a hawser. Then with all speed it commenced the work of towing the disabled night bird into harbor, together with her crew, some of whom, its is said, were injured.

Slowly the crippled airship glided into Ostend and was berthed in the harbor, but no German effort could render it free from the view of scouting allied aeroplanes, which came hawking along, searching for their prey. They soon discovered her and dropped projectiles, despite the fire of German anti-aircraft guns.

Shortly after the dropping of bombs a loud explosion was heard. The report was too strong to have been caused by the mere explosion of bombs, and a tremendous cloud of smoke rose up from the harbor. The Zeppelin, already crippled, was now nothing but a mass of twisted aluminium. Many soldiers were injured.

The aeroplanes soared triumphantly away.

Attacked London Docks And Humber, Berlin Says

BERLIN, Aug. 11, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The Admiralty gives out this bulletin:

On the night of Aug. 9-10, German airships attacked fortified places and harbors on the English East Coast.

In spite of a strong defense, British warships on the Thames and the London docks, torpedoed boats at a point near Harwich, and important constructions on the Humber were bombarded. It was observed that the results were good.

The airships returned from the successful expedition.

the Baltic, giving the invaders a line of communication by water as well as by land.

March on Vilna Continues.

GENEVA, Aug. 11.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Innsbruck, Austria, says:

"The Russian Army on the Niemen is retreating along the whole line, abandoning its positions. The Germans are continuing their march in the direction of Vilna.

"In the southern section of the Russian Poland theatre there have been sanguinary engagements between the Rivers Wieprz and Okprejka, the Russians counterattacking to cover their retreat.

"The Russian positions on the Ostrov line are menaced. Since Aug. 9 the Russians have evacuated forty miles of territory in this section. The Germans have reached the Nurec, where the Russians are resisting successfully, inflicting heavy losses."

OFFICIAL REPORTS OF DAY'S OPERATIONS

PETROGRAD, Aug. 11.—The following official statement was issued tonight at the headquarters of the Russian General Staff:

On the roads to Riga Monday evening our troops successfully repulsed the enemy attacks on the River Ekau. In the direction of Jacobstadt, (northwest of Dvinsk, on the Dvina River,) we drove back the Germans from the Schoenburg district. From Dvinsk to Pomowitz we continue to press the retreating enemy, some of whose detachments have been driven with the bayonet from the positions they are defending stubbornly at various points.

At Kovno during Monday night the Germans renewed persistent attacks on our western works and continued them Tuesday. In counter-attacks by the garrison three German battalions were almost annihilated. We took 100 prisoners and some machine guns.

Our troops, notwithstanding the losses suffered in incessant fighting, are receiving reinforcements and offering a vigorous resistance on the Bug. Near Novo Georgrievsk an attack undertaken by the Germans, after a strong artillery preparation, against our southern fortifications was stopped by the fire of the latter.

On the roads near the middle Vistula there have been minor engagements. On the roads from the Wieprz to Lukow and Vladova Tuesday our troops repulsed attacks. Germans advancing from Chelm were driven back toward the River Ukberka. In the district of Vladimir-Volynskyj our cavalry pressed the enemy.

On the Dneister fighting which began in the region of its confluence with the Stripa continued, the Austrians again employing explosive bullets. Toward evening their attacks stopped.

Germans in Benjaminow.

BERLIN, Aug. 11.—The German War Office announced today the occupation of the fortress of Benjaminow, which lies east of Novogeorgievsk, on the Vistula, northwest of Warsaw. The bulletin says:

The army group under Field Marshal von Hindenburg easily repulsed strong advances made by the Russians during the last few days along the Riga-Mitau road.

North of the Niemen there are no changes. An attack by strong Russian forces from Kovno failed. The number of Russians taken prisoners there since the 8th of August has been increased to 2,116, and of machine guns to 16.

East of Lomza our troops are advancing in the direction of the Bobr-Narew line. The enemy still holds the bridge-head at Wizna. South of Lomza the entire Russian line is retreating. The strongly fortified sections of the Caerwony-Brok position could not be held by the enemy. Our pursuing troops crossed the Caerwony-Brok position and are advancing to the east thereof. The railway junction southeast of Ostrow was captured.

East of Novogeorgievsk the fortress of Benjaminow, which was evacuated by the enemy, was occupied. Bombs were dropped by our airships on the fortresses of Novogeorgievsk and Brest-Litovsk.

The army group of Prince Leopold of Bavaria during a sharp pursuit on the left wing of the allied troops reached the region of Kaluszyn. On the right wing the army of General von Woyrsch took by storm, early this morning, rearguard positions on both sides of the Dlanka west of Lukow. More than 1,000 prisoners were taken.

The army group of Field Marshal von Mackensen is engaged in making attacks on enemy positions behind the sectors of Serpetza, southwest of Radzyn; Tismanitza, west of Karczaw, and on the Ostrow-Uchruck line.

On the Upper Bug and on the Zlota Lipa the situation is unchanged.

VIENNA, Aug. 11, (via London.)—The following official communication was issued tonight:

Yesterday the Austro-Hungarian troops, which had advanced across the Wieprz River, (southeast Poland,) dislodged the enemy from the region northwest of Komea and continued their pursuit in a northeasterly direction.

Between the Upper Tismenitza and Bug, where the Russians lately established themselves in Ostrov and Uchrusk, the attacks of the Allies are proceeding.

WANT POLAND A KINGDOM.

Austrian Poles Also Demand That It Shall Be Austrian.

VIENNA, Aug. 12, (via London.)—The Polish faction in the Austrian Parliament has issued a manifesto calling for the organization of a kingdom of Poland with its capital at Warsaw as an integral part of the Hapsburg monarchy.

The Polish National Committee, indorsing the manifesto, issues a call to the people of Polish territory, now free from Russian domination, to send delegates to a general national convention designed to perfect an organization intended to work for a reunited nation.

The manifesto reads as follows:

"At this moment of close union between our national interests and world interests of the Hapsburg dynasty, which takes the Poles under its just protection, we have no doubt the victory of the monarchy means the victory of Poland, and the conquest of Warsaw signifies the liberation of Poland, for the allied armies which have occupied Poland have continued their victorious course.

"We ardently desire that this indivisible kingdom, protected against the east, shall regain its national political liberties in its whole extent. The Polish nation sees the firmest guarantee of its political future in the Hapsburg monarchy and demands that an undivided kingdom united with Gallicia, to be virtually independent, shall be created as the kingdom in the federation of the Hapsburg monarchy.

"The Polish faction, always concerned for national Polish interests and the monarchy's prestige, expresses the firm conviction that this rebirth of Poland will materially strengthen the Hapsburg monarchy and be in accord with the vital interests of Germany, assuring the peaceful development of Western civilization. It hails Warsaw as the future capital of a liberated Poland."

LODZ, Poland, Aug. 11, (via London.)—The extent to which German institutions already have been extended in Poland is shown by an official announcement in the Lodz newspapers of the issue of a new series of bread cards and market ordinances and of the drawings of the Prussian lottery. Another item forecasts the introduction of a tax on theatre tickets and on tickets to other amusements on the German model.

On Aug. 9 we again repulsed an attack by the enemy north of Ari Burnu, inflicting heavy losses upon them.

More to the north we drove the enemy back by a vigorous attack, making prisoners of four officers and fifty men and capturing two machine guns, a quantity of arms, and heliographic and telegraphic apparatus.

Near Ari Burnu, on our left wing, we captured by a bayonet attack part of our trenches which of late had been occupied by the enemy.

At Sedd-el-Bahr we occupied on the left wing the greater part of a trench situated in an isolated position between ourselves and the enemy.

SAYS ALLIES LANDED 50,000 MORE TROOPS

But Enver Pasha Asserts That the Turks Outnumber and Outfight the Invaders.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 9, (via Berlin, Aug. 11,) (By Wireless Telegraphy to Sayville, N. Y.)—Enver Pasha, the Turkish Minister of War, said today that, according to his information, the Entente Allies in their latest operations at the Dardanelles had landed three divisions of troops, comprising about 50,000 men. The losses among them, however, he asserted, had already been very heavy.

Enver Pasha's statement was made in an interview with a correspondent of The Associated Press. The Turkish War Minister said:

"I am fully confident that we will be able to keep the Allies in check on the Gallipoli Peninsula, even if other large reinforcements are coming. We knew that the Allies' action of two days ago was due, and we prepared for it, with the result that we were not caught napping.

"According to my information the Allies landed three divisions, about 50,000 men. No doubt part of them no longer count, considering the heavy losses they sustained in attacks incident to the new offensive. The Allied losses have been very heavy so far in this new attempt to force the Dardanelles."

Enver Pasha had just had a conference with his chief of staff, at which the final report from the Gallipoli Peninsula operations were discussed. The War Minister seemed in the best of spirits, as he had just received news that a Turkish aeroplane had destroyed a submarine of the Entente Allies near Bulair. Reviewing the events at Sedd-el-Bahr during the last two days, he said:

"The Allies experienced dogged resistance in their attempts to force the Turkish positions at Sedd-el-Bahr. Two regiments attacking our centre there were annihilated with the exception of about sixty men, who were captured.

"The Allies made three attacks between our centre and left wing, with heavy losses. These were followed by counterattacks by the Turks, who are still in possession of one allied trench.

"Attacks on our right were equally futile. About 2,000 dead English lie outside our trenches there.

"The French troops occupying positions on our extreme left did not attack.

"The British also attacked at Ari Burnu in the night time, while the landing was proceeding near by to the north. The British for a short time held one of our trenches there, but were driven out."

Enver Pasha reviewed briefly the circumstances of the landing of the new expeditionary force of the Entente Powers, and said that under cover of heavy fire from the fleet the new troops early today had unsuccessfully attempted to take the range of hills north of Salt Lake. The Allies yesterday, he said, were busy joining their new force with the Ari Burnu contingent. He described the terrain now occupied by the invading forces as running from near Ari Burnu to the north shore of Salt Lake.

"We have the numerical superiority on the Peninsula," said the War Minister, "and it will take many more Allied reinforcements to deprive us of that. We are wholly convinced that we can meet every situation that the Allies can create there.

"Of course we regret the loss of the battleship Barbarossa, but have the consolation that almost two-thirds of the crew were saved. I do not attempt o minimize the loss, but we are able to get along without her."

NEW GERMAN HEAD FOR TURKS

LONDON, Aug. 11.—The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg, according to the Athens correspondent of The Star, has been appointed Commander in Chief of the Turkish forces in the Dardanelles, succeeding Field Marshal Liman von Sanders.

Field Marshal Limon von Sanders has been one of the leading figures in the reorganization of the Turkish military system brought about in recent years under German tutelage. With Field Marshal von der Goltz, also a German, he has been active in directing the Turkish army during the war, and for a time was in charge of the Ottoman forces at the Dardanelles. It was reported last month that he had been seriously wounded in a battle on the Gallipoli Peninsula. Later it was said that his injury was sustained at the hands of Turkish soldiers. Enver Pasha, Turkish Minister of War, was said to have assumed command of the forces on the Peninsula, and it was reported, without confirmation, that Field Marshal von Sanders had been recalled to Berlin.

The Star's Athens dispatch does not make it clear whether it was Grand Duke Frederick Francis of Mecklenburg-Schwerin or Grand Duke Adolph Frederick of Mecklenburg-Strelitz who is now said to have been named as Field Marshal Liman von Sanders's successor. The Grand Duke of Mechlenburg-Schwerin is a General of Prussian cavalry and a brother-in-law of the German Crown Prince. Unofficial dispatches from London last October said he was a prisoner of the Belgians. The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz is a Colonel of the Prussian army, and took the field soon after the outbreak of the war.

GERMANY'S REPORT ON BALTIC FIGHTS

Says Russian Ships Were Driven Off Near Schaeren Islands and Submarines Repelled.

BERLIN, Aug. 11, (via London.)—An official communication issued here today says:

An official report received by wireless says that our Baltic naval forces on the 10th attacked Russian ships lying in the Archipelago near the Schaeren Islands and by their fire forced the Russians to withdraw, among them an armored cruiser of the Makaroff class. We also silenced the coastal batteries.

On the same day other German cruisers drove off Russian torpedoboats which appeared near the entrance to the Gulf of Riga and an enemy destroyer was seen to be on fire. Our ships repeatedly were attacked by enemy submarines, but all their torpedoes missed their mark. Our ships suffered neither damage nor losses.

LIBAU NOW NAVAL BASE.

German Fleet There and Harbor Works Being Fortified.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—The German Baltic fleet has occupied Libau, Russia, as a naval base, says the Copenhagen correspondent of The Daily Mail.

A large force of experts is working night and day repairing, adapting, and fortifying the harbor works.

Libau, in the Province of Courland, was occupied some time ago by German forces. It is about sixty miles by water from the entrance to the Gulf of Riga and about 140 miles by water from the city of Riga.

FALL IN FRENCH REVENUES.

PARIS, Aug. 11.—Indirect taxes and State monopolies of the French Government produced $58,151,000 during July of this year, this sum being 23 per cent. less than last year. Stamp taxes were 26.40 per cent. greater, and the income tax 25.54 per cent. less.

Accessory revenues from customs statistics, navigation, stamp taxes and official seals, which alone give some idea of the economic activity of the country, show a decrease of 13.94 per cent. from July of last year as compared with a decrease of 25.27, the figure for June.

SWEDEN TO PROTEST, TOO.

Expected to Follow American Example in a Note to Britain.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—While the United States will not participate with other neutrals in joint or identic representations to Great Britain regarding interference with neutral trade, it was learned today that it was entirely possible that Sweden would send a concurrent note when the American Government dispatched its communication to Great Britain now in preparation.

At the Swedish Legation it was stated that no official negotiations on this subject between the United States and Sweden had taken place and that no draft of the Swedish protest had been submitted to the Washington Government.

RICH PERFUMER DEPORTED.

PARIS, Aug. 11.—The Permanent Court Martial at Marseilles has sentenced Henri Racine, a millionaire perfume distiller of Mentone, to perpetual deportation and payment of costs of the proceeding for supplying essence of neroli and 500 tons of olive oil through a Lausanne firm to a famous perfumer of Cologne.

URGES CONTRABAND RULING ON COTTON

Sir William Ramsay Asserts Germans Must Have It for Making Explosives.

CANNOT USE SUBSTITUTES

If They Do They Must Make Over Their Cannon and Rifles—Neutral Guarantees Violated.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—At the meeting held last night to impress upon the Government the necessity of declaring cotton contraband of war, Sir William Ramsay, the eminent scientist, asserted that cotton was the only substance required for the manufacture of munitions with which the Germans could not supply themselves. He said no chemical products could take the place of cotton in propulsive ammunition, and that ammunition made from used cotton was not so effective as that made from the fresh product.

Sir Charles Macara, President of the Master Cotton Spinners' Association of Great Britain, presided at the meeting, and Sir William was the principal speaker. An inspired statement published in most of the newspapers this morning deprecating the agitation to make cotton contraband and intimating that negotiations with the United States on this subject were proceeding had the effect of lessening interest in the meeting. Both the presiding officer and chief speaker were insistent, however, that immediate action should be taken.

In opening the proceedings the President of the Cotton Spinners said he had no doubt that the manufacture of explosives had consumed a large part of the cotton surplus created by the war and added:

"We must utilize our command of the highways of the sea, both practically and diplomatically, to prevent cotton reaching enemy countries, while at the same time acting fairly in the interests of neutral countries."

He said he was sure the Government had given anxious consideration to this most complicated problem. He remarked that in recent months the stocks of cotton accumulating at Liverpool had shown that an improvement was taking place, but that it was absolutely necessary that strong and well considered measures should be carried out to keep cotton from the countries with which Great Britain was at war.

No Substitutes Satisfactory.

Sir William Ramsay, who seconded a resolution (which was passed) demanding that cotton be declared contraband, asserted that while substitutes for cotton could be used in making nitrocellulose, none of them had what was called the "ballistic power" of cotton, and if anything else were used by the Germans it would necessitate enlarging the chambers of their guns and altering the sights of their rifles—an expedient which not even Germany could be prepared to adopt in the course of a great war.

Sir Charles Macara said that cotton was going into Germany by devious routes. It was sold, he said, to Dutch and Swedish companies under a guarantee that it would not be sold to Germany or Austria. While technically this guarantee was not violated, Sir Charles contended that it was in reality a subterfuge, for the Dutch and Swedish consignees sold the shipments to Swiss companies, who, in turn, sold them to Great Britain's adversaries.

Unfair to British Soldiers.

The estimate was made by Sir Charles that 1,000 tons of cotton was used every day of the war, and he protested that it was grossly unfair to the English soldiers and their allies that Great Britain should continue to supply Germany with this commodity.

"Had the shipment of cotton been stopped at the beginning of the war," he said, "we might reasonably expect to see the war nearing an end."

Discussing the meeting called to urge that cotton be declared contraband, The Daily Chronicle says it would have been better if the Government, instead of relying upon a blockade open to the American allegation of illegality, had included cotton and other commodities in the list of contraband and relied upon the application of the principle of "continuous voyage" to stop all goods ostensibly consigned to a neutral, but really intended for an enemy destination.

Quoting the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the British steamer Bermuda during the civil war and reviewing the complaints of the American press that some British actions under the existing blockade are illegal, The Chronicle says:

"Harsh legality is more tolerable to some minds than mild illegality. Our object is to prevent cotton going to Germany. As that can be done effectively by declaring cotton contraband, supplemented by the principle of continuous voyage, the Government's course is clear."

ASQUITH ASSAILED BY BERESFORD

Says if Premier Had Heeded His Advice, the Lusitania Would Not Have Been Lost.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 11.—In a letter which was read tonight at a meeting held to urge the Government to put cotton on the list of absolute contraband, Lord Charles Beresford said that if certain advice which he had tendered to Premier Asquith in April had been followed, the Lusitania would have been saved. Lord Charles was to attend the meeting, but sent a letter supporting the movement, wherein he said:

"On the 5th of April, last, I wrote the Prime Minister on various matters connected with the war, and showed how inefficiency, brought about by want of organization and forethought, was causing the loss of valuable lives. I further stated that the cause of the disasters mentioned were all avoidable and that men's lives were being sacrificed through criminal negligence. If the warning advice which I tendered had been acted on, the Lusitania would not have been lost. I have it in my power to prove that this statement is a fact when the proper time comes."

WASHINGTON PREPARES DIGEST OF FLAG CASES

Will Use Complaints of Misuse of American Colors as Basis for Definite Policy.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—The State Department is making a digest of all the complaints it has received concerning the alleged misuse of the American flag by belligerent merchant vessels, to be used as a basis for the determination of a definite policy and the establishment of a definite principle with reference to the right of a belligerent merchant ship to fly a neutral flag for the purpose of deception.

The European war has shown that no definite principle in this connection has ever been laid down by the maritime powers. The question of the right of a belligerent merchantman to fly a neutral flag in order to deceive an enemy warship was first presented to this Government in the present European war in a communication of the German Admiralty, issued on Feb. 4, asserting that on Jan. 31 the British Government had explicitly authorized the use of neutral flags on British merchant vessels, presumably to avoid recognition by German warships. Subsequently the State Department decided to take cognizance of the newspaper reports that the captain of the Lusitania, allegedly acting upon orders or information from the British authorities, had raised the American flag as his vessel approached the zone of German submarine activity off the British coast.

In a communication to Ambassador Page on Feb. 1 Secretary of State Bryan said that, assuming that such reports were true, "the Government of the United States, reserving for future consideration the legality and propriety of the deceptive use of the flag of a neutral power in any case for the purpose of avoiding capture, desires very respectfully to point out to his Britannic Majesty's Government the serious consequences which may result to American vessels and American citizens if this practice is continued."

The British Government was asked to do all in its power to restrain British vessels from practicing such deception. In his response to the Bryan note, Sir Edward Grey, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, said that the British Government did not give any advice to the Lusitania in connection with using a neutral flag, but he thought that in view of the fact that the German Government had announced its intention to sink merchant vessels at sight, a proceeding regarded as piracy, "it is felt that the United States Government could not fairly ask the British Government to order British merchant vessels to forego the means—always hitherto permitted—of escaping not only capture but the much worse fate of sinking and destruction."

Since then the State Department has received dozens of communications from the German Embassy complaining that British vessels were resorting to deception, not only by the use of the American flag but by covering their sides with neutral markings and even displaying large signs containing typical American names, such as might be adopted for ships.

It was stated in a Washington dispatch yesterday that the State Department had not received from the German Embassy, as had been asserted by the British Information Service in New York, a photographic copy of an affidavit made by Paul Richard Fenner, an American wireless operator, that while he was serving on the British ship Masconomo the vessel had raised the American flag and covered her side with signs bearing the name Texas in order to deceive German submarines off the British coast. The information that the affidavit had not been received came from official sources in the department. Further inquiry today developed that the complaint of Fenner had been laid before the department by the German Embassy, but the department officials had fallen into the error of thinking it had not been received from the fact that the record in the case had given a wrong spelling to the name "Masconomo."

Oil Ship Petrolite Held Up.

LONDON, Aug. 9, (Delayed by Censor.)—Announcement was made here today that the American tank steamer Petrolite had been taken into a British port.

Ship news reports gave the arrival of the Petrolite on Aug. 7 at Kirkwall, Orkney Islands, to which she evidently was taken by the British naval authorities. The Petrolite is owned by the Standard Oil Company. She changed her registry from German to American after the outbreak of the war.

CROWN PRINCE WINS ARGONNE TRENCHES

MANY POISON BOMBS USED

LONDON, Aug. 11.—Violent attacks by the Crown Prince's army in the Argonne, in which asphyxiating shells were freely employed, last night and today, resulted in the capture of some first line French trenches near Vienne-le-Chateau. In the fighting north of Arras a German night attack, reinforced by bombs, near Souchez, was repulsed. Brisk cannonades were in progress today in Le Prêtre forest and in the Vosges.

In Artois artillery fighting is reported to have taken place in the sector north of Arras.

In the Argonne the bombardment reported in the previous statement has increased in intensity. A great many asphyxiating shells were used. At daybreak the bombardment was followed by a violent German attack, made by at least three regiments, against our positions between the road of Binarville-Vienne-le-Château and the Houyette Ravine.

In the centre of this sector the Germans succeeded in penetrating our positions, from which, however, they were driven out by our counterattack during the day. Only a portion of our first-line trenches remained in their hands. The prisoners captured by us belong to the Württemberg Corps.

More to the east, toward the Fontaine-aux-Charmes, the enemy made an attack against our trenches, which was completely repulsed.

In the forest of Le Prêtre, and in the Vosges, at Linge and Hilsenfirst, a rather violent cannonading is reported.

Following is the afternoon bulletin of the French War Office:

In the Artois district there was spirited cannonading last night, and close to Souchez a German attack with bombs was repulsed.

From the Argonne there has been reported a very violent bombardment of our positions to the east of the road from Vienne-le-Château to Binarville.

On the remainder of the front the night passed quietly.

North of Souchez a French hand grenade attack was repulsed.

At Courcy, north of Rheims, the French attempted to occupy a crater which they had made before our front by mine explosions. They were prevented from doing this, and the crater was taken possession of by our troops.

Late in the evening our infantry repulsed an attack at Lingekopf.

IN THE BACKWASH OF AUSTRIA'S ARMY

TRAVELED AS A HERDER

SALT MINE A CHARNEL HOUSE

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUCHAREST, June 27.—For an American to obtain official sanction to visit the Austrian armies is at present out of question; the sanction is always politely "postponed"; so, rather than stay on indefinitely in Vienna, I went over to Budapest. There I heard some one say that it was possible to get out into the country as far as Kassa, now that the Russians had been driven out of the Carpathians. Eventually, for want of something better to do, and acting on the principle that one must try out one's luck some time, I went over to the Ostbahnhof. I bought a third-class ticket for Kassa, or "Koshsho," as the Hungarians pronounce it, and got into an evening train.

An all-night train ride in a stuffy, uncomfortable, dirty, third-class compartment. Fellow-travelers, two enormous peasant women, sisters apparently, who kept up a wide-awake chatter the whole way. Arrival at last at Kassa, just at daybreak; a few hundred Austrian infantrymen, muddy, torn, and obedient, going off somewhere, and for myself a jolly platform row because my papers were not in order.

Kassa is a fair-sized manufacturing town, but it is not an ugly place. It is almost surrounded by hills of vineyard and forest, and in its centre rises a fine old Gothic cathedral. My original idea in coming to Kassa was to wait there quietly for the Russian advance, but the recent much applauded victory was after all evidently something more than a paper victory, and I listened to rumors of a whole Russian army corps surrounded in the Dukla pass. There were also rumors of prodigious casualty lists, of which the steady flow of wounded coming into the city was in any case sufficient evidence; and it was furthermore said that cholera and the typhus were gaining ground. Indeed, the typhus caused a good deal of head shaking; for now that every one knew that the disease was brought by fleas, every one realized how easy it was to catch and dreaded catching it.

Still, confidence reigned. The war now, it seems, was over in this part of the world. It was out of question that the Russians could ever return again, now that these Germans, these wonderful Germans, God bless them, had taken over the command. One thing I know is certain. In Hungary the Germans are gods, and any talk of a split between the two Central Powers is sheer nonsense. Never have they been so closely united, so well brigaded together, as they are today.

A Chance Acquaintance.

At the small hotel where I was at last allowed to reside there came one morning a little Hungarian. He was rather fat and very bald. All through lunch he sat opposite me evidently persuaded I was a spy. Eventually, though, he discovered I was American, and forgave me the fact. Possibly because he had a brother in America. Had I met him? Lucaks Renyedi. But, no, no, of course I hadn't, and well, what kind of a place was America? Was it true one could make so much money over there? Thereupon he went into his life history: how his father had told his brother and himself to stay here in Hungary, how his brother had nevertheless gone off willfully to America and was now in a coal mine somewhere, how he himself had stayed and, faith, was not sorry for it, and how he lived on a cattle farm of his own near Debreczen, and was bringing up steers now from the Hortsbagy Puszta for consumption at the front.

"The Hortsbagy Puszta," he explained, "is a large cattle reservation, some 300 square miles, belonging to the State. There are over 100,000 head of cattle there now. It was one of the objects of the Russian advance. If they could have taken that they would have had food for some time. But they didn't take it—and now it's our boys who are going to profit. It's my first trip, however, and I don't know how it'll all work out. Of course, I take them up to Bartfa by rail. But from there on? Bye got orders simply to deliver them to the Dukla Pass. That's all very well, but what of the thirty kilometers or more intervening and the steers' hoofs? Can I manage it in twenty-four hours—as I must? To be sure, I've had some soldiers assigned to me, but that is not the trouble."

I asked him why he was going in particular to the Dukla Pass. He did not know. Perhaps it was to feed the army corps that had surrendered up there, but more likely the cattle were to be sent on to Sanok, to be there when Przemysl fell; for all the country had been devastated and offered nothing in the way of food. I suggested that he take me along with him on the journey as an extra hand. His eyes narrowed fearfully at the mere idea of it, and he shook his head. It was quite impossible. Besides he had nothing to say in the matter. It was entirely outside his jurisdiction.

In the afternoon I went over to police headquarters. My first adventure with them had given me a pretty extensive introduction. Their chief was a very nice old Hungarian Count, who supported a peerless uniform, and whose misconception of America went so far as to assume that all the marvels of our civilization were due to an unlimited check. I told him frankly what I wanted and why I wanted it. As I had expected, he gave me the necessary passport, and an hour later I had signed on with the Hungarian.

We left Kasa that same night, all of us, in a freight car, the Hungarian, myself, and some twenty or more elderly Austrian soldiers. A first glance fully explained why they were not any of them on active service. Nobody got much sleep. At a place called Eperjes there was a long halt, and every one turned out in the dark to swear at two steers, which had got their horns caught in a broken slit in the side of the car; and, further on, at a little station with the imposing name of Magyarraszlavicza, the Hungarian woke me up to get out and examine a bridge destroyed by a Russian shell, and now just rebuilt by German genius. We reached Bartfa about 4 o'clock in the morning, with dawn just coming over the hills to the east.

Town Had Been Bombarded.

While the steers were fed and watered at the station the Hungarian took me off with him in search of a carriage. I should say here that there was never any question in his mind of my helping with the others, as my passport authorized me, commanded me, to do. For him henceforth I was simply a privileged stranger to whom it was essential to show all the marvels of one's native land. Although the town had been severely bombarded, we found a carriage and incidentally some breakfast. There were several indications that business was rapidly picking up again. Outside the ruins of a house, covered now with a corrugated roof, I remember reading upon a freshly painted sign, "Berliner Kaufhaus, Spielkarten, Tabakpfeisen, Seife, Bleistifte, Mundharmonik," and so forth, and so on.

To his dismay the Hungarian learned that the Russian army corps, supposed to have been surrounded in the Dukla Pass, had escaped after all, nor was it an army corps as advertised, but merely a division, the Thirty-eighth. His only consolation was that we could hear now a distant, incessant roar of cannonading from the hills, and that the rascals might be caught yet. An hour later the steers were all on the road in droves of twenty-five, two men in charge of each, twelve droves in all. We followed behind in the carriage at a slow pace. It was a very poor, winding road amid an ocean of pine and volcanic rock—a wild scenery. There was a little snow on some of the mountain peaks off to the right, but it all would soon be melted off. And there were no glaciers, no waterfalls, just a dry woodland hill country, falling slowly down toward a vast distant plain. Game was abundant. Several times we saw chamois and once a lynx.

My companion chattered on indefinitely, local history, trivial gossip, statistics. I forget much, almost all, he told me. Near there somewhere, believe, was an opal mine, the oldest and the largest in the world—if the news is of use to any one—and the sheep trade has fallen off with the increase in land rent. Meanwhile the sun came up and the morning chill in the air was confined to shadowy overhung passages. Eventually there came down the road through the last drove of steers a group of men. They shuffled along at a fair pace, and ten or more of them were trailing what first seemed to be little toy carts. Russian prisoners, and the small carts their own captured quick-firers. We pulled up and let them pass. They must have been a hundred or more. They all looked at us as they passed, one or two smiled, but the majority simply stared, or rather scowled. They did not seem to be very happy. Their uniforms were half rags, and they had a peculiar odor of their own. In the rear followed three Austrian soldiers smoking pipes and with rifles slung over their shoulders.

The Hungarian drove on in a better humor. These hundred Russians passing by under one's very eyes compensated for the loss of a whole army corps. A mile or so further on we met an ambulance column. A German officer rode at its head. As soon as he caught sight of our carriage he cantered up and stopped us.

"Are you in charge of all that cattle?" he asked angrily.

"Yes."

"Well, who told you to come up this road? You don't belong on this road. This road is reserved for ambulances and prisoners. Supplies go up by Varanno. You should have gone up by Varanno."

The Hungarian fumbled for his papers, examined them nervously, then extended them to the officer.

"By Bartfa, it says."

They glanced at the papers together a moment; finally the officer shoved them rudely away.

"Then, why don't you ride at the head of your column where you belong, instead of trailing along here in the rear?"

We drove into the gutter. Slowly the column passed by, a long line of ambulance wagons, farm wagons, logging wagons roughly improvised with boards. The wounded were all Russians. Most of them were lying flat on their backs, wrapped up in blankets; but a few were sitting up, clinging to the jolting sides of the cart. Their faces were blank, stolid, without the slightest expression.

After the last of them had gone by we whipped up and, following the German's advice, took the lead, though the Hungarian's dignity was considerably ruffled.

"Any one can see he knows nothing about cows. Who leads a cow? Still, I'd better do as he says and avoid trouble."

The air was fresher, and there were fewer flies. The sound of the distant cannonading increased. The Hungarian was persuaded that the Russians had been surrounded again and were now being exterminated by cannon fire. So the hours passed, and the road gave more and more evidence of recent warfare. Toward 11 o'clock we reached a small village called Szvidnik, where there was a long stretch of grass along the roadside upon which the cattle could graze, and where every one could take a rest before mounting up at last steeply over the hills.

Wounded Russians Everywhere.

When everything had been settled to his satisfaction the Hungarian drove on into the village. Several houses were in ruins, but the majority were still intact. In the streets a few Austrian stretcher bearers were moving about, slowly taking wounded Russians out of houses and carrying them up to a small impromptu hospital in a barn. The gutters were littered with rubbish—cartridge cases, belts, boots, bits of uniform, torn fur gloves, bloody bandages, helmets, broken chairs, tables, tin cans, and, to one side, in a little courtyard, a great heap of rifles, bayonets, pistols, knives, also a stack of cartridges, which two soldiers were carefully tying into bags.

We looked into the windows of several of the houses. Everywhere we met the stare of silent wounded Russians lying on straw and mattresses. Further on was a little chapel flying a red cross on the relic of its roof. Inside every available inch, right up to the altars, was covered with these same miserable wounded Russians. They had been there for over a week now without proper care. We wandered among them. The air was very foul; there were flies; there were a few stifled groans here and there, and it was all very sad. A few were asleep, a few were in pain, a few were dying, a few were already dead; but the great majority lay there staring silently with curious, sleepless eyes. One of them suddenly began to whisper to me in broken German. He spoke with tears of six bullets in him and his right leg broken. Could I get him a piece of paper to put over his head and keep off the flies? It was the least I could do.

There was a priest outside, a stout, amiable man. All these, it seemed, would probably die, gangrene was so far advanced in every instance. Removing them was a mere matter of form, and in any case a long undertaking. There was the Austrian and German wounded to be cared for first. We drove the cart under a tree in a sort of garden and ate bread and sausages, bought in Bartfa. There were some soldiers close by, sitting around a fire. They were arguing about something, and, just after we had sat down, two of them began to go for each other in earnest, one an Austrian, the other a German. The German was getting the best of it when there suddenly appeared a young German Lieutenant.

Officer as Executioner.

A lond inquisition followed. In the end the Austrian was led off and tied to a tree to stay there till sunset. As for the German, since he was the aggressor, he was ordered to remove his uniform, boots, everything except his trousers. Then, hands tied behind his back, he was brought before the Lieutenant. Before I half realized what had happened, the Lieutenant drew his sword and rammed it violently into the man's stomach. There was an agonizing scream, and the man fell to the ground. It was the most dastardly brutal act I have ever seen. Yet no one said a word. On the contrary, a great silence fell upon the company and every one was of a sudden off about his business, while two of them took a spade, and, scooping up a bit of earth, buried the poor wretch. As for the young monster of a Lieutenant, he came over to a pump near us, and, after wiping his sword carefully upon the turf, washed his hands, then stood there idly and cleaned his finger nails.

From Szvidnik to the Dukla Pass the road curved up rapidly. The forests were torn and burned with shot and shell. Here were more scenes of violent struggle, trees fallen across the road, and now roughly shoved aside, rudimentary trenches, abandoned artillery caissons, two or three cannon with broken wheels, and soon bloated, mangled horses, legs in the air, and finally the dead. They lay there to right and left, Russians for the most part; some dead in a last agony, their fingers clutching the air; others in the gutter, where they had crawled to die, blackened face buried on an arm; others killed in full action, legs tense, still striving, an extended hand clutching a broken rifle.

We drove on. Mile upon mile of such sights. There came a jagged promontory of rock near the road. The Hungarian seized my arm and pointed up.

"Look there."

"What?"

"Lammergeier!"

And as he spoke two huge vultures flew heavily over our heads, only to perch on a rock lower down.

"Ah, that must be it," he said, pointing now to a road running parallel to ours on the other side of a bit of ravine, "the road to the Beinhaus I heard them speaking of."

As I could see no Beinhaus, or charnel house, he went on to explain that there was an old, abandoned salt mine near by and that they were throwing the dead into it, as the quickest and simplest way of being rid of them. The road soon joined ours, and at the junction was a cross, and upon it a haggard, weather-beaten Christ. Here we met three large hay wagons coming down the hill. We gave them the right of way. Each was packed with dead bodies, hands and arms and feet falling over the sides or jutting out through the bars. We watched them joggle down the by-road to the salt mine. Suddenly one of the bodies tumbled off the top of the first cart. There were shouts and oaths exchanged between the first and second wagons; but the body lay where it had fallen. Finally, the last wagon stopped and two soldiers pitchforked it up on top of the others.

"A soldier's burial," murmured the Hungarian.

In the Dukla Pass.

At last the road climbed over a short incline and turned through a shallow opening through the hill—the Dukla Pass. Here was a large picket of Austrian soldiers, camp fires, field kitchens, hundreds of ammunition wagons waiting the word to move on, and to one side a sort of stock yard, everything neatly, mathematically set up among the thousand remnants of a precipitous flight. Nothing could indicate more distinctly the efficient advance of the victorious army and the disorganized retreat of the defeated. We were forced to wait some time for the steers to come up. They came up slowly, rebelliously, shaking their horns and bellowing. It was none too soon. A few were bleeding at the hoof. Soldiers ran down to meet them and laughingly whacked the poor beasts over this last stage of their adventures.

Personally, we were not allowed beyond the picket. Here our rôle had ended. Half an hour later we were rattling back down towards Zsvidnik, past the Christ on the cross, past more groups of those flapping, filthy vultures, past the three wagons now returning empty from the salt mine, past the dead and mangled and the rotting. We had seen it all before coming up, but it was somehow much worse now as we went down.

In the cold evening light each incident took on a more gruesome aspect. It is not an idle figure of speech to say that words cannot express such scenes. The attack upon one's senses is too acute to be described. The very stench alone sickened one to the core, and while the stupendous rumble of the cannon pelted one's eardrums continually one's coward civilian heart thumped away at the thought of how little human life counted up here and what a hellish thing it would be to have to spend a lonely night on these God-forsaken hills.

And that is why that once one is across the frontier here in Rumania most of these impressions fade out of one's consciousness. The mind is not constructed to retain them. Instead one is tempted to look back in wonder at the admirable efficiency with which that swarm of different races has united itself in one common army and the tireless devotion with which it is battling and conquering mountains of difficulty. Personally, however, such admiration as I may have will always be clouded by the memory of that monstrous young Lieutenant standing by the pump at Zsvidnik, idly cleaning his nails. ALDEN BROOKS.

GERMAN SOCIALIST SPLIT; THE SECEDERS SHADOWED

Letters of Those Suspected of Planning a Strike Opened—20 Arrests at Baden.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—The Daily Chronicle's special correspondent who lately returned from Germany, dealing with the Socialist split in that country, gives a conversation he had with one of the officials of the new movement started by Edward Bernstein and Dr. Liebknecht in opposition to the so-called Governmental Socialists. This official said:

"A split in the Social Democratic Party, the prevention of which has been the chief aim of all leaders of that party for years past, cannot be averted any longer; indeed it may be said it has already come about.

"Those who are suspected of planning or advising a strike are terrorized. They are shadowed everywhere they go. Their letters are opened. In fact, there is in existence such an elaborate system of spying as to make organized action on the part of the workers absolutely impossible.

"The police take equally severe measures with regard to Socialist literature. Domiciliary visits are frequently paid in suspected quarters. Recently at a town in Baden twenty men and women were arrested on a charge of distributing socialistic pamphlets and treated as common criminals.

"The future of the Social Democratic Party is not easy to foretell just now. I am sorry to say many comrades in the army are yielding to the influences of the general wave of enthusiasm for the war which is passing over the country and are becoming 'plus royaliste que le roi.' But after the war the party struggle will be renewed with increased violence, as it is quite certain that the promises held out to us by the Government will not be fulfilled."

The correspondent asked the following question: "Assuming that the people find out after the war that it was not a defensive war, do you think the consequences will be serious?"

"Our people," was the reply, "will never believe that they have been misled. As for myself, I, too, believe that this war was forced upon Germany. But assuming that clear proof of the contrary comes to light, I do not believe that this will materially change public opinion for years to come. No nation can possibly come to any other conclusion after the continued pressure by word and pen, which is being brought to bear upon it now."

The correspondent adds:

"The statement of my informant clearly shows that as things stand now any organized labor movement which would affect the manufacture of war material or the general conduct of the war or a movement for peace would not have the slightest chance of success. Public opinion would, moreover, be strongly against any such movement, so much so that, as a German remarked to me, 'not one stone of their buildings would be left upon another if they dared to interfere with the war.' A movement for peace can therefore hardly be expected from these quarters."

UPHOLDS THE CHANCELLOR.

Attacks on Bethmann-Hollweg Resented by Liberal Party Leaders.

BERLIN, via London, Aug. 11.—Leaders of the National Liberal Party, at a meeting last night in Berlin, expressed unanimous condemnation of intrigues against Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg. It was declared that the attitude of opposition to the Chancellor as expressed recently in certain party circles did not represent the opinion of the party as a whole.

The Chancellor's public statements, it was said, give no reason to suppose that he is conducting a weak, illusionist policy. The meeting declared that his policy deserves full confidence.

GOVERNMENT SEEKS DATA ON MUNITIONS

Asks Manufacturers How Much They Could Produce in an Emergency.

OLD ESTIMATES TOO LOW

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—American manufacturers of war supplies have been asked by the War Department for information concerning their facilities, with particular reference to what service the United States Government could expect from them in case of emergency.

With virtually every private plant in the country taxed to its utmost capacity in filling enormous orders from the European belligerents, army officials want to know whether expansion of facilities has kept pace with the demand and whether the Government would be certain of a source of supply to supplement the output of its arsenals and armories.

Even in ordinary times the Government factories produce only a part of the arms and ammunition for the army. Measures to strengthen the national defense during the coming session of Congress are expected to result in vastly increased demands for supplies, aside from any emergency that may arise. Consequently the War Department has instituted a general inquiry to take stock of resources.

"Recognizing the fact that the arsenals would be unable to produce an adequate supply of war material to meet an emergency of war, it has been the practice of the Government, both in time of peace as well as in war, to purchase from private establishments a considerable part of the war material currently required. This policy makes it necessary for the Ordnance Department to obtain from these establishments from time to time information as to their ability and capacity to produce various classes of such material.

"Such extraordinary changes and unprecedented expansion of the facilities of American manufacturers have resulted from the demands for material by the warring nations of Europe, particularly for the production of certain classes of ammunition, that it has been necessary for the Ordnance Department recently to correspondingly increase its activity to keep in touch with this industrial development. It is probable that the expansion noted has not ceased, but officials believe that a stage has been reached which renders desirable a general inquiry as to the manufacturing facilities now in existence, and with a view to obtaining information on the subject the Ordnance Department is sending out certain inquiry to a number of manufacturers, accompanied by forms designed to facilitate the making of replies.

"The War Department expressly states that it does not now contemplate purchasing any of the material referred to, as it had no special funds which may be used for such a purpose. No special inquiry is deemed necessary for the expenditure of the limited funds from current appropriations which are at the bureau's disposal."

The letter of the Ordnance Bureau addressed to manufacturers is as follows:

Gentlemen: 1. Prior to the outbreak of the present European war the Ordnance Department compiled from the best data then available the probable output of ordnance material from establishments in this country that might be expected in the event of an emergency. The enormous expenditure of such material in the present conflict abroad, however, indicates that the estimate of the Department for a reserve supply and for an increased output in case of war have been too low, and a larger production must be provided for.

2. While it is generally understood that the increased demand for war material has resulted in a marked expansion in many of the commercial plants of this country for the production of this class of material, it is believed that there are a number of plants not now engaged which, with their present equipment or relatively minor additions thereto, could undertake the manufacture of certain articles, which in the event of an emergency would be required in large quantities. Among the articles, the quantities of which would be needed, are shrapnel cases, shrapnel heads, common steel shell, parts of fuses, and brass cartridge cases. These articles with their principal dimensions and general specifications as shown on the inclosed print, and this Department would appreciate any information you may care to give concerning the present or prospective capacity of your own plant for their production.

3. A blank for this purpose is inclosed, and you will note that provision has been made for entering the capacity of your plant for the forgings without the machine work, for the machine work only, and for furnishing the completed article. Of course, it is to be understood that the department is not now in the market for this material, and that no promise of an order is involved in this inquiry.

4. Where more than a month is required after receipt of order to reach the maximum production, kindly state the output for each month until the maximum shall have been reached.

5. Any reply which you may make to this inquiry will be considered as confidential if you so desire.

Referring to the President's intention to take up the formulation of a program of national defense on his return to Washington The Iron Age correspondent says:

"President Wilson is disposed to be a little impatient at the criticism in some quarters that his policy 'tends toward militarism.' There is, of course, absolutely no ground for such a charge. When it is remembered that the present expenditures for both the military and naval services represent an annual charge upon the population of the United States of less than $3 per capita, and that the most liberal scheme of enlargement thus far foreshadowed would not increase this tax beyond $5, taken in connection with the positive statements of Administration officials that no form of compulsory military service is contemplated, the absurdity of any charge of militarism in connection with the program now being formulated will be appreciated."

ENGLISHMAN DEFENDS THE AMERICAN PRESS

No Papers Have Better War News, Says H. S. Perris, Answering Watson's Attack.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—H. S. Perris, Secretary of the British-American Peace Centenary Committee, who recently returned from a visit to the United States, has a letter in today's Westminster Gazette, protesting against the article it published by Aaron Watson, the well-known journalist.

Watson, who had been on a trip to the United States, made various accusations concerning the manner in which American newspapers handled the war news. Among other things Watson asserts that in America there was no demand that newspapers should supply complete and unbiased news, and then said:

"The war is left to speak for itself through the telegrams. German telegrams come first and almost invariably they are taken at their face value. Very incorrect statements made on one day are never corrected on another, and so there arises the impression that the Germans are sweeping Europe at their will."

Mr. Watson concludes:

"But the newspapers understand their public. They know that the American, who has any real care about the matter, hates war as what Kipling calls 'A disturber of traffic.' That he will endure almost anything for the sake of keeping out of it, that he is feeling immense pride in his neutrality, and that he believes the United States will ultimately play the great part of universal peacemaker. And so these newspapers are disinclined to trouble the peace of their own countrymen in the meantime by a too scrupulously accurate narrative of events or a too liberal supply of explanation, comment or correction."

Mr. Ferris, in his letter, says he is unable to comprehend how any one could make such statements as these, in view of the record during the war of leading American newspapers, among which he especially mentions THE NEW YORK TIMES.

"I believe," he says, "that no press in the world has on the whole been more fully informed of the underlying causes and issues of the war and the general course of events than the leading journals of the United States, and I venture in sincere gratitude to bring my humble tribute to their capacity, largeness of view, and unerring instinct for the cause of justice and liberty, treaty, faith, and humanity, and ultimately for all that will best serve to achieve a durable peace."

RUSSIAN IMPORTS PLAN.

Arrangements Made for Handling Shipments.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—Arrangements for handling shipments of Russian goods to the United States under the recent agreement modifying the Russian embargo were completed today by the Department of Commerce. Under the plan, already approved by the Russian Embassy here and forwarded to Petrograd for ratification, all imports from Russia, consigned to the Secretary of Commerce, will be received at the office of the commercial agent of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in New York, who will undertake distribution to importers, under guarantees that the goods will not be re-exported in any form.

Shippers desiring to import Russian products will be required to submit to the commercial agent a statement of the goods to be obtained and to deposit a bond to be held pending the consumption of the imports or until the end of the European war. If the statement and bond are approved by Commercial Attaché Medzihkovsky, of the Russian Embassy, the Russian Department of Finance will issue a permit for exportation.

Dr. E. E. Pratt, Chief of the Bureau, left here for New York today, to arrange details there.

The Russian embargo has held up importations amounting to millions of dollars annually, importers being particularly anxious to secure the release of vetch seed, used as fertilizer, hides and skins, and mineral oils.

POWDER CONTRACT RUMOR.

$26,000,000 Deal Between du Ponts and Allies Reported.

Reports came from Philadelphia last night that the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Powder Company had contracted with the Allies for the delivery of 35,000,000 pounds of powder. At the rate of 75 cents a pound such an order would amount to approximately $26,000,000. A Director of the company stated last night that he had heard nothing of such an order.

A man closely connected with the du Pont interests said that the powder company's contracts were arranged through intermediaries. The company, he said, dealt directly with Governments and had standing contracts with most of the European powers in peace as well as in war. The contracts ran for a certain number of years, he said, and were subject only to price calls by the United States Government.

The powder most used in the manufacture of shells is smokeless. Army and navy contracts in this country are at the rate of 53 cents a pound, but it is asserted that foreign contracts, owing to the scarcity of munitions, would call for much higher prices. Contracts calling for prices as high as $1.20 a pound for smokeless powder have been reported. It costs the United States Government about 38 cents a pound to manufacture smokeless.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—In spite of reports to the contrary the note in reply to Austria has not yet been sent.

In fact it has not yet been signed. Secretary Lansing was not at the State Department today.

BIG GOLD SHIPMENT MOVED TO WALL ST.

ALL THE COINS AMERICAN

Total Value $19,534,200—Accompanying Securities Believed to Exceed $30,000,000.

Crowds of many thousands watched from the sidewalks yesterday morning while twenty-five trucks of the American Express Company, escorted by twenty mounted policemen, conveyed from the express terminal at Tenth Avenue and Thirty-third Street, to the Sub-Treasury, a huge shipment of treasure from the Bank of England to J. P. Morgan & Co.

The total value of the shipment, according to the officials of the American Express Company, was more than $50,000,000. W. P. Hamilton, of J. P. Morgan & Co., made the following statement:

"The gold shipment was made up of 1,050,000 ounces of United States gold coin, worth $18.604 per ounce; so its total value was $19,534,200."

Mr. Hamilton refused to say anything about the value of the securities, which must be worth more than $30,000,000, to make up the total named by the American Express Company. In previously announcing that the shipment was two-thirds gold and one-third securities, the American Express Company got the proportions reversed.

The shipment arrived at the express company's terminal shortly before 6 o'clock in the morning in seven steel cars under heavy guard. This train was preceded by a dummy train of five empty cars. The dummy stayed about three miles in front all the way from Halifax in order that it might stand proxy for the treasure train and suffer the damage in case a German agent of the Werner Horn type had been able to blow up a bridge or plant a dynamite mine along the tracks.

Forty Guards with Rifles.

The forty guards with repeating rifles, who had been continuously on duty for twenty-five hours since they took the place of the Canadian Government agents at Vanceboro, Me., got coffee and sandwiches immediately on their arrival here. By 8 o'clock there had arrived at the express terminal numerous officials of the American Express Company and representatives of J. P. Morgan & Co.

The first and last cars of the train were empty and intended to serve as buffers in case of a collision. The unloading began with the sixth car shortly after 8 o'clock.

The gold train was run alongside a narrow concrete platform on the other side of which the twenty-five trucks were backed up to the platform. Robert E. M. Cowie, Vice President and General Manager of the American Express Company; R. Christie, New York Superintendent of the company; C. W. Roble, the Boston Superintendent who had had charge of the train on the last part of the trip; Mr. Hamilton of the Morgan firm and others entered the car to supervise the unloading.

The 700 leather sacks which contained the gold were each packed in dilapidated square trunks. The gold had come from London so packed in order that the real nature of the shipment might not be easily guessed. The enclosed boxes were about eighteen inches long and twelve inches wide and twelve inches high, made of thick pine boards heavily bound at each end with iron bands. On each of the six sides of each box was a circle of red sealing wax over the line where the boards met, so that any tampering with the boxes could be detected.

As the first trunk was opened, officials and clerks of the express company got out bills of lading and checked up each box that was lifted from the car and placed upon a motor driven conveyor on the platform. Each box bore numbers and letters and was thoroughly identified before it left the car.

Ten boxes made up the load for each conveyor. A few minutes after 8 o'clock the conveyors, which at this terminal have replaced the old hand trucks as freight handlers, were spinning along the platform, keeping a crowd of officials and reporters jumping for safety.

German Workman Excused.

Two of the hardest working drivers of the conveyors were Germans, who shouted with a strong accent to clear the way for themselves. One of the officials of the company said that a third German employe had refused absolutely to handle the gold and had been permitted to quit his job for the day.

Outside the terminal the twenty mounted policemen went on guard at 8 o'clock, when the unloading of the gold began. Captain Conboy of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station was in charge of reserves who patrolled the terminal on foot, and Sergeant Foley of the same station was in charge of several policemen inside of the terminal. Photographers who arrived early in the morning pleaded with General Manager Cowie to be allowed to take pictures inside the building.

"I don't think it would be wise to furnish wrongly disposed persons with exact pictures of the cars," he replied.

Later, however, Mr. Cowie permitted photographers to enter the terminal, but not to take pictures of the inside of any of the treasure cars. Guards with rifles, revolvers, and shotguns were posed in front of the doors of their cars, and flashlights began to explode. Moving-picture operators also took reels of the unloading and later of the gold-laden caravan.

One of the officials of the express company, who had traveled with the shipment all the way from Halifax, said that the people there knew nothing about it, and that the men who unloaded the gold from the warship in which it arrived did not know what they were handling, unless they were able to guess by the weight.

"The harbor at Halifax was full of warships," he said, "but not a word about them was printed in any of the papers, and the people of Halifax did not know why the ships were there. The gold, however, did come over in a battleship or battle cruiser, with a large convoy of torpedo-boat destroyers, and an Admiral was in charge of it."

While it was rumored that the warship also brought over a large quantity of gold and securities for the Canadian Treasury, no confirmation of this report could be obtained from Canadian sources. Inquiries by telegraph to Halifax and Ottawa were unanswered. the Canadian censorship suppressing all information concerning the shipment.

Armed Caravan Starts.

None of the twenty-five trucks moved until all had been loaded and the officials of the express company and of J. P. Morgan & Co. had satisfied themselves that the 700 cases of gold and the several crates of securities were intact. The procession formed with an interval of only five feet between the trucks, bankers and express officials following in taxicabs. A screen of mounted policemen trotted off in front, and motor cycle and mounted policemen guarded the sides and rear. The back of each truck was barricaded by an iron lattice work, and inside of each sat three men with rifles.

The gold caravan moved along Tenth Avenue into Thirty-fourth Street, west to Eighth Avenue, down to Hudson Street, west to Canal Street, and thence through Centre Street, Park Row, and Broadway to Wall Street, where the leading truck stopped in the rear of the Sub-Treasury. The rest remained stationery along Wall and Broadway while thousands of persons collected.

There was a delay of half an hour at the Sub-Treasury while two rooms were cleared to receive the shipment. Meantime traffic men and reserves were busy in keeping back the rapidly growing crowd.

It developed on the arrival of the trucks at the Sub-Treasury that no one knew how much gold they contained or whether it was in the form of bars, sovereigns, or United States coin. Had the gold been in the form of British coin or bars it would have been sent next door to the Assay Office, but a sample box taken from the first truck and opened disclosed three bags, each containing $9,300 in American coin.

The old Sub-Treasury is lacking in modern facilities and is cramped for room, so that the unheralded arrival of so much valuable freight caused a good deal of confusion. It was decided at first to pile the wooden boxes in the broad hallway running through the building from Wall Street to Pine Street, but the difficulty of watching such an exposed place led to a change in plans, and the trucks were wheeled into a side room to be unloaded. There, watched by a large staff of checkers for the Government, J. P. Morgan & Co., the express company, and the British Government, the boxes were hauled out one by one to be opened by Treasury Department laborers.

The contents of each bag had been packed by weight and not by count, and in some cases where it was necessary in order to make a required weight a piece cut from a gold coin had been added. These odd pieces were turned into the Assay Office for credit.

Silent About Securities.

It was announced on the completion of the checking operations that the gold received totaled approximately $19,540,000. As for the securities, which were taken directly to the vaults under the Morgan Building, no member of the banking firm would say a word other than that the amount and nature was of no proper public interest and would not be announced.

With the latest consignment, the total gold imports into the United States since Jan. 1, 1915, amount to more than $145,000,000. Before yesterday's shipment, more than $94,000,000 came from Canada, more than $20,000,000 from London, and more than $11,000,000 from France.

The arrival of the latest gold was without effect in strengthening exchange rates. Demand sterling which has declined to 4.74⅝ on Tuesday despite the news of the shipment, went still lower yesterday, touching 4.74¾. The close yesterday was off 3-16.

CALLS GAFFNEY UNNEUTRAL.

London Paper Attacks Our Consul for His Anti-British Attitude.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—A prominent position is given by The Morning Post to an attack upon T. St. John Gaffney, United States Consul General at Munich, for his alleged "unneutral, pro-German and anti-British" attitude. The Post says he visited London some time ago to make inquiries regarding German prison camps and "while enjoying the hospitality of this country he was so loud in his expressions of anti-British opinion that he gave offense to many persons stopping at the same hotel."

The Post charges that in other instances also Mr. Gaffney used "his official position as a house-top for the proclamation of his personal prepossessions," which "is especially deplorable at a time when the United States is looking after the interests of British subjects."

SHIPS' MARKS TOO SMALL.

Germany Sends Notification to Sweden Regarding Neutral Vessels.

LONDON, Thursday, Aug. 12.—According to The Morning Post's Stockholm correspondent, Germany has notified the Swedish Foreign Office that the present marks on neutral ships which indicate their nationality are not regarded by the officers of submarine boats as sufficiently distinguishable at a considerable distance.

DISTRESS IN LITHUANIA.

Peaceable, War-Ruined Population in Need of Food.

Intense suffering has been caused in Lithuania by the war, according to information made public yesterday by the Lithuanian-American Relief Committee, organized to give aid to Lithuanian war sufferers in Russia and Germany.

"Persons arriving in this country from the front relate terrible destruction caused by the war," says the committee. "Vast areas in the governments of Suwalki and Kovno present a most appalling sight. Once flourishing cities and villages have been razed, and at present there are only heaps of ruin and débris. For miles there is not a hut standing. Even the trees have been cut down by shell fire as by a tornado."

The Lithuanians have inhabited the Neman region and the Baltic provinces for hundreds of years. The peaceful blue-eyed people are Indo-Aryans, related neither to Slavs nor Teutons. In the Middle Ages the Kingdom of Lithuania embraced vast territory from the Baltic to the Black Sea. It was once very powerful. The Lithuanian King Vitautas, repulsed Teutonic invaders at Greenwald in 1410. He helped Russia to liberate itself from the Tartar yoke and checked their invasion of Western Europe. The Lithuanian-American Relief Committee says the Lithuanians are not well known in America because they are often confused with Russians, Germans or Poles. It adds:

"Prince Albert Radziwill, who married Miss Dorothy Deacon of Boston, is perhaps the best known here. Yet Radziwill, one of the greatest magnates of Europe, whose family is one of the oldest and proudest Lithuanian families, is often mentioned here as Polish or Russian. The same is true of Prince Galitzin, Prince Oginski, Count Tishkevich, and others. The Lithuanian General, Kosciusko, and the famous painter, Semiradski, are known here as Poles. This confusion of Lithuanians with Poles has placed the Lithuanians in a very disadvantageous light, but never has it proved to be so deplorable as during the present conflict.

"While Lithuania is called Northern Poland, none of the Polish relief organizations has helped Lithuanian refugees, and consequently the latter are entirely destitute. In some localities the population subsists on a few spoonfuls of soaked grain, but many are lacking even this food."

MORE TROOPS AWAIT GEN. FUNSTON'S CALL

TEXANS FEAR AN INVASION

Reported That 1,000 Carranzistas Have Crossed River Already—Revival of Murder Plot.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—Raiding and guerilla fighting in Texas along the Mexican border will be met by strengthening the United States forces there if Major Gen. Funston requests it. Secretary Garrison of the War Department and other officials insisted today, however, that any such troop movement would have no connection whatever with Mexican internal affairs and would be only for the protection of Americans in that district.

War Department officials could get no full or satisfactory information of the character of the raiders. One report was received here that about 1,000 Carranza troops from the Tamaulipas garrison of General Navarette had been crossing into Southeastern Texas near Brownsville to rally Mexicans in the State to an uprising. It was said they were under command of Jean de Los Santos, Vincente Davila, and Carlos Garcia.

Secretary Garrison said he had no information of that character, and added that if Carranza troops were found in Texas they would be disarmed, and shot if they resisted. Advices from Caranza sources at San Antonio declared there were no such leaders as Santos and Garcia, and that Davila was far from Brownsville. They demand that any Carranza troops had crossed the line.

Texas Rangers in Hidalgo County captured a flag bearing in Spanish the motto "Army of Liberation for Mexicans in Texas," and officers at Brownsville said that for several days from thirty to forty Mexicans had been crossing into Texas each day, some of them having the appearance of soldiers and carrying cartridge belts.

Requests for more troops came to the War Department from officials along the border. These have been referred to General Funston, upon whom Secretary Garrison depends to report whether he can handle the situation with the force available. Funston has ready on the border and at Texas City about 17,000 troops—infantry, cavalry and artillery. Secretary Garrison telegraphed the General today that the 12,000 mobile troops remaining at other posts in continental United States would be sent to the border if he asked for them.

General Funston reported that the best information he could gather indicated that raids in Cameron, Hidalgo and Starr counties were directed by Texans having headquarters in Brownsville who, having a political fued, sent bandit gangs to rob and attack each other. Secretary Garrison expressed doubt that Mexicans from over the border were responsible for all the disturbances and emphasized that the troubles had no connection with internal affairs in Mexico.

Texans, Armed, Await Attack.

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Aug. 11.—Practically every American citizen in the three southernmost counties of Texas—Cameron, Hidalgo, and Starr—is under arms tonight in fear that the overwhelming Mexican population of the section may break out in a racial fight.

The dead in the raids in this vicinity total eighteen—two soldiers, two American citizens and fourteen Mexicans. The raids began July 5.

Army and federal investigators declare the organizers of the trouble are working under the "Plan of San Diego," which calls for the death of every American male over 16 years of age in communities along the Rio Grande and also along the border of New Mexico, Arizona, and California. It has been reported to General Funston that more than 3,000 Mexicans are pledged to this organization already.

Watch River for Invasion.

Authorities here tonight are watching the river below Brownsville about ten miles, at a point where it was reported several hundred armed Mexicans had gathered on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande, waiting to cross the river under darkness. A Mexican rancher in Hidalgo County, about fifty miles up the river from Brownsville, appealed for aid this afternoon, asserting that eighty armed Mexicans were hiding on his ranch. He said they had threatened to kill him if he told of their presence.

Officials here have reports that 1,700 former Carranza soldiers have crossed the river along a zone 120 miles wide from a point below Brownsville to Rio Grande City up the river. At least thirty different parties are said to have crossed. Most of this river bank winds through brush and woods far from any roads, so that a small army of troops would have difficulty in guarding it.

The arrival of troops in force from Laredo appears to have caused the bandits to shift rapidly westward today into the less populous sections between here and Laredo. About Mercedes, a few miles northwest of here, rangers and cavalrymen pressed the bandits so hard today that some of them fled across the river. Cavalrymen captured thirty-five horses from one band near Mercedes.

Say Authorities Were Warned.

Reports that politicians on the American side were responsible for the uprisings aroused much resentment here. At San Benito a mass meeting of protest was held. This meeting declared that the outbreak was mainly an outgrowth of lawlessness which had long existed on the Mexican side of the river. On June 4, speakers at this meeting declared, the Secretary of War was informed that trouble was likely to break out on the American side from this very source.

In Brownsville today announcement was made that four companies of United States infantry would arrive from Laredo tomorrow morning.

Laredo today was disturbed by rumors that Mexicans were preparing to cross into Zapata County, on the Rio Grande, just below Laredo. Mexicans in Laredo said they believed a dangerous sentiment had been fomented among Mexicans across the border about the alleged harm done to Mexico by the failure of the United States to recognize Carranza. These Mexicans said they feared it needed only a good opportunity for this sentiment to break into violence against the American border.

Laredo reported tonight that one American passenger arriving today from Monterey said there had been an increase of anti-American sentiment there. It was said the American smelter at Monterey soon would close down. Certain Mexicans used this report to spread a story that it had been opened only to give the American owners an opportunity to export about $2,000,000 worth of bullion to the United States.

Cavalrymen and armed citizens today searched the brush south of Mercedes, Texas, for a band of mounted armed Mexicans, who were seen in that section yesterday. They left a trail of cut barbed wire fences as they rode through the big pastures between Mercedes and the Mexican border. Mercedes is twenty miles north of the border, and is forty miles northwest of Brownsville.

Forty or fifty Mexicans were in a running fight this afternoon twelve miles from Harlingen with a detachment of soldiers reinforced by a citizens' posse. The same Mexicans were seen earlier in the day trotting their horses westward toward Mercedes.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Aug. 11.—General Funston has made a report to Washington indicating that secret organizers are aligning Mexicans under the "plan of San Diego," which calls for the seizure of the American States on the border and the establishment of a republic for Mexicans, negroes, Japanese, and Chinese. For the last two years dissatisfied Texas-Mexicans and refugees from across the border have been spreading the principles of the plan.

Information given to General Funston is that normal conditions will not be restored until enough troops are distributed to form a guard for the villages in the Brownsville territory.

7 NATIONS FRAME NOTE TO MEXICO

proponents of the plan that all armed opposition, however powerful at first, will gradually disintegrate as a result of the legitimate assistance of a diplomatic and economic character given to the recognized Government.

It was learned tonight that the Washington Government, following its traditional policy of abstaining from joint action in a diplomatic sense, had suggested that the communication which is to go forward to the Mexican factions be identical, each of the Governments signing it in reality as a separate and distinct expression on its part.

One thing which all the Ambassadors and Ministers, together with Secretary Lansing, are firmly determined upon is that the triumph of the revolution in Mexico shall be recognized. There is no intention to afford recognition to any element except those which have overthrown Huerta and fought the present revolution with its program of reform.

Minister Pezet of Peru, although not one of the mediators, attended the last half hour of the conference. Later he said:

"Whatever this conference decides upon represents the sentiment of all South America. We are as one on this proposition."

The note was taken to the conference by Secretary Lansnig. It had been submitted to President Wilson and had been approved by him. The note had been drafted by the Secretary of State, with suggestions from his fellow mediators.

When the Latin-American delegates reached the conference, they came from a meeting at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, which Mr. Lansing did not attend. While the diplomats were reticent as to what went on at the Ritz, it was said they decided to make a formal stand if necessary, against the United States sending troops into Mexico to establish any form of government, on the ground that any admission of the propriety of such a move would justify this country in the future, in taking similar action in their countries. They would sanction the sending of United States troops into Mexico only for the protection of the neutral lives and property, and only after every other means of settlement had been exhausted. It is understood that this action of the Latin-Americans was predicated upon the reports of battleships being rushed to Mexican waters.

Assurances by Lansing.

As soon as the conference was called to order Secretary Lansing assured the Latin-American diplomats that the United States in sending battleships to Mexico intended only to afford protection to foreigners and a place of refuge. He explained that the action should not be construed as affecting the effort of the United States to bring about peace by peaceful methods in Mexico. He pointed out that one American warship was being taken away from Vera Cruz to bring Senhor Cardoso, the Brazilian Minister, away, and that the dispatch of two more did not mean any great increase of force.

Dispatches telling of General Carranza's notification to the United States and the other mediating powers that he considered the Pan-American conference an infringement upon the sovereignty of Mexico were read by the delegates, but not discussed officially. Such comments as were made were to the effect that evidently General Carranza had a distorted opinion of the purposes of the conferences.

Secretary Lansing refused to discuss the Carranza note.

"It hadn't reached the State Department when I left this morning," he said.

The Latin-Americans were deeply interested in Mr. Lansing's assurances concerning the sending of battleships to Vera Cruz. After the conference the Secretary was asked if there had been any evidence of bad feeling because of the move.

"Absolutely none," was his reply. Mr. Lansing said that the text of the note, would not be made public until after it had reached the Mexican leaders.

"Was there in the note any intimation of an alternative to the suggestion of a peaceful settlement by the Mexican leaders themselves?"

"None at all," was the reply. "We are not dealing in alternatives."

Among those who called on the conferees, but who did not take a formal part in the conference were John Barrett, Director of the Pan-American Bureau, and Paul Fuller, Sr., who acted as emissary for President Wilson on a recent tour of investigation in Mexico.

"It is not fair to taste the pudding until is done," said Mr. Fuller when asked what had been done. "By the next time we shall have it nice and brown."

Wanted to Parley Further.

All of the conferees refused to say whether the note set a time limit for a reply. There was little concealment of the fact that the Latin-Americans were not willing to go so far as Secretary Lansing. Assent to the note was given only after Secretary Lansing had made it plain that the psychological time had come for action in the Mexican situation. The Latin-Americans were ready for further parley over the terms of the note, but Mr. Lansing is said to have protested against further delay. It is reported that their governments have instructed the Latin-American diplomats to deal gingerly with any proposal that involves the use of armed force by the United States in dealing with Mexico.

The note will be submitted to President Wilson today by Secretary Lansing. It will be published simultaneously in Mexico and the United States at the proper time.

CARRANZA ISSUES ROUND OF PROTESTS

Notes Sent to This and Latin-American Nations Warning Against Mediation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—Elesio Arredondo, head of the Carranza agency here, addressed today a note to Secretary Lansing, in which the United States was virtually warned against any interference with the course of the revolution in Mexico, either without or with the co-operation of Latin-American Governments. This note was sent in accordance with instructions from General Carranza. Its text was made public by the Carranza agency, which also gave to the press textual copies of telegraphic communications sent by Carranza to the Presidents of the A B C Governments.

The notes sent by Carranza to Argentina and Chile are identical. They warn the two nations that dangers that might come from interference by American countries in the affairs of another American country. To the President of Brazil a note of different tenor was transmitted. In this Carranza credited reports that Senhor da Gama, the Brazilian Ambassador to the United States, had not assented to the mediation program. Of this he expressed appreciation, but he did say some unkind things about Senhor Cardoso de Oliveira, the Brazilian Minister to Mexico, who has been representing the diplomatic interests of the United States in Mexico. These expressions tend to confirm the report that the departure of the Brazilian Minister from Mexico was due to finding the situation there unbearable.

"I regret to say," General Carranza telegraphed the President of Brazil, "that Minister Cardoso de Oliveira has been one of the persons who have brought the greatest evil to the Republic of Mexico, and who in a certain way may be responsible for the present status of our relations with the Government of the United States."

Carranza to Lansing.

Following is the letter sent by Señor Arredondo, the Carranza agent, to Secretary Lansing:

Upon hearing of the conferences which were to take place between your Excellency, as Secretary of State of the United States of America, and the representatives of the republics of Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay and Guatemala, my natural impression was that they would have for a purpose to examine the Mexican situation from the point of view of international law in order to estimate the value and respective positions of the parties and contending factions, to the end that recognition of one of which the requisites and conditions demanded by the international practices in such cases would concur; but the persistence with which the press has been informing that the parleys referred to have had for an object and have even agreed now on a plan for the pacification of Mexico and the declarations attributed to your Excellency by the press of today have caused the Constitutionalist Government to feel justly alarmed, and therefore I have been instructed by Mr. Carranza to say to your Excellency that, although he has not an exact knowledge of the character of the above mentioned conferences, he has been informed that Mexican affairs, with a view to solving, have been discussed.

Mr. Carranza and the persons who co-operate with him are of the profound conviction that, if the American Government would know the true situation in Mexico, it would understand that the only possible, just and acceptable solution would be to leave the revolution to follow its natural course until the complete victory of the party representing greater necessities and popularity.

The Constitutionalist Government, represented by Mr. Carranza, abstains from passing any comment on the conferences that are being held, because it has no knowledge of their character and of the conclusions which may have been reached and because it does not want to afford the supposition that they are tacitly consenting in it; but at the same time it considers it our duty to inform the American Government of the displeasure with which the Mexican Government and people would view any act which would tend to frustrate the success practically accomplished against the reactionary factions by the Constitutionalist Army, representing the hopes and ideals of the Mexican people.

I renew to your Excellency the assurance of my high consideration.

Similar communications were sent to all the Latin-American members of the conference. They were told in addition that any attempt such as contemplated to solve the internal situation of Mexico "would involve an act which could not be looked upon with levity, as it would mean, on the part of the Latin-American nations, the acceptance of the precedent that they can take part in the internal affairs of a sister nation with the co-operation of the United States—something absolutely undesirable, not only in so far as it may affect the relations between the Latin-American nations themselves, as also because it might involve the moral support of any future decision which may grow out of similar interferences."

Protests to A B C Powers.

In the notes to the Presidents of Argentina and Chile, which were identical, General Carranza expressed the opinion that the settlement of Mexico's internal problem is "the exclusive right of her sovereignty."

"Inspired by the purest patriotism and desirous that the realm of liberty and democracy be insured in all America," he wrote, "I, in the name of the Mexican people and as First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, depository of the Executive power of the nation, beg leave to invite your attention to the dangers which may ensue from a new policy of interference by one of various nations of this hemisphere in the internal affairs of another. As the nation worthily presided over by you has a representative in the above mentioned conferences, I trust that his action may be inspired by the ideas I have just set forth. Contrary action would serve to annul the complete triumph which the Constitutionalist Government of Mexico has just accomplished by the force of its arms in order definitely to establish a régime of freedom and justice. The far-reaching consequences for all the Latin-American nations make it desirable that the proposals as set forth for a joint or separate interference in the affairs of Mexico should be rejected by all of the competent Latin-American powers.

"I avail myself, Mr. President, of this opportunity to convey to you the warm sentiments of cordiality and sympathy of the Mexican people for the people of your nation."

To the Brazilian President, General Carranza said:

"The people of Mexico have heard with gratification that your representative in Washington has declined with dignity to take any part in the project of interference. By this action he has set an example which may serve as a precedent for that harmony and fellowship which ought to prevail between the Latin-American nations, whose destinies are so closely intertwined. In the name of the Mexican people, I beg leave to express my appreciation for this act of justice and sympathy."

Mr. Arredondo made public tonight a message sent to General Carranza by General Candido Aguilar, Governor and military commander of Vera Cruz, protesting against interference in Mexican affairs by the United States and Latin-American republics. Similar protests, it was announced, were received from other Carranza adherents.

An address to the American people which Carranza had prepared was held back to await the outcome of the Pan-American Conference.

SPECIAL SQUADRON FOR SOUTHERN SEAS

Available for Use in Mexican Trouble—Outbreaks at Vera Cruz Have Ceased.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—A marked change for the better in the situation at Vera Cruz caused the Government to decide today that the battleships Louisiana and New Hampshire, the first of which left Newport yesterday, should not proceed to that Mexican port. Instead, they will establish a base in southern waters south of Hampton Roads to enable them to operate quickly in the event of any emergency requiring their presence in Mexican waters or the Caribbean Sea.

In this connection Secretary Daniels denied a report that the Atlantic fleet, now at Newport, had been prepared to sail for Mexican waters.

The anxiety of the Administration over Vera Cruz was relieved today when a dispatch came to the State Department from Special Agent Silliman at that place saying that the threats against Americans and other foreigners had ceased, and that the Governor of the State of Vera Cruz had issued a proclamation expressing regret for them and reflecting severely on an official of the Carranza Government who had participated in the oratorical effort to arouse the populace.

It was after the receipt of these advices that the Navy Department announced that the Louisiana and New Hampshire would take station in southern waters with Hampton Roads, Va., as the northern boundary. It was explained that the Louisiana and New Hampshire probably would be joined by the battleship Connecticut, now in Haitien waters, and later on by the battleship Kansas, which is being overhauled, and the battleship Minnesota, now engaged in experimental work.

These vessels will form a special squadron, which will be kept handy to respond to any emergency calls in southern waters. The squadron will be commanded by Rear Admiral Walter McLean, commanding the Fourth Division of the Atlantic Fleet, which has consisted of the battleships Louisiana, New Hampshire, Kansas, and Minnesota. Hampton Roads may be designated as the base for the squadron.

The American Society in Mexico City today appealed to the State Department to send a representative in place of Señor Cardoso, the Brazilian Minister. The society asked for a man from outside of Mexico, "a man of force, ability, and prestige." The United States has been without a diplomatic representative since the Brazilian Minister's departure.

The resolutions adopted by the society were cabled to Washington by C. B. Parker, former Secretary to the Brazilian Minister. So far no action has been taken by the United States further than to give Mr. Parker charge of the archives, which he has removed to the American Embassy Building. Mr. Parker has no official status, but he will serve for the present as the representative of the American Government.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VERA CRUZ, Aug. 11.—Senhor Cardozo, the Brazilian Minister to Mexico, who is on his way to the United States in connection with the mediation crisis, arrived here today, accompanied by his wife and his three daughters, and with them boarded the United States cruiser Sacramento, which shortly thereafter departed to convey him to New Orleans. With Senhor Cardozo sailed the secretary to the Guatemalan Minister, accompanied by his wife and daughter.

Mexicans Burn Bridge in Texas

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Aug. 11.—News was received here today that a railroad bridge at Watalami, Texas, east of El Paso, had been burned by Mexican soldiers from the Carranza garrison across the line. Three hundred Mexican soldiers in uniform crossed the line near Langtry and set fire to the bridge. The band returned to Mexico.

LAREDO, Texas, Aug. 11.—Upon request for more troops in the Brownsville section orders were received at the Ninth Infantry camp this morning to send the Third Battalion, commanded by Captain Heidt.

TEXAS GOVERNOR FEARS AN INVASION

Wires President Situation Is Perilous and Asks That Border Troops Be Doubled.

Special to The New York Times.

"Knowing the many pressing matters confronting you I have purposely delayed wiring you in the hope that the Mexican border troubles might clear up. Conditions are now perilous and grave. Every twelve hours a loss of life or wounding of American citizens occurs. Texas citizens have been murdered, Post Offices have been robbed, and rangers and soldiers have been killed within the last week. The offenders are mostly Mexicans from across the border and only a few are American citizens.

"I have increased our Ranger forces almost to the maximum and yet, on account of the great area of disturbed district, it is doubtful if I can longer control the situation. I do not overdraw the picture when I say that a reign of terror exists on the Mexican border and that any unusual occurrence now would cause a disastrous invasion of Texas from Mexico. Your army is doing all that it can with the forces in hand to meet the situation, but the numbers of troops are wholly inadequate. A great service would be rendered if you could double the size of your army now on the Mexican border. For my guidance I would appreciate an expression from you in the matter of making substantial increase in the army now on the Mexican border. Wire me here."

15,000 TROOPS AT HAND.

Could Be on the Mexican Border Within Twenty-four Hours.

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Texas, Aug. 11.—The United States could have 10,000 regular troops on the Mexican border or across the line within twelve hours, and another 5,000 on the border within the next twelve hours, according to the statistical experts of the Eighth Brigade at Fort Bliss.

Exclusive of California, where there are a few United States troops now doing patrol duty, the United States has on the border—at Texas City, at Fort Sam Houston, and at Fort Sill, Oklahoma—15,000 men, composing the Southern Department under General Funston. A majority are seasoned veterans of more than two years patrolling on the Mexican border, and are declared to be in perfect campaigning condition.

General Hugh L. Scott is remaining here to watch the situation at close range. He would assume command should orders be received from the War Department to prepare an expeditionary force, officers at the fort declare.

PRESIDENT STARTS BACK TO WASHINGTON

Will Arrive There This Morning —Determined to Protect Foreigners at Vera Cruz.

ON BOARD PRESIDENT WILSON'S SPECIAL, New Haven, Conn., Aug. 11.—President Wilson is on his way back to Washington tonight to confer with Secretary Lansing and other members of his Cabinet regarding the Mexican and other problems. He left Cornish, N. H., at 5 o'clock this afternoon, and will arrive in Washington tomorrow morning.

With the President in direct charge of the Mexican situation, developments are expected within the next few days. He is desirous of following out the plans for the settlement of the Mexican question inaugurated when South and Central American republics were invited to confer on Mexican affairs. He is determined, however, to afford protection to foreigners in Vera Cruz.

The President was notified late today that General Carranza, through his Washington agents, had sent word to Secretary Lansing that the Mexican people view with displeasure any attempt tending to frustrate the success of the Carranza forces. It is understood that President Wilson will continue with his Mexican plans, despite the efforts of General Carranza to show that he is not in accord with the intentions of the Pan-American conference. Carranza is to have an opportunity, however, to agree to the plan finally determined on.

While the President has recalled none of the members of his Cabinet to Washington, practically all of them are expected to be in the capital in time for the regular Cabinet meeting Friday morning. The President has several important questions he desires to discuss with members of his Cabinet. With Secretaries Garrison and Daniels he wants to talk over the national defense plans; with Secretary Redfield he wants to discuss the Eastland disaster in Chicago, and with Attorney General Gregory he desires to discuss interpretations of the Seamen's law passed at the last session of Congress.

The President is returning to Washington accompanied only by Dr. Cary Grayson, his naval aid; a stenographer and Secret Service men. Notwithstanding the time of his departure from Cornish was not known in advance, crowds gathered at many stations—in Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Connecticut—to shake hands with him. At Brattleboro, Vt., and Northampton, Mass., the crowds cheered the President. Babies attracted his particular attention and several times he leaned over the observation platform on his private car to pat them on the head.

CORNISH, N. H., Aug. 11.—In anticipation of leaving Cornish the President did not play golf this morning, but remained in his study most of the forenoon, working on official business received from Washington. He paid particular attention to the Mexican situation but would make no comment for publication. Most of the morning hours were spent by the President in writing on his typewriter. An announcement on Mexico is expected soon after his return to Washington.

President Wilson, while on a brief outing with members of his family, was halted by a man near Cornish Flats, N. H., who presented to him thirteen four-leaf clovers "for luck." The President smilingly accepted the clover and thanked the man warmly. The man, who said he had picked the clovers especially for the President, told Mr. Wilson that he had presented to a President many years ago a bunch of thirteen four-leaf clovers.

PRESS UPHOLDS CARRANZA.

El Mexicano Says the People Will Never Submit to Interference.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 11.—The statement given to THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent at Vera Cruz by General Carranza last Saturday, in which the First Chief resented any attempt by the United States and the A B C powers to interfere in the internal affairs of Mexico, has been widely and favorably commented on here. An edition of the newspaper El Pueblo of Vera Cruz containing a translation of the statement was placed on sale here and generally read.

El Mexicano says today: "Recently President Wilson declared categorically his intention never again to intervene in our internal affairs, but for some reason, which we know not, he seems to have changed his mind, and now he seeks, with the co-operation of the A B C powers, to impose peace on Mexico regardless of our national dignity. If necessity arose, our dignity would be defended by all of us who refused to tarnish our conscience by serving a usurper. We will never soil our hands with money which Huerta so prodigally distributed by the traitors who repudiated the First Chief of the Constitutional Army for lucre, and because their aim was to involve the Mexican nation in great misfortunes."

El Mexicano reminds the A B C powers that they are interested in one of life or death to the Latin race in general, and adds: "The Mexican people, always sensible and patriotic, will reject any infringement attempted against their sovereignty, their independence, their integrity, as proved by the protestations of loyalty which the First Chief has received and continues to receive."

El Mexicano concludes by saying that the proper course is the recognition of the Constitutionalist Government, which is capable of re-establishing peace, restoring the country's progress, guaranteeing the fulfillment of moral and material liabilities to nationals and foreigners, and which will take administrative honesty for its motto and justice under the law for its shield."

Gonzales Scouts Intervention Talk.

General Pablo Gonzales, when asked about intervention rumors, said: "I do not take intervention stories at all seriously nor do I consider the United States to be so mistaken as to seek to make war on Mexico. I believe Constitutionalist Government soon will be recognized by the Governments of the United States and South America, and that all this intervention talk is the work of Mexico's enemies in their final effort to thrust us back to the days of dictatorship."

Asked what his attitude would be in the event of intervention, General Gonzales said:

"I should obey strictly the instructions of the First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, Don Venustiano Carranza, whose firmness, rectitude, patriotism and intelligence afford the best guarantee that Mexico's honor would be fully upheld. I should second the First Chief's policy and go forth to battle without hesitancy, but I repeat I do not believe that armed intervention will come."

General Gonzales added that five years of civil strife had trained the Mexicans so they were capable of fighting bravely and suffering stoically the hardships of war, and if they had made such sacrifices for their liberties they would make greater sacrifices for their sovereignty and independence.

Japanese Minister Going Away

The Japanese Minister called at the Foreign Relations Department this morning and informed Dr. Cutberto Hidalgo, who is now in charge, that he expected to depart on a leave of absence which previously had been granted to him by his Government. Minister Adatci said he probably would leave Mexico City toward the end of the month, sailing from Vera Cruz before the middle of September.

Americans are now without a diplomatic representative here, as Charles B. Parker only has charge of the archives. This is not considered particularly serious because it is recognized that Vera Cruz is still the seat of Government, and that to the First Chief only can diplomatic representations properly be made. But Americans hope that provisions will be made for their diplomatic interests as soon as Carranza returns to Mexico City.

ARGENTINE PRESS CAUTIOUS.

Carranza's Stand Regarded as a Bad Omen for Peace.

BUENOS AIRES, Aug. 11.—Most of the newspapers discuss editorially the conference being held in the United States to solve the Mexican problem.

La Prensa thinks the attitude of General Caranza justifies the fears and caution manifested by Argentina from the beginning of the conference.

The telegram sent by Carranza to President de la Plaza is a bad omen, according to La Nacion, which says:

"We presume this telegram was based only on an imperfect knowledge of the American nation's intentions. We believe when these intentions are known this suspicion will disappear. However, if Carranza is moved by personal ambition and party spirit, we hope there will be found among the Mexican people elements which will be ready to establish a stable and lasting government."

Notwithstanding the situation in Mexico, El Diario declares, respect of Mexican sovereignty forbids any intervention encroaching on its integrity. "Argentina cannot, without a painful abdication, lend a hand to make Mexico another San Domingo," the paper says.

La Razon believes the United States is attempting to establish a solidarity between the Americas to support its attitude. The general thought of the South American people, La Razon says, is that their Governments should respect the independence of Mexico and its institutions, not meddling with its internal affairs which the Mexican people should settle according to their own best interests.

READY TO USE COERCION.

But Valparaiso Paper Is Against Armed Intervention.

VALPARAISO, Chile, Aug. 11.—Discussing the intervention of South American republics in Mexican affairs, El Mercurio says:

"Telegrams from other South American capitals show the importance of intervention in Mexico with a view of establishing a fixed form of government, with any of the parties capable of governing, without an actual state of anarchy. It is our opinion as well as that of all the Chilean press that we ought to study a way of helping a sister country without offending her sovereignty.

"We thought when the previous intervention took place that a capable man supported by the strongest opposing forces ought to have been placed in power. This opportunity was lost, however, and again we find ourselves with this permanent conflict, desirous on the one side of avoiding armed intervention by the United States and on the other of arousing a patriotic movement in Mexico which may put an end to a state of anarchy which has done away with every form of government.

"We are nearing an end of Mexican anarchy and must do our best to try to force the petty chiefs to settle their quarrels, thinking only of the interests of their nation and that its sovereignty is imperilled. The South American Governments will not sanction armed interference, but they see the necessity of coersive measures, such as an embargo on arms and ammunition, to put an end to revolutions. South America is not interested in any of the chiefs who have killed their cause with atrocities and executions. It is interested only for the salvation of Mexico, doing away with a centre of perpetual trouble that may endanger Pan-Americanism.

"We are pleased to say our representative in Washington has acted in accordance with public opinion, which desires a correction of the evils which exist, but absolute respect for Mexico's sovereignty and frontiers."

ATTACKS WILSON ON MEXICO.

The Staats-Zeitung Now Calls Government Politically Bankrupt.

The charge that President Wilson's Government is "politically bankrupt" was made yesterday in the evening edition of The New Yorker Staats-Zeitung, which said:

"Well, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Lansing, here is Mexico. Even without the writing of notes it has been brought about that the United States is again dragged into a conflict which has cost and will continue to cost a thousand times as many lives of American citizens as a dozen Lusitanias or a vessel with American mule drivers.

"A Government which after three years of 'watchful waiting' has got no further than where we are today when ships must speed in all haste to Mexico, soldiers must bleed, American citizens remain without protection, has no right to pose as the representative of the humanitarian policy of the twentieth century. Such a Government is in fact politically bankrupt."

The New Yorker Herold in its evening edition yesterday, in commenting on the Mexican situation, said:

"What if we were to ask the people who today talk so much of the necessity of increased armament for the national defense: 'Is the sending of a fleet of invasion and an army of invasion to Mexico also included in the national defense, or is the United States there traveling in the way of the imperialism which we never grew weary of decrying when Germany became guilty of it, in our opinion?"

ROOKIES EARN PRAISE AT CAMP

EX-AMBASSADOR A PRIVATE

Robert Bacon Calls His Activities "a Protest" Against the Nation's Unpreparedness.

Special to The New York Times.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Aug. 11.—The recruits at Fort Slocum, and other big army training stations, never were called upon to work harder than were today the 1,100 business and professional men who are undergoing military instruction in the Government camp on the shore of Lake Champlain. Tireless activity was the rule, the drill masters never letting up a minute in their efforts to make a record for the camp.

For ten hours, with an hour's intermission for dinner and another late in the afternoon for bathing, the bankers, lawyers, doctors, and others who have gone into khaki, toiled at the rudiments of soldiering.

The progress of the men is remarkable, as can be understood when it is recorded that men who yesterday stood for the first time in company or platoon formation were today on the plain, drilling in companies and executing commands with a correctness and a precision that would have done credit to a militia organization.

In every company yesterday there were a few who still wore their civilian clothes, there were some who had not received their rifles and other equipment, and there were many who still had to learn even the simplest of the rudiments of military science. There was not a man today who was not fully equipped.

The men started in with the sun and they kept at it until supper time was only an hour away. In that last hour the whole camp swept in one great half-clad column across the drill plain and into Lake Champlain for a swim.

An ex-Ambassador's "Protest."

While Private Robert Bacon, former Ambassador to France, was learning the secret of the infantry pack today he was asked what he thought of the camp. Mr. Bacon, who has two sons in the camp, one in the same company as himself, and another in the armored automobile contingent, kept on arranging the pack which he was later to shoulder, and, as he worked, said:

"I have not talked for publication since last November, and I am here as a protest, if you wish to call it such, against the state of unpreparedness in this country. I hope that the idea embodied in this camp will make a striking impression on the country. I fear that the idea of unpreparedness has not struck home yet as it should, or else I think we would have had some needed legislation.

"Lord Roberts time and again warned England of her unpreparedness, and just before he died he said, 'The day has come.' I have been in Europe for about a year and have learned how Europe looks on the United States. I do not believe in waiting for trouble. We should take a stand. By this I do not mean to go to war or join with the Allies. We couldn't, but we should take some position since neutrality is impossible. We cannot accept the assurances of nations whose own people say they will not be bound by any treaties if emergencies of war arise."

A long train of armored and unarmored automobiles, the armored machines mounting rapid fire guns, the whole train manned by men most of whom had been famous athletes in their college days, arrived on the Government reservation during the afternoon drills.

The machines, fifteen in all, came from New York, and to prove the practical utility of motor-driven vehicles took muddy roads and bogs instead of the well-beaten State highways.

The arrival of the train was a stirring sight and gave a still more war-like appearance to the tented city beyond the regular barracks at Plattsburg. In addition to the armored cars were two Red Cross motor ambulances. The train covered the distance between New York and the camp at an average speed of more than 30 miles a day. As one of the men who were attached to the machine-gun division put it: "There were times when we nearly broke all records, and then it was that they had to build the bridges over again behind us."

Autos Took Worst Roads.

On perfect roads and under normal conditions, the train could have covered the distance at an hourly speed of twenty-five to thirty miles, but the fact that bad roads were selected and no water holes or bogs skipped accounts for the slower progress.

It was 2:45 o'clock when the head of the column was sighted. The train was then whizzing along at the rate of thirty miles an hour and the cloud of dust surrounding it had the appearance of an approaching cyclone. An armored automobile of the latest model headed the column. Only the chauffeur's head was visible above the forward armor protection. The muzzles of two machine guns protruded from ports, one on either side of the car. Other machines, but none so completely equipped, followed this machine. All mounted from one to two machine guns. Then came a Red Cross car, then more fighting machines, another Red Cross car, and last of all, the biggest of all the cars, an eight-ton armored truck that is said to represent the very last word in military automobile transportation. This biggest of the cars mounted four machine guns. The big machine bore the marking "E-2."

As the train came in the funeral cortege of a soldier of the regulars appeared down the road on the way to the little army cemetery. The train swept by the flag-covered coffin while the firing squad behind the gun carriage on which the coffin rested drew to one side as the armored cars swept by at speed reduced in honor of the dead soldier.

The armored vehicles will play an important part in the manoeuvre exercises that are to mark the final days of the encampment. Among those attached to the auto train are Percy D. Haughton, football coach at Harvard; Norman Cabot, former Harvard Captain and half-back; "Beef" Wheeler, the old Princeton star; Robert Bacon, Jr., John G. Milburn, Jr., G. R. Fearing, the old intercollegiate high jumper; Gresham Poe, another famous Princeton football player; D. H. Reed of Pittsburgh, Rex Flynn, the former Yale football star; James J. Storrow, Jr., J. H. Farley, and more than fifty others.

Tomorrow an aeroplane arrives and later in the encampment a second machine will join the aerial forces.

"Wonderful," Says General Wood.

Reverting to the 1,000 men who were in the field or in company streets mastering the manual of arms or the marching formations, when the armored train rolled in, it is to be recorded that the work of the companies was described by General Wood as "perfectly wonderful."

The officers in company platoon or squad formation, would give the command, explain it, and at the end of the third or fourth trial, the men under instruction in general, would be able quickly and correctly to carry the command into execution. This, of course, was not true of a man here and there. By the afternoon of tomorrow the bayonet work will start, and already picks and shovels are being assembled for the trench work later on. In the lulls today the officers explained the mechanism and the working of the army Springfield rifles. They explained everything to the rookies from how to clean the barrel to the loading and sighting of the weapon. Again the men were quick to learn. Gallery target practice begins this week and early next week real work on the target range by companies will start.

The training has been broadened to include instruction in cavalry, field artillery, and engineering work. On every company bulletin board there were posted today, big sheets of paper on which the men wrote their names and indicated their preference as to training. For instance, there was a sheet for those who desired a course in equitation, another for those who favored the field artillery arm, another for engineers, and so on.

Put Captain on His Mettle.

An interesting feature of the morning's work was a three hours' tour of duty that carried the men of Company A, under Captain F. W. Kelly, to the drill grounds of Plattsburg Barracks. There Captain Kelly let his men rest on the bleachers of the athletic field and proceeded to answer questions. He had to throw up his hand and shout "I don't know" many times. One rookie, for instance asked if, as he was cleaning a gun barrel, an officer came along it would be his duty to stop cleaning the barrel, stand at attention, and salute.

Mayor Mitchel was among those who took part in the invasion of Plattsburg Barracks. The men drilled there for more than three hours, and then double-quicked back to the camp. On the way they passed scores of automobiles, which they dodged with the skill of regulars.

The Swedish exercises also formed a part of the training today. They came right after breakfast and lasted ten minutes. These exercises constitute what the regulars call "waist line destruction."

Tired and hungry, but happy, the men were dismissed so far as drilling was concerned, shortly after 4 o'clock and then all headed for the lake. Most of the recruits donned bright colored bathing suits. Mayor Mitchel, in his hurry to get to the water, forgot his bathing suit, and to show he was a good soldier, double quicked half a mile back to his tent, got his suit, and then double quicked back to the lake again. He said he was getting a little extra practice for the real battle work that is to come later on.

While on his way to the lake, Mayor Mitchel encountered Rhinelander Waldo, who resigned so suddenly as Police Commissioner. When Mr. Mitchel became Mayor, that the Mayor dismissed him, instead of accepting his resignation.

When he saw the Mayor, Mr. Waldo, who is Adjutant of the First Battalion of the regiment, walked up to the Mayor, saluted, and said: "How do you do, Mr. Mayor. Let me congratulate you on being a member of this camp. You are setting a fine example."

"I am very glad to be here, too, and I thank you," the Mayor replied, cordially, as he returned his superior officer's salute, for the Mayor ranks as a private, while Mr. Waldo ranks as a captain.

Captain Halstead Dorey, the Camp Commander, this morning addressed the entire regiment. He pointed out the importance of the work and complimented the recruits on the splendid progress that they were making.

ALLOTS MILITIA FUNDS.

Garrison Gives New York an Increase Because of Efficiency.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—Four million dollars, this year's Federal appropriation to aid the organized militia, was apportioned today by Secretary Garrison. Half of the amount is for actual field service and rifle practice and is distributed among the States according to Congressional representation.

Of the $2,000,000 for supplies and ammunition $400,000 is reserved for special allotment in emergency cases and the remainder goes to the States on the basis of efficiency plans adopted by the War Department.

Instead of making the distribution for supplies and ammunition, according to paper strength of the various State organizations, as was done last year, Mr. Garrison took into consideration actual strength at the annual inspection and the number of auxiliary branches, such as field hospitals, ambulance companies, field artillery, cavalry, and signal and engineer corps. Every man in a field hospital and the ambulance companies was counted twice, and every man in the other branches of the auxiliary services three times, in order that these arms should receive adequate funds.

The result of the new plan is that New York receives for supplies and ammunition $47,000 more than last year, Illinois and Massachusetts each will receive $9,000 more, Michigan and New Jersey each $8,000, Connecticut, $6,000; Georgia, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island each $5,000; Utah $4,000 and New Hampshire, North Carolina, Ohio, and Oregon each $2,000.

GENERAL WOOD TELLS NATION TO PREPARE

Pleads for a Trained Citizen Soldiery and Points to Defects of Volunteer System.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Aug. 11.—Major Gen. Leonard Wood, commanding the Eastern Department of the United States Army, with headquarters on Governors Island, discussed the unprepared condition of the United States frankly and openly tonight.

He expressed his views to the 1,100 bankers, lawyers, doctors, merchants, and other business and professional men who had come to Plattsburg to undergo a month's hard military training, with officers of the regular army as their tutors and drillmasters.

General Wood deplored the fact that there were men in America who could harbor the belief that this country could raise 1,000,000 volunteers overnight, that nearly all of the munition works of the country were located in a comparatively small area in the eastern section of the country, and that the youth of the country were not receiving the military training he thought they should.

Every man in camp heard the address, and the applause that followed each telling utterance was long and hearty.

"I want to say a few words to you," said General Wood, "regarding our method of raising an army and the fallacies of it. The perfectly asinine statement has been made that we can raise 1,000,000 men between sunrise and sunset. This assembling of you men in this camp is an answer to that sort of foolish talk.

"There are many amiable old ladies, I know, who think that you who are here undergoing this training have responded to the call of the wild. Personally I hope that it means the beginning of the response of as many males of military fitness as we have left.

"I hope that when you go away from this camp you will use your influence as good American citizens in contrast to the ignorant among the masses, by whom you must not be influenced, and that you will do all that is in your power to help secure sane, good legislation for the establishment of an adequate armament.

Calls Volunteer System a Failure.

"The system of volunteers has always been a failure. Washington warned us earnestly, even in his day, against depending on volunteers for our national defense. It might have been well enough in Washington's day to depend on volunteers, when the ocean meant a real isolation for us, but in this time, when the ocean is only five days wide, it is a ready means of access instead of a barrier.

"This talk of a volunteer army is all foolishness. There is no such thing as volunteer service. Every citizen owes an obligatory service to his country. The trouble is that the fact is not recognized as it should be."

General Wood then referred to the munition situation and to the peril due to the fact that the great ammunition and other factories where munitions of war are manufactured are central in a small section of the country.

"The district," he said, "in which we manufacture practically all of our munitions, gunpowder among them, is embraced in a small area on our Eastern seaboard. You can very readily imagine what a force of 150,000 trained soldiers once landed on our shores could do to us. You know that if you have a strangle hold on a man's throat it does not make much difference how much that man kicks or hits out wildly at you. Our isolation is measured only by a few days and the country we have the most reason to dread is prepared to the minute. We don't care about small, disorganized countries. We go into them when we get ready, though we may be a little slow about it.

For a Trained Citizen Soldiery.

"Now returning to the question of armament. We never got our quota of volunteers in the Spanish war. Both the Union and the Confederate Governments were forced to resort to the draft within a year after the civil war started. Thomas Jefferson recommended in a letter to Monroe that we must train and organize all of our male citizens and make military instruction compulsory in our colleges, for until we did, he said, we would not be safe. That is still true today. We must have a system of trained citizen soldiery similar to that of Switzerland and Australia. To train an army for our defense we would require 40,000 officers. So you see how in training you we have made only a small beginning.

General Wood said that the army needed was one that would keep in this country a mobile force of between 160,000 and 170,000. These would be in addition to the troops needed to guard the island and other foreign possessions of the country. This was also in addition to the men needed to man the coast fortifications.

"We want a big navy," added General Wood. "Not necessarily the biggest in the world, but certainly the second biggest, and as efficient as the biggest, but we also need a mobile army sufficiently officered and equipped for our coast defense. Without a mobile army we are absolutely useless. There is nothing in God's world that can take the place of a trained soldier on his feet."

TRY TO ROB MRS. MITCHEL.

Mayor's Mother Had Removed Valuables from City House.

Some one entered the three-story home of Mrs. Mary Purroy Mitchel, mother of the Mayor, at 447 West 162d Street, near Jumel Place, and ransacked the house from top to bottom while Mrs. Mitchel was at Avon, N. J., where she went recently to spend the summer, but the intruder found nothing he wanted to take away. That the house had been entered was discovered early yesterday morning by Policeman Charles Uebalacher of the West 152d Street station, who found that one of two iron bars in a kitchen window had been pried from its sockets.

The opening was so small that the policeman had to remove some clothing to get through it. Uebalacher sent an alarm to the Sixth Branch Detective Bureau and to Police Headquarters. Twelve detectives, half a dozen policemen, and Police Commissioner Woods hurried to the scene. All that the searchers found were a few crumbs on the dining room floor, and a state of disorder in every room in the house, indicating that there had been a hunt for valuables.

Police Commissioner Woods telephoned to Tax Commissioner J. B. Mullens to notify Mrs. Mitchel. Mrs. Mitchel came in from Avon in the afternoon to check her belongings. She found everything she had thought it worth while to include in a list of articles left in the house. Before leaving for the summer she left her silver with a neighbor, and she took her jewelry with her.

President's Portrait on View.

On Wednesday afternoon there was hung in the Hotel Majestic a portrait of President Wilson, loaned for exhibition purposes by a Fifth Avenue art gallery. This gallery will exhibit it all over the United States before consigning it to its future owner, whose name will not be divulged. The exhibition at the Hotel Majestic is planned by the Daughters of Oneida, in honor of Miss Marion Swinton, the artist. The exhibition will last a week. On Thursday Miss M. Cecilia Gaffney, President of the Daugsters of Oneida, will be on hand during the afternoon and evening to show the pictures to members of six prominent clubs who will call on that day to view the portrait and make the acquaintance of its painter.

More Typhoid in Brooklyn.

The Board of Health reported yesterday that five more cases of typhoid fever had been reported in the Bay Ridge and Park Slope regions of Brooklyn. It was said that the board was taking every precaution to prevent the spread of the disease. There have been 103 cases of typhoid fever and 11 deaths in those parts of Brooklyn since July 1.

SIX ARE INDICTED FOR EASTLAND LOSS

President of the Company, Captain, and Engineer Among Those Held for Disaster.

MANSLAUGHTER THE CHARGE

CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—Six indictments charging manslaughter and criminal carelessness were returned before Judge Kerster in the Criminal Court today in connection with the Eastland disaster, which cost nearly 1,000 lives.

Those indicted were:

George T. Arnold, President of the company, (St. Joseph-Chicago Steamship Company.)

William H. Hull, Vice President and General Manager.

W. C. Steele, Secretary-Treasurer.

Ray W. Davis, Assistant Secretary-Treasurer.

Harry Pedersen, Captain of the Eastland.

Joseph M. Erickson, engineer.

Bonds were fixed at $20,000 each for the company officials and $10,000 each for Pedersen and Erickson. The two last named are charged with criminal carelessness and the officials with manslaughter.

Separate bills were returned against the Captain and the engineer, while the four officials were named in a joint indictment.

Counsel for the officials of the company stated this afternoon that Arnold, Hull, and Davis would resist extradition from Michigan, of which State they are residents. Steele's case is said to be different, as he submitted to arrest and is out on bond.

"We recommend," the Grand Jury report goes on, "that the steamboat inspection service be reorganized in a manner to make all branches co-ordinate and thus eliminate the confusion caused by the statutes delegating special powers and authority to subordinate branches. Such service should be provided with technically experienced inspectors, all under proper systematic control."

It is further recommended that the inspection service be removed from control of the Department of Commerce to the Navy Department, and urges Illinois representatives in Congress to endeavor to obtain legislation to this end.

The bill against the officials contained five counts, charging:

1. That they knew the Eastland was unseaworthy and had no stability.
2. That they permitted 2,500 passengers aboard the vessel, which is more than its carrying capacity.
3. That they were negligent in hiring an incompetent engineer, who because of his lack of skill was unable to control the boat properly.
4. That the crew did not number enough hands to manage and control the Eastland properly.
5. That the ballast tanks were allowed to be out of repair and were not filled.

Against Captain Pedersen these charges were made:

1. That he permitted aboard the boat a larger number of passengers than she could safely carry.
2. That he neglected to warn the passengers to leave the Eastland when it became apparent to him that she was about to overturn.

3 and 4. That he was negligent in not seeing that the ballast tanks were in repair and were properly filled.

5. That he was negligent in not seeing that the chalk-holes and gangways were closed when the ship was loaded.

Counts in the indictments against Erickson are in essentials similar to those against Pedersen.

The report of the Grand Jury finds that the disaster was caused by "instability under conditions of loading," and states that the instability was due to "one of three main causes, or any two, or all of them" as follows:

1. The overloading of the vessel with passengers.
2. The mishandling of water ballast.
3. The construction of the vessel.

The report says that the Eastland began loading passengers without water ballast, and belated efforts to fill the tanks failed.

"That the instability of the boat was not corrected years before, we regard as indicating criminal carelessness or incompetence on the part of all persons connected with the design, construction, control, operation and inspection of the boat," says the report. It points out that Federal inspectors had the right to refuse a permit to the boat, but that they are generally not trained men, and failed to make stability tests.

"The handling of the ballast by the officers of the boat indicates an entire lack of understanding of the nature and proper use of water ballast and an absolute disregard of safety after repeated wafnings and frequent indications of extreme instability," continues the report, which also adversely criticises the system of water ballast employed as not preventing the shifting of the ballast.

The jury recommends that expert Federal approval hereafter be required for the construction of steam vessels, and constant inspection and supervision when in service.

Four great pumps had been at work on the Eastland for several hours today with the expectation of raising the hulk to an even keel and recovering the bodies and property on board, when it was discovered that water was re-entering the hull as fast as it was pumped out. Divers were sent below to search for the leaks.

STRENGTHENS REGULATIONS.

Secretary of Commerce Also Calls Conference of Inspectors.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—Supervising Inspector General Uhler of the Steamboat Inspection Service received orders today from Secretary Redfield to incorporate at once in the regulations of the Steamboat Inspection Service the recommendations of the Citizens' Board of Inquiry at Chicago, which investigated the Eastland disaster until an adjournment was made necessary by the legal restrictions placed on the board by the Federal court in the matter of examining witnesses while the Grand Jury inquiry was in progress. The board consisted of the local Inspectors, William A. Collins and Frank W. Van Patten, and Marvin B. Pool, Harry A. Wheeler, B. O'Hara and Philip B. Fouke, citizens of Chicago. Their recommendations were that Secretary Redfield place before the President and Congress the conclusions of the board as to desired means of safeguarding human life on excursion and passenger vessels.

The board asked that there be created in the Department of Commerce a board of competent naval architects whose duty it should be to pass on the plans for all steam merchant vessels of more than 100 tons burden, and that no vessel of this description should be granted a license for service until its plans and specifications conformed to the requirements laid down by the Board of Naval Architects and its safety, seaworthiness, and stability should have been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the board. It was also recommended that provision be made for appeal from the findings of boards of local Inspectors and that the increase of the limit of number of passengers should require the approval of the Supervising Inspector of the district in which the vessel might be registered. Any alteration in plans and specifications for a passenger-carrying vessel must have the approval of the Board of Architects.

The Board of Inquiry asked that these recommendations be enacted into law by Congress and that pending that action increases in passenger-carrying permits should be issued by Inspectors only after personal inspection of the vessel and the filing of a written record of the inspection. Another provisional recommendation is that all vessel owners shall be required to make stability tests where there is any reason to question the seaworthiness of their vessels.

Secretary Redfield today directed that a conference be held within a few days of the Supervising Inspectors of the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific ports, together with those of the two districts on the great lakes, to make a thorough study of the Eastland disaster and to make such recommendations as are deemed necessary to safeguard life on excursion and passenger steamers on the great lakes. The lake Inspectors are authorized to put into effect any regulation that may be held to be advisable for further safety in lake navigation.

FIND IDENTIFIED BOY IS NOT JAMES GLASS

Parents Go to Norman, Okla., for Long Missing Son, Only to be Disappointed.

PUZZLED BY RESEMBLANCE

Mother Takes Four Hours to Decide the Youngster Is Not Her Own, She Wires.

James Glass, 4 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Glass of 13 Leinau Place, Jersey City, is still missing. His parents believed that the three months' search which had been going on with the aid of the Jersey City police and private detectives, and with an accompaniment of prayers from Sunday school children of Jersey City, was ended when news was received that a boy answering the description had been found in Norman, Okla.; but yesterday it was found that this was another mistake, more disappointing than any other of the dozen or so false clues that had been run down.

The boy disappeared May 12 while the mother was getting mail in the Post Office at Greeley, Penn., where the parents were staying. After futile search of the neighborhood they came home and notified Director of Public Safety Frank Hague of Jersey City, who put Detective Lieut. James Rooney in charge of the case and started a country-wide search. Rooney went here and there on clues that turned out to be worthless. Week before last the Chief of Police of Norman wired that a woman had left a child answering the description of James Glass at the house of a local merchant who had advertised for a child for adoption.

The Norman police identified the child from a newspaper description. They sent to Jersey City a photograph, which the official photographer of the Department of Safety, as well as the boy's parents, identified as that of the missing child. The Norman police were asked by telegraph to look for a mole under the boy's left ear and another in the middle of the back. They found both.

Mr. and Mrs. Glass and Lieutenant Rooney left on Sunday night for Norman to bring back the child. They reached the town at noon yesterday. At 2 o'clock Director Hague received the following telegram from Rooney:

The child here is identical. Have decided to leave Mr. and Mrs. Glass alone with boy to make positive identification.

Miss Matilda Engelbrecht, Mrs. Glass's sister, last night received a telegram from Mrs. Glass, which read:

Miss Engelbrecht said that she was confident the parents had not given up hope, but would continue the search.

NEW BUDGET PLAN WINS AT ALBANY

four departments in the group—the Department of Education, the Department of Regulation of Public Utilities, the Civil Service Commission and the Conservation Department. The last named department besides having powers of regulation which virtually are legislative in their character, would act as trustee of the State's forest preserves and its water properties. All the departments in this group in a sense map out policies for the conduct of their own business, independent of the Executive Department of the Government.

In the third group are the purely administrative departments. These are nine in number. The heads of these departments, all appointed by the Governor, would constitute his Cabinet.

The departments are State, Finance, Public Works, Health, Agriculture, Charities and Correction, Banking, Insurance, and Labor and Industry. The State Department would have supervision over elections. Although the department heads are appointed by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Senate, they can be removed by the Governor for cause without consulting the Senate. In creating the departments the committee has discontinued as elective officers the Secretary of State, the State Treasurer, and the Engineer and Surveyor.

New Departments Created.

In the reconstruction scheme three departments have been created by the consolidation of functions now exercised by others. The Department of Taxes and Assessments, which was created only this year in its present form, has been abolished and placed under the State Department of Finance, of which the State Treasurer, appointed by the Governor, will be the head. The duties of this department will include practically all the fiscal work at present performed by the Controller's office aside from auditing. The department will do the work of the present State Treasurer and in addition will supervise the assessment and collection of State taxes and revenues of all descriptions. It will be the financial arm of the State Government.

The duties now performed by the State Engineer and the Superintendent of Public Works, the State Architect, and the Superintendent of Public Buildings will be undertaken by the proposed new Department of Public Works. The highways and canals will be under the Department of Public Works.

Supervision of the charitable, curative, and penal institutions of the State will be exercised by a department in charge of the Secretary of Charities and Correction if the new plan is adopted by the convention and ratified by the people at the polls.

Under the plan the appointive department heads will be subject to impeachment in the same manner as is the Governor. The Attorney General and Controller, although elective officers, could be removed through impeachment and also by two-thirds vote of the Senate, upon recommendation of the Governor, accompanied by a statement giving the grounds on which he desires removal. The Governor, or, if the Senate is in session, the Governor with the consent of the Senate, may fill the vacancy thus arising, but a successor must be elected at the next general election, to take office on the first day of the following year.

The general reorganization scheme if the new article is adopted and ratified, would go into effect on Jan. 1, 1917. All present elective officers would serve out their terms. Appointive officers, now at the head of departments, wherever possible, are to be retained until the terms for which they have been appointed shall have expired.

In the report accompanying the proposal, the committee say that the tremendous growth in State expenditure may be directly traced to the duplication of work and the maintenance of useless offices under the present administrative plan.

There were minority reports, excepting to certain features of the reorganization plan submitted with the report of the committee.

At its session tonight the Convention practically killed by amendment the proposal presented by Meier Steinbeck of Brooklyn, which provided for absentee registration, by eliminating the clause permitting absentees from registering. In the form the proposal was advanced it provides merely that the registration of voters must be completed fifteen instead of ten days before election.

The amendment was presented in the interest of commercial travelers and railroad men whose duties prevent them from returning home to register. Of the Democrats a majority voted for the proposal.

THROCKMORTON OUT OF THE CUP CONTEST

SEABRIGHT, N. J., Aug. 11.—The boy from the Woodbridge High School who has been attracting so much attention this season suffered the worst defeat today that has been his since he dropped suddenly into the limelight occupied by national tennis stars. But it took some of the most brilliant playing that the California Comet, Maurice E. McLoughlin, has displayed in the East this season to end young Throckmorton's hopes for the Achelis Challenge Cup. The match of skill between these two much-talked-of players attracted a large gallery of tennis enthusiasts and society folk to the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club grounds here, where the invitation cup tournament is in progress.

There were four contests during the day, the scheduled fifth being won by default, and when the crowd went home the following lines had been written in the history of tennis:

McLoughlin moved up to the semi-finals by defeating Harold Throckmorton, 6—2, 6—0.

T. R. Pell advanced by beating the new Western wonder, Ward Dawson, 6—4, 6—1.

McLoughlin and Dawson moved up to the finals in the doubles series, by beating C. Frederick Watson, Jr., and Sidney Thayer, Jr., 6—3, 6—3.

The scheduled match that didn't materialize was between S. Howard Voshell and Hugh Tallant vs. Leonard Beekman and Lyle E. Mahan. Voshell didn't show up. Somebody said it was because he would not play after 4 o'clock, and the singles had been set ahead of the doubles. So the veteran Hugh Tallant, disappointed, returned to New York defeated without having hit a ball, and Beekman and Mahan will play McLoughlin and Dawson in the doubles finals tomorrow.

There was considerable surprise among the spectators when Pell, with his amazing backhand strokes and tricky placing, managed to eliminate the latest Western wizard of the courts from the singles, and this was attributed partly to the unfamiliarity of the Westerner with turf courts, for he has been accustomed to the asphalt courts that they wear in the West.

The real interest of the day, however, was in the McLoughlin-Throckmorton contest. The rest of the singles were already in progress when these two started to play, but about the only spectators who didn't forsake the other singles then were the official umpires.

The score sounds like young Throckmorton didn't have a chance; he didn't have a great deal after McLoughlin bit his stride, but the youngster didn't lie down for a minute, even when the second set stood five love against him, and the score of that last game stood 40—30 against him. It was significant that there was not a love game against him in the second set. The boy played pretty tennis throughout the two sets, and often during them played good tennis. One of Throckmorton's faults was that he played spectacular tennis. The grand stands were with him from the beginning, partly because of his youth, and largely because of the spectacular plays he made. He returned lots of balls that looked to be out of reach, making wild headlong sprints for them and getting them back over the net to the intense delight of the onlookers. But he did not return all of the easier balls, and as usual in the case of such fancy plays, some of the most difficult balls he returned fell within easy reach of his opponent. Another trouble with Throckmorton was that he was nervous, which many had expected, and he slipped on the grass several times in trying to turn quickly for a ball lofted over his head.

The youngster's serve was fast, and he scored several aces on the formidable chap across the net. His serve was accompanied by a little too much in the way of contortions, though, and McLoughlin got the ball back a number of times before Throckmorton recovered his balance. McLoughlin could be seen, did not expect to find the youngster easy prey. Before the game he had all his racquets strung up to the tightest tension possible, and he did not risk an incautious play once during the match. The second game of the first set ran to deuce, and Throckmorton drew a victory out of it by a score of 1 all. Soon it was 2 all, and McLoughlin fans among the spectators commenced to look worried. But though many individual games were in danger after that, McLoughlin played careful, steady tennis and did not lose another game. Mentally combining the undeveloped skill young Throckmorton showed with the experience he will get, the enthusiasts on the sidelines propheseied that a few more seasons will find him firmly established among the top-liners.

In the other singles, Karl Behr's furious attacks at the net had much to do with his victory over LeRoy, the former intercollegiate champion. Behr is rated as the third tennis player of the country, and is expected to give McLoughlin a serious run for the cup. Pell had no easy time of it with Dawson, and later, in the doubles with his old friend, McLoughlin, on his side, Dawson showed up far better than in the singles.

McLoughlin's form in the doubles was not up to that he had shown against Throckmorton, but the sets were in no danger for the two Westerners at any time. Dawson made frequent use of the trick of dropping an easy ball just on the other side of the net, during volleys, and finally disrupted the game of his opponents by getting them both into the habit of running up to the net. A fairly swift loft ball over their heads, then, and it was simple. One of his opponents, too, the youthful Philadelphian Thayer, is short and stocky. Thayer had a chance to show all the speed that has brought him above the ordinary level in tennis, in chasing these balls, and several times he won the applause of the spectators by catching up to them as they curved to the ground and returning them. Thayer proved a dangerous server, too, and humiliated the Westerners on a number of occasions.

Last year's noted "Teddy Bear" doubles team, Theodore Pell and Karl H. Behr, will be split in the semi-final singles tomorrow. Nathanial W. Niles of Boston, who played his third round in the singles and advanced to the semi-finals yesterday, will be matched with McLoughlin. The final will be played Friday, and the winner will play the challenge round with the present holder of the cup, R. Norris Williams, the national champion, on Saturday. Point score of McLoughlin-Throckmorton match:

VICTORY FOR MISS WAGNER.

State Tennis Champion Reaches Semi-Final Round at Woodmere.

With the victory of Miss Marie Wagner, State champion, over Mrs. David C. Mills yesterday at the Woodmere Club, Woodmere, Long Island, the semi-final round of the Long Island women's singles championship was completed. The other survivors are Miss Margaret Grove, Miss Clare Cassel and Miss Gertrude Della Torre. The match between Miss Wagner and Mrs. Mills, which went to the champion at 6—2, 6—0, was the only contest played at singles, but a number of matches were decided in the first and second rounds of the women's doubles.

The concerted action of Miss Edith Handy and Mrs. William H. Pouch overcame opposition and placed the pair in the third round. Mrs. Pouch employed her fast cross court alley shot at critical times and she often intercepted the shots from her opponents. Miss Handy played splendidly in picking openings for passes. Miss Strauss and Miss Rosenthal were the first victims of Miss Handy and Mrs. Pouch, who score defeated 6—0, 6—3, and Mrs. Sidenberg and Miss Cullman were the second pair to be eliminated.

Miss Cassel and Mrs. S. F. Weaver also played a sound game, particularly in their first match, when they disposed of Mrs. R. A. Pope and Miss Gertrude Della Torre. It was not so much the victory as the easy manner in which it was obtained that surprised the big gallery. The losing players were unable to make any stand against the brilliant attack of their opponents. After capturing the first set at 6—2 Miss Cassel and Mrs. Weaver played with greater abandon and with more success. They both smashed beautifully for a victory in the second set at 6—1. Mrs. Weaver was particularly effective at the net and forced openings with a true sense of direction, while Miss Cassel could not be shaken in her accuracy or steadiness.

What promises to be the best doubles match of the championship doubles tournament will be played at 3:30 this afternoon when Miss Handy and Mrs. Pouch will oppose Miss Cassel and Mrs. Weaver. The second doubles match will be started half an hour later. The summary:

SULLIVAN COUNTY TENNIS.

MERRIEWOLD, N. Y., Aug. 11.—The tennis tournament for the championship of Sullivan County, which is now in progress at Merriewold Park, has attracted a good entry list. W. Halsey Wood, captain of the New York Lawn Tennis Club, the playing through champion, won two matches, and is expected to repeat his victory of last year. In the first round Wood defeated Paul Martin in straight sets at 6—4, 9—7, and in the second won from E. T. Buckingham 6—3, 6—3. Martin was expected to come through as a finalist, but was drawn in the half with the champion. He forced the second match to deuce after being hard-pressed in the first set.

T. C. Trask, the Yale veteran, representing the Crescent Athletic Club of Brooklyn, is the only player in the upper half of the draw likely to give Wood any serious trouble. He defeated Donald W. Lamb of Tenafly, N. J., two sets to one at 6—3, 2—6, 6—2.

The doubles will start tomorrow with several new players. Frederick B. Alexander and Raymond B. Little ranking players from New York, will compete in the doubles. The summary:

BAKER'S VENTURA WINS KING'S CUP

New York Yacht Club Fleet Disbanded—Resolute Beats Vanitie, Again.

MARBLEHEAD, Mass., Aug. 11.—The fourth race for the gold cup presented by his Majesty King George V., sailed today over a thirty-six-mile course on Massachusetts Bay, was won by the fifty-foot sloop Ventura, owned by George F. Baker, Jr., Commodore of the New York Yacht Club, and he is prouder of this trophy than any other won by his yacht this season.

Ventura sailed against nine other yachts—eight sloops and one schooner, Enchantress. She won from Iroquois by 58 seconds, and she was allowed, with the other "fifties," 46 minutes 52 seconds by Enchantress, the largest vessel that started in the race.

The thousands who viewed the races today from the shore and from the many steam and sailing yachts that accompanied the racers were really as much interested, if not more so, in the race for a special cup between Resolute and Vanitie, which Resolute won with ease. She defeated the Gardner sloop 3 minutes and 59 seconds actual time and 5 minutes and 31 seconds corrected time.

They sailed the same course with the yachts that contested for the King's Cup. It was an equilateral triangle of thirty-six miles—twelve miles to the leg. The first leg was windward work, the second a broad reach and the last a close reach. Resolute gained 7 minutes and 45 seconds on the first leg. Vanitie gained 3 minutes and 55 seconds on the second, and Resolute 14 seconds on the last leg.

After the races the New York Yacht Club's cruising squadron was formally disbanded by Commodore Baker at a meeting of the captains on board the flagship Viking.

The start of Resolute and Vanitie off Half Way Rock made in a light breeze from south by east was a close one. After five minutes manoeuvring between the preparatory and starting signals, Charles Francis Adams at Resolute's wheel had placed that sloop close on the weather quarter of Vanitie, and when the starting whistle sounded, both were on the starboard tack. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who handled Vanitie, put her about as soon as she cleared Resolute's stern, and when the latter yacht also swung to the port tack, A minute later she had placed Vanitie a hundred yards or more to leeward.

All eyes were watchin gthe big sloops. Although the wind was light, they had a beat to windward of twelve miles on this first leg of the course, the direction of which was south by east. The second leg was twelve miles northeast, and the final leg of the triangle twelve miles west-northwest, one-half west.

Resolute and Vanitie made four short tacks together at short intervals, and when both went to the starboard tack at 12:17 Vanitie had almost made up what she lost at the start. Then both settled down to a long tack to the eastward, which lasted 2 hours and 24 minutes, at which time Resolute, going about to port placed Vanitie fully a mile in her wake. Half an hour later Resolute was able to fetch the outer mark.

The start of the King's Cup race was marred by an accident to E. W. Clark's schooner Irolita, which fouled the schooner Enchantress at a point near the stern of the committee yacht Viking, around which the "fifties" were about to start, just as the whistle sounded. Irolita, in attempting to cross the bow of the larger schooner, split the top of her mainsail at the clew when it caught the bowsprit end of Enchantress. The yachts swung alongside of each other, with the result that Irolita was thrown out of the race, Enchantress was handicapped at the start 15 minutes 47 seconds, and all the "fifties" except Barbara, Carolina, and Grayling, which started in that order, were handicapped in starting. They were allowed four minutes after the signal, but that time was all used up in the light air trying to cross the line after the foul between the schooners.

Barbara, Grayling, and Ventura, about one-eighth of a mile apart, were the leaders among the "fifties" an hour after the start. They tacked off shore to the eastward, followed soon after by Enchantress, and these were the first to reach the windward mark.

From the point where Resolute tacked at 1:51 to the outer mark, it was only a question of how much Resolute would lead at the turn. At 2:18 the jib topsail on Resolute was taken in and the balooner run up on the stay ready to break after rounding the mark.

Resolute, 2:29:27; Vanitie, 2:30:12; Barbara, 2:52:34; Grayling, 2:53:15; Ventura, 2:57:00; Enchantress, 3:00:25; Samuri, 3:02:28; Iroquois II., 3:02:54; Avenger, 3:06:45; Spartan, 3:09:35; Carolina, 3:10:20.

From here to the finish it was a close reach, both big sloops having gybed at the second mark, trimmed sheets to the port tack, and set staysails, jibs, and reachers. Vanitie made a vain effort to close the gap between them. Resolute crossed the finish line 4 minutes 12 seconds ahead of her.

The fleet of steam and power yachts that followed the yachts around the course included J. P. Morgan's Corsair, F. G. Bourne's Alberta, George F. Baker, Jr.'s Viking, E. C. Benedict's Oneida, Henry Walters's Narada, P. B. McQuesten's Juanita, F. E. Fletcher's Cristina, Harold Wesson's Houp la, and the steamer Patchogue of Boston, which carried a large party of members of the Eastern, Boston, and Corinthian Yacht Clubs in charge of Walter Richardson of the Eastern Yacht Club.

NEW SLOOP INVADER THIRD.

Breeze Too Light for G. Douglas's Boat in Great South Bay Race.

Special to The New York Times.

BABYLON, L. I., Aug. 11.—Yachtsmen of the Great South Bay Association sailed their first championship regatta of the season, under the auspices of the Babylon Yacht Club, off here today. The wind was light and from the southwest, allowing the regatta committee—J. R. Curley, F. E. De Maurias, and H. C. Van Weelden—to pick a course made up of a reach on the starboard tack, a beat and a spinnaker run home. The triangle was three miles. The largest craft sailed the course three times, while the smaller divisions covered it only twice.

Interest centred in the Q class, as it contained Invader, the only new racing yacht built for Great South Bay this year. The wind was too light for the new craft and the best that she could do was to finish third on both actual and corrected time. The division was won by Dixie on corrected time. The P division honors were won by Thelma. Moonray led home the Moriches "cats," and Miladi, the property of R. B. Hamill, won in the Bellport Bay one-design class.

The prize among the "cats" of the same club was won by Pawnee. Wenonah practically had a "sail over" in the one-design class of the Unqua-Corinthian Yacht Club, and among the "cats" of the same club the winner was Snail. Taffy won in the fifteen-foot division, and Yevoh was the leader among the small "cats." A one-design class of small boats from Patchogue also sailed, the winner being Lizzie R.

The yachts leave here tomorrow morning for Sayville. There will be a port to port race. In the afternoon there will be a championship regatta, including a race for the famous Queen of the Bay cup.

Maine Tennis Resumed.

Special to The New York Times.

BAR HARBOR, Me., Aug. 11.—Clearing weather allowed the postponed matches in the men's tennis for the doubles championship of Maine to be played today. They reached the semi-finals. The four teams remaining for the semi-finals are considered closely matched, although Bowen and McCormick are slight favorites. The summary:

First Round, Championship Doubles.—L. B. McCagg and J. J. Emery, New York, beat L. J. McCormick and F. W. Beekman by default; John S. Rogers and Robert S. Brewster of New York beat S. J. Curtis, Philadelphia, beat Dr. James A. Mitchell, Washington, and Edward Samuel, Jr., 6—1, 6—2.

Second Round—L. B. McCagg and J. J. Emery beat C. B. Fraley and partner by default; Richard H. Harte, Philadelphia, and G. R. Carpenter, New York, beat John S. Rogers and Robert S. Sunset Tennis at Brighton Courts.

The final round of the Sunset tennis tournament on the Brighton Beach courts was reached yesterday when Miss Molly Conroy, a Staten Island girl, won a close match from Mrs. H. Taylor of Borough Park Tennis Club at 4—1, 7—5. In spite of a long absence from competition, Mrs. Taylor played a strong game. The first set found Miss Conroy in the lead after the first game, though every game went to deuce. Miss Conroy found the corners of the court in clever fashion and gained the first set with the loss of a single game. Mrs. Taylor took the first three games of the second set, but her opponent made a clever rally and carried the match to 5-all. Mrs. Taylor was unable to maintain her advantage, and Miss Conroy broke through her service and won. The final round between Miss Conroy and Miss Lynch, winner of the upper half, will be played Sunday afternoon.

Mixed Doubles at Newport Casino.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 11.—The final round of the mixed doubles tennis tournamen at the Casino was reached at the end of today's play. Only two matches were played. In the upper half of the semi-finals Mrs. W. Goadby Loew and Craig Biddle defeated Mrs. Arthur Scott Burden and Francis Roche, 6—3, 3—6, 6—4, and Mrs. Harold Minot and Oliver Perrin won from Miss Anna Sands and F. E. Dixon, 6—3, 2—6, 9—7. The winners will play the final round tomorrow.

Western Lawn Tennis Postponed.

CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—Rain prevented the second round of the national elimination tournament in doubles, which was to have been played on the tennis courts of the Onwentsia Club, Lake Forest, today. The postponement will bring the finish of the doubles events to Friday instead of Thursday. The challenge round between G. M. Church of Princeton and Alex Squair of Chicago for the Western championship in singles also is to be played Friday.

Oarsmen Off for Springfield.

The local entrants in the national championship regatta at Springfield, Mass., left for that city yesterday afternoon. As the racing does not start until tomorrow, this will give them a day in which to get accustomed to the course. There will be a general exodus today of rowing enthusiasts. With only two Canadian entries, the outlook is bright for the local oarsmen to regain some of the lost prestige of the Harlem River. In the quarter-mile dash four of the six contestants are from this city.

CYCLIST KRAMER DEFEATS GOULLET

More than 12,000 bicycle racing enthusiasts cheered when Frank Kramer, American champion, defeated his rival, Alf Goullet of Australia in straight heats of a match race at the Newark Velodrome last night. It was a wonderful "come-back" for the Yankee, who has been defeated by the Australian in all recent races. That Kramer has recovered his form and his confidence was shown by the manner in which he rode. He let Goullet ride as he pleased, while the "old master" took the longer and harder route, riding around Goullet in the last 100 yards in both heats. Both heats produced remarkable close finishes, the second heat being won by less than six inches.

Alf Grenda of Australia clipped two seconds off the world's record in the two-mile professional handicap in his heat and won the final, the time being 1 minute and 10 4-5 seconds. Ray Eaton, Newark, was second and Donald McDougall was third. Harry Kaiser, the Bronx rider, looked like a winner, but finished fourth. Grenda defeated Francesco Verri, the Italian champion, in the Brassard match by half a length after a hard ride in front.

Reggie McNamara and Bob Spears of Australia won the two-mile professional tandem race, with Grenda and Fred Hill of Boston second and George Cameron, Bronx, and Willie Hanley, California, third.

Hans Ohrt, the amateur champion, won the one-mile handicap from scratch. Fred Taylor, scratch, was second, and Walter White, 35 yards, was third. Al Krushel of Buffalo won the open pursuit race, Taylor finishing second and Ohrt third.

The five-mile scratch race for professionals was won by Spears, with McNamara second and Goullet third.

Stewart Best at Skee Ball.

Herbert W. Stewart last night won the midsummer tournament at the Manhattan skee ball alleys on Seventh Avenue, between Forty-second and Forty-third Streets. His total for ten games was 1,880, while the score of the second man, George Meeker, was 1,830. Third place went to W. McBride, who made a count of 1,790, and F. P. Hughes was fourth, with 1,730. Nineteen players took part in the tournament, and all of them showed proficiency at the new game, which is a variation of bowling.

COACHES FOR PENN.

Many Candidates for Football, Rowing, and Athletic Directorships.

The Board of Directors of the University of Pennsylvania Athletic Association is considering applications for three coaches—football, rowing, and athletics. The contract of George H. Brooke expires the end of this year, and it is understood that Dr. Carl Williams will succeed the former famous full back. Brooke was unfortunate with his team in that he was compelled to rebuild it, and it is said that he has the material to turn out the best football team Penn. has had since the days of George W. Woodruff and his guards' back formation. Several of the best players in the ranks of the minor colleges and preparatory schools will enter Penn. this Fall. In addition, a change will be made in the eligible list, and as soon as this is done Penn. and Princeton may be brought together again, as this is the only point that has interfered with a match with the Tigers since the two institutions severed athletic relations. Brooke, Truxton Hare, and several of the leading football men at Penn. have been in New York during the last few days.

The position of rowing coach is still vacant. Every effort was made to retain Vivian Nickalls, but he felt his services were needed in the British Army and insisted upon the acceptance of his resignation. Several conferences between the Rowing Committee and Nickalls were held prior to Nickalls's departure for England, but no decision was reached. The three leading candidates for the position are William Haines, Union Boat Club, Boston; Joseph Dempsey, University Barge Club, Philadelphia, and Joseph Wright, Argonaut Rowing Club, Toronto, Canada.

George W. Orton, the former intercollegiate mile champion, who has had charge of the field and track athletics since the death of Mike Murphy, is also slated to go. His successor has not been selected, but the names of Lawson Robertson, Irish-American Athletic Club, and M. F. Sweeney, former world's high jump record holder and coach of Hill School of Pottstown, Penn., are prominently mentioned in connection with the position.

VICTORY FOR YANKS IN CLOSE BATTLE

Brown Pitches Fine Game and Cleveland Is Defeated by Score of 2 to 1.

Once in a while the Yankees skip along like a team of champions. If you had been at the Polo Grounds yesterday you would have witnessed one of those happy incidents in Yankee baseball history and no doubt sent an apology to "Wild Bill" Donovan for all of the criticism that has been heaped upon him and his nine. After nine innings every Yankee wore that old grin, and broadest of all was that which adorned Bill Donovan, for the Clevelands had been beaten by a score of 2 to 1 in a contest that was a real ball game from the first shout by Silk O'Loughlin to the last.

There was one Carroll Brown among the Yankees to whom much credit for the victory is due, but not all of it. Every one of Wild Bill's team was doing a lot of helping. However, it was Brown who sped the ball to the plate, and it came with all the twist and all the hop that ever invested a piece of horse hide. Cleveland could do nought but wonder. The bats would not play any tune of victory. Just six times was the sphere driven away for safeties, and those were kept so well scattered that little damage resulted. There were some hard chances, too, some that if they had escaped the Yanks' waiting hands might have gone for hits, but everything that could within reason be acquired found its way straight and true for an out.

Guy Morton, pitching for Cleveland, was not so formidable. The Yankees found him for ten hits and grouped enough of them for two runs that embellished the Donovan score board. Right here should be recorded the fact that it was Daniel Boone who helped his teammates to the victory. You will remember that it was Boone who made the blunder that dropped the second game of a double-header to the Cleveland visitors Tuesday. For all that he atoned yesterday. What an could help but forget past transgressions in the light of that double that started the Yankees off in the third inning? Boone swung his bat against the sphere wickedly and the ball screeched its protest all the way to left centre. Two bases was the toll and it was a beginning that aroused every one of his teammates. Nunamaker, fired by envy, elected himself to do better and his smash sent the ball hurrying to the centre field, this time on the right side of Wille. The Cleveslander was having great practice in running, but he could not catch up with the pill until Nunamaker was racing to third and Boone had long since crossed the plate with the first tally. Brown burned one to Morton, but Guy stopped it and tossed the Yankee out at first base. High, however, was just tall enough to measure up to the occasion. He shot one past Wambsgans for a base and Nunamaker scored on the hit. High reached second on Peckinpaugh's out and stayed there, for Maisel filed out to left.

Just prior to the Yankees batting bee, Cleveland had created a scare. In the first half of the inning Egan got around as far as third base, but the ambition of the visitor was smothered when Enos ended the inning by sending one out that was easy for Doc Cook. The one Cleveland tally started with Egan's double in the eighth and he reached the plate as a result of two infield outs.

In the sixth inning opportunity was again beckoning the Yanks, but they were satisfied and told the old fellow to come around some other time. Three runners were perched on the bases, Maisel, Cook and Hartzell. Boone, however, decided that further effort would be wasted and went out on an infield bit. The score:

lead in the American League race. They won the first game, 11 to 3, by hard batting, St. Louis using five pitchers. Leonard outpitched James in the second game, which was decided by a 2-to-1 score. Speaker's triple and James's wild pitch counted Boston's first run, and singles by Carrigan and Leonard, Hooper's sacrifice bunt, and Scott's sacrifice fly produced the winning tally. Rain Spoils Giants—Pirates Game.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 11.—A drizzly rain which set in at noon and continued the remainder of the day caused the postponement of the Pirates-Giants game. The Giants are now scheduled for five games in three days on their last trip here, two games on Sept. 16, one on Sept. 17, and two on Sept. 18.

No Federal Club for Boston.

BOSTON, Aug. 11.—The proposed Federal League invasion of Boston has been abandoned, President James A. Gilmore announced here today.

"Boston is not ready to take care of a third big league team," he said, "but we're surely going to New York with a team in 1916, and ten-cent ball is going to be the rule throughout the Federal League."

DELL BLOWS UP; THEN CUBS TRIUMPH

Dodgers Miss Chance to Win and Close In on League Leaders, the Phillies.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—"Wheezer" Dell endeavored today to emulate the achievements of his fellow-hurlers who have been making merry this week at the expense of the tottering Cubs. "Wheezer" was a whale in the opening inning and then he blew up in the second, the Cubs batting him for enough runs to take the final game of the series, 5 to 2.

Three singles, a double, two sacrifices, an error, and a pass put "Wheezer" on the bench immediately after his mates had batted Jim Lavender for one run. Lavender became steady, however, when five runs were wished upon him, and in the ensuing innings pitched good ball.

The downfall of Dell transpired even before Manager Robinson could rush a relief twirler into the game. Dell started under promising conditions, and none of the Brooklynites believed the Cubs capable of solving his delivery, hence no other twirler was assigned to the warming pan. When it was too late Robbie sent Appleton to the mound, and the newcomer gave a fine imitation of all the pitchers who had preceded Dell in the daily encounters. Two scattered singles were plucked from Appleton's curves in the third, fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh frames. A pinch hitter replaced him in the eighth and Ed Pfeffer retired the Bruins in order in the locals' turn at bat.

Lavender, usually effective against the Dodgers, was hit nine times safely, but his control was excellent, and the men behind him played fine defensive ball.

Both pitchers made short work of their opponents in the opener, but the Dodgers broke the calm serenity of the matinée in their second turn at bat, when Wheat looped a double to left centre and proceeded to third on a wild pitch. The slugger stuck to the far corner as Lavender pegged out Cutshaw, but he romped leisurely home after Williams speared a long fly from Hummel. Getz followed with a single to centre, but was thrown out trying to reach second, Williams to Fisher.

This burst of Dodger enthusiasm aroused the West Siders, particularly Zimmerman, who opened the home half with a drive that Williams slugged safely to right and McLarry bunted. Dell, trying to head off "Zim," overthrew third base and Heine crossed the plate. Williams and McLarry each gained a lap on "Wheezer's" miscue. Dell, the former registered when Archer dropped a Texas leaguer back of Cutshaw. A pass to Phelan populated the circuit. Lavender struck out. Good contributed a fly to Wheat, scoring McLarry, and Fisher then tripled to left, scoring Archer and Phelan.

Singles by Myers in the third, Miller in the fifth, and one by Hummel, following a pass to Wheat in the seventh, failed to yield another Dodger run. Lavender was in danger, however, in the seventh. Wheat stroled and was forced by Cutshaw. Hummel then singled. Getz hit to Phelan and Cutshaw was tagged en route to third. A great running catch by Good robbed Miller of a possible triple, retiring the side. The score:

Boston Takes a Game in St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 11.—Boston finished its series here today by winning the first game of a double-header, 6 to 2, and tying the second game. The latter was called at the end of the ninth inning on account of darkness while the score stood 2 to 2. Hard hitting marked the opening contest. In both games Long starred at bat, getting a homer, a triple, a double, and two singles in eight times up. Ragan, driven from the box in the first game, came back in the second and held St. Louis to three hits in seven and a third innings. The scores:

CHEAP BALL DRAWS 2,500.

Cut rate baseball was inaugurated at the Federal League Park in Brooklyn yesterday afternoon and about 2,500 persons took advantage of it. The most marked change was in the bleachers, which have been drawing very lightly. The price of 10 cents for seats in this section of the field attracted 984 persons. In the pavilion and in the grand stand there was not such a large increase so it was argued that the gain in the bleachers indicated that the low price had attracted an entirely new crowd to the park. Clockers, said to be in the employ of organized baseball, said that the total attendance was 1,511, the distribution being proportioned as follows: 507 in the bleachers, 875 in the 25-cent stands, eighty-five 75-cent admissions, twenty-four in the boxes at $1 each and 157 passes. This, however, much underestimates the crowd which saw the game.

By way of showing that there was no disposition to deprive the spectators of the worth of their money there was nearly two hours and a half of baseball, and the Brookfeds managed to pull out a ninth inning victory over Kansas City by a score of 7 to 6. In the early part of the contest Lee Magee, Holt, Harry Smith, and Fred Smith were valuable assets to the two West-End men from the West. Errors glared out like auto lights on a dark night. The first four runs were scored by the Kansas City men as a result of misplays. Brooklyn's hitting power, condensed in two innings, gave the victory to Lee Magee's players. In the fourth four runs were scored. Brooklyn, however, was two runs behind when the last of the ninth inning opened, and there seemed to be little chance of a victory for the Brookfeds after Wiltse and Anderson both went out on infield taps, but Henning, who had displaced Cullop in the fourth inning, became wild and gave two passes. Benny Kauff came to the plate with the cry for a home run ringing in his ears. He lifted the ball to the right field fence and it almost went over. Magee scored on the drive and Cooper and Kauff scored on

EXPERIMENTING IN MEXICO.

We are about to try another experiment in Mexico. It is not the first, though it is directed to the same end as the others, which have failed. The sending of the President's personal envoys to confer with the partisan chieftains in Mexico was an experiment; it was hoped that they might be persuaded to put aside their differences and their private ambitions, that they might be able to work together for the good of Mexico. The Niagara conference was an experiment, and its failure was a great disappointment. Now we are to make another appeal to the reason, the patriotism, and the common sense of CARRANZA, ZAPATA, and VILLA. If it had not been abundantly demonstrated that they are lacking in those essential qualities of good citizenship, we should have a good deal more hope of a favorable outcome.

The representatives of the six Central and South American States who are in conference with Secretary LANSING, it is expected, will join with him in an appeal to the faction leaders in Mexico to stop fighting, to agree to the choice of a Provisional President free from entanglement with any of the parties, and to permit him, undisturbed by further strife, to prepare for the election, in a lawful manner, of a Constitutional President who would reorganize the politics and administration of the country. It is a sensible plan, as wise possibly as any that could be adopted at this stage of Mexican turmoil. CARRANZA will be an obstacle, that is his specialty. His note to Secretary LANSING is characteristically boastful and foolish. Of course he has no authority to speak for the Mexican people or the Mexican Government, and his Constitutionalist Army is as far as possible from having accomplished the overthrow of the "reactionary factions." Still, CARRANZA is intelligent enough to know that if he defeats all our experimental efforts for a peaceful settlement of Mexican affairs, there remain and there will surely follow measures not experimental, in which, if we adopt them, we shall succeed. In the warning he served upon the warring Mexican factions on June 2, the President said:

> I feel it to be my duty to tell them that if they cannot accommodate their differences and unite for this great purpose within a very short time, this Government will be constrained to decide what means should be employed by the United States in order to help Mexico save herself and serve her people.

That points directly to armed intervention as the ultimate measure. It will surely be adopted, we shall have to intervene with arms, if appeal and persuasion fail. Some Americans, we think there are not many, condemn the policy of experiment. They have as little patience with President WILSON'S present methods as they had with "watchful waiting." We know very well the alternative they have in mind. They would have had our Government send troops to Mexico months ago. They would have restored peace and order to the turbulent republic by force of arms. We are entirely confident that the great majority of the American people will approve of resort to force only when it has been demonstrated that no other means will succeed. The President has understood the wish and thought of the American people, he has faithfully acted upon that understanding. The difficulties of the problem are very great, they are perplexing. It was the President's duty to employ first the methods of peace. It was inevitable that he should try experiments, devised and directed with intelligence. The sending of warships to Vera Cruz is a matter quite apart from the proposed appeal to CARRANZA, ZAPATA, and VILLA. That is a step taken for the protection of life and property threatened by an outbreak of disorder directed chiefly against foreigners. But the faction leaders in Mexico may as well understand that the demonstration at Vera Cruz is a portent of what they will bring upon themselves in a more determined form if they refuse assent to the reasonable proposals which will go to them with the approval and participation of sister republics of the South.

GERMANY AS AN INTERNATIONAL MORALIST.

Professor KUNO FRANCKE of Harvard has been one of the most temperate and most intelligent, one of the fairest, and therefore most persuasive and effective, of the advocates of the German cause in the United States. His perception of the American point of view, his opposition to the ill-considered schemes of certain German-Americans to form a political party founded on German birth and descent, or sympathy with Germany in the war, his able letters in THE TIMES, have given him a rather lonely, but an enviable, eminence among the partisans of his country here and abroad. In his letter printed on this page yesterday there is discernible—and we say it with regret and with all respect for a strong and subtle intellect—an approach from an unexpected angle to the untiring propaganda to prevent the exportation of arms and munitions of war.

Professor FRANCKE reiterates his opinion and the incontestable fact that the traffic in arms and munitions is "internationally legalized"; that the advantage or disadvantage to any belligerent impairs in no respect that legality; that for this Government to inhibit that trade "would make the United States in "a much stricter sense legally a partisan of one of the warring Powers "than mere interference with this "traffic does." Professor FRANCKE looks to a higher sanction than international law. The question "has "ceased to be a question of inter-"national legality only and has come "to be a vital question of national "and international morality."

It is superfluous to cite Professor FRANCKE'S questions, each beginning with a high "Is it moral?" It is enough to find, coming from a German pen, an appeal in the name of "international morality." At German solicitation and for German advantage a traffic legal by international law, so much respected by Germany in this war, is to be prohibited as a violation of international morality. Professor FRANCKE is concerned lest the United States fail to maintain "a moral neutrality."

The invader of Luxemburg, the invader and despoiler of Belgium, the tearer-up of treaties, the bombarder of undefended places, the executioner of helpless civilians, the destroyer of the Lusitania, the Super-nation hacking its way through solemn obligations and old humanities with the sword—in her behalf the United States is to prohibit the sale of arms to the belligerents, and in the name of "international morality." America is to be legally unneutral in order to be "morally neutral."

If the United States has continued to be neutral and aloof through a long series of German violations of international morality, it is not likely to override its plain rights and interests and make itself memorably unneutral at the sophisticated plea of international morality to benefit the violating nation. Not such aid or such defenders does international morality need.

HISTORY, LIES, AND GUESSES.

When Count JOSEPH DE MAISTRE said, "For three centuries history has "been an uninterrupted conspiracy "against the truth," he might have improved the sentence by leaving out the time limitation. It is not merely that history contains great errors of fact; our understanding of whole eras and the course of human events in them is often faulty and erroneous, because of the materials from which it is formed. The letters called forth in THE TIMES by some remarks of a correspondent upon Irish history give a new illustration of this. There is reason for the indignation shown by Mr. J. L. GRAHAM over the utter misapprehension of the place ancient Ireland occupied in civilization, and it is not a misapprehension affecting only the understanding of Irish history; it misinterprets the whole course of mediaeval history.

Ireland was the last survivor of civilization in the western world. The barbarian invasion which overwhelmed Europe and extinguished the torch of learning stopped at the Irish Sea and left Ireland untouched; and upon her fell the burden of extending civilization and Christianity eastward. The Roman missionaries got little further west than Kent; the Irish sent missionaries to England, taught the barbarians to write, gave them the letters they used until the Norman Conquest, founded schools, and in the middle of the seventh century there was not a Bishop in England who was not of Irish birth, consecration, or education. From the Irish universities there poured forth missionaries to the Continent, and from Ireland civilization and learning spread to Germany and Switzerland; CHARLEMAGNE, seeking to civilize his people, sent to those universities for his teachers. Ireland was the single star that shone undimmed in the general blackness that fell upon the West after the fall of Rome.

Not to understand this is not to understand the course of western history, both on the Continent and in the islands. Why does the old delusion persist that Ireland was a barbarous country? Because the sources from which history was drawn were ignorant of it, and new learning cannot easily displace old ideas. It is no new thing for the world's understanding of a whole epoch to be wrong because of insufficient information, and the Irish have no reason to feel that they are singled out for misunderstanding. GIBBON, reconstructing the course of history after the northern invasion, tells us in footnotes again and again that what he states in the text is merely the best guess he can arrive at after studying utterly contradictory histories; sometimes he is obliged to construct the story of a whole century from a few poems or an oration or two. FROUDE wonders what we would think of CATILINE and CLODIUS if we had their side of the story and did not base our opinion of them on what was said by their bitter enemy, CICERO; and it may be that the whole accepted story of that famous era in Roman history is the opposite of the truth.

In MAX NORDAU'S "Interpretation of History" he calls attention to the fact that in 1906 excavations at Boghazkoi discovered Cheta, the capital of an empire of that name. Of that empire nothing is known save an inscription referring to a treaty between its Emperor and Rameses III. "But," says Dr. NORDAU, "between 1500 and 1100 "B. C. this empire had, in all prob-"ability, a profound influence on "Judea and Israel, an influence "hitherto unsuspected by historians. "In consequence, their interpretation "of the history of Judea has been im-"perfect, or even entirely false."

History, it has been said, is a lie agreed upon; rather it is in some degree a guess based on insufficient hearsay. MATTHEW ARNOLD rather cynically dismissed the case as hopeless: "On the breast of that huge "Mississippi of falsehood called his-"tory, a foam-bell more or less is of "no consequence"; and hence it was hardly worth while to correct mere details. If the Irish are indignant it is not because they are sufferers above others; but they are alive, and most of the other victims of falsehood and misunderstanding are dead.

THE WAR AND IMMIGRATION.

The revolutionary effect of the war upon trade is surpassed by the effect upon immigration. The excess of arrivals over departures for the year ended June 30, 1915, was only 50,070. Since 1910 the range has been between 400,000 and 800,000. Naturally there is a decrease in the arrivals from all nations, the greatest decrease being in Italians, 227,882. Italians also lead in departures for home, 124,246, but the greatest decrease in departures, singularly enough, is in English men and women. Last year 120,842 English went home, and this year of war only 76,868.

Each year since 1910, except only 1915, arrivals have exceeded a million; now they have fallen to 434,244. These figures have an important bearing upon the labor market, and it would be interesting to know whether the return flow will reach old dimensions when the war is over. The exodus from the United States just now is only partly for patriotism. War prices are paid for labor, sufficient even to tempt some Americans to go over. But after the war it may be supposed that the American bid for labor will again be the world's highest, while the war wages no longer will be paid abroad. Labor like gold goes where the bid is best, and there is no reason to suppose that after the war this country will lose its attraction.

HELPING THE RAILWAYS.

It is the first step that counts. When the Interstate Commerce Commission succumbed to the weight of argument for the advance of freight rates in the Eastern case it was foregone that it would have to do the same in the Western case. Nothing remained to decide in principle, and only questions of details were left. Advances are allowed on a long list of products, mostly the yield of the soil. Only the expert can follow the details, and translate them into profits for the railways. They asked for advances which, they said, would aggregate about ten millions, and they have received much less.

The increase is better than the figures for two reasons. First, the decision is helpful for sentimental purposes. It is shown again that the Commission can allow increases when the cause is just. That ought to help the railways' credit considerably. The rule of low and lower rates to the point of embarrassment is broken. Second, the increase is clear gain. It will cost the railways no more to transport the traffic, and the increase will be almost clear net.

If it is difficult to trace the details through into results to the railways, it is impossible to trace the addition to the cost of commodities to consumers. Rather it ought to be impossible, although there can be little doubt that the increased rates will be made the excuse for increased prices.

The Eastern case dragged through nearly two years. This decision was reached in about one-quarter the time. Better yet, rates are increased without any string to them.

The Commission resisted the plea of sixteen State Commissions. The manner in which some of them appeared in the case was scandalous. It was shown that their expenses were paid in part by those who opposed the advance of rates. State Commissions accepting such favors are in no position to take a detached view upon railway questions, either as respects shippers who may come to plead before them, or as respects the Federal Commission, with which the State Commissions are in antagonism. Altogether there was more in this case than the advance of rates, and the tendency of the decision, with two Commissioners favoring a larger increase, is worth more to the railways than the increase of earnings.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Mr. Osborne Is Not an Innovator.

Many disquieting rumors were settled, and settled in precisely the right way, when Governor WHITMAN, in response to the direct inquiry of a TIMES reporter, made and explained his purposes as regards the Sing Sing controversy. "I have no intention," he said, "of removing THOMAS MOTT OSBORNE from the Wardenship of Sing Sing Prison," and he added: "Warden OSBORNE is trying out a new plan of prison management, and it has been my purpose from the start to let his plan have a fair trial."

This means that the long and persistent efforts to drive Mr. OSBORNE from his place—efforts which, according to strong suspicion, have included some dark and ruthless plotting, and certainly have often taken the form of gross misrepresentations of what he was doing and of its results—have failed for the present and that their continuance will be hopeless at least for some time to come. The Governor's decision will be joyfully received throughout the State and all over the country by everybody who believes with more or less confidence in the possibility of so conducting a prison that it will not be the end of hope, by and for, the great majority of its inmates, but serve as a really reformative agency for a majority approaching the same size.

When the Governor spoke of "trying out a new plan," he used, however, a phrase which, while correct in one way—the plan is new as compared with the one it is, and for some time has been, in many places superseding to varying degrees—is likely to confirm for the many not well read in the recent annals of penology the widespread and wholly false impression that Mr. OSBORNE is a rash innovator blindly wandering in a field where no guidance from experience can be obtained. It is on that grotesquely false assumption that practically all of the criticism to which he has been subjected was based.

As a matter of fact, the newness of what is called his plan is relative, not absolute. It is by no means wholly new, even in Sing Sing, and variants of it have been for years in practical—and successful—operation elsewhere in this and other States. The Warden has been credited with both too much and too little—with too much confidence in his own ingenuity and with too little of the sense that makes men look long and carefully before they leap. To the fair-minded and well-instructed, he is simply extending, after adequate preparatory study, a system or method of prison management that has worked well wherever it has been tried with honesty and intelligence. And Mr. OSBORNE has both.

There are no just grounds for complaint or criticism in the fact that two West Point cadets were arrested here, this week, and later were fined $10 each by Magistrate LEVY. They had been guilty to just about that extent, for, having encountered on the street, while on leave here, one JOHN MCMANUS, who was moved to make a slurring remark about the United States Army as they passed, they, in turn, were moved to inflict upon him a black eye and a varied assortment of other facial bruises.

That there was any "moral turpitude" in thus treating the army's insulter could not very successfully be contended, at least by the present commentator, whose opinion is that Mr. MCMANUS got no more than, and perhaps not as much as, was legitimately coming to him as a misguided man and brother. Wherein the young officers-to-be erred, and gravely, was in lacking, or not using, the good judgment which it is peculiarly their duty to cultivate. They deserved the punishment they received, and it is to be hoped that in the future they will—well, not get arrested and fined when there devolves upon them the duty of vindicating the army's dignity and their own.

But the episode did provide one real grievance. The Magistrate, in imposing the well-earned fine—queer, isn't it, that "well-earned" can have two widely different meanings, as viewed from one side or the other?—practically said that the assaulting of Mr. MCMANUS was wrong because at the time when Mr. MCMANUS made the insulting remark about the United States Army, Mr. MCMANUS was drunk. The almost clear intimation was that had he said the same thing while sober, it would have been all right, or fairly right, or right enough, to give him a beating.

From that theory of responsibility and immunity strong protest is entered here and now. Drunk or sober, a man is himself. In what may or may not be his normal state, it is probable that Mr. MCMANUS would be more careful about what he said of the army in the hearing of two husky young West Pointers, but he would not be the better patriot on that account or his opinion of the army any different. It was he, not rum, that spoke, for rum only removes inhibitions. It gives nothing and inspires nothing, is responsible for nothing and excuses nothing. It only explains and reveals much.

Lissauer's Glory Is Waning.

One notes with a satisfaction the greater in exact proportion to one's desire to recover the liking and respect for Germans and Germany formerly felt by everybody, that severe and public criticism of ERNST LISSAUER'S "Hassgesang" has been begun there and by them.

LISSAUER'S verses, as verses, are unquestionably able—perhaps the best, and certainly the most vigorous and resonant, that the war has produced. In substance and sentiment, however, they are simply abominable, teaching and extolling, as they do, the basest and most harmful, individually and socially, of human passions, or rather of human vices. The Germans who claim to be religious have one reason to condemn incitement to hate their neighbors, and the Germans who claim to be intelligent have another.

How much of approval the miserable poem won from LISSAUER'S fellow-countymen has not been made clear, but the Kaiser promptly "decorated" its author, apparently as a reward for the misuse of his great talents, and not till now has there been any open protest against the circulation of the brutal and wicked production. And even now the published objections to "The Chant of Hate" are chiefly against putting it in the books read and studied by children!

WOMAN'S GROWING UP.

Her Progress Since 1847 from a State of Perpetual Minority.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The celebration of Lucy Stone's birthday calls attention afresh to the rapid progress of the movement to which she gave her life.

When she started out to lecture for woman's rights in 1847 no woman in the United States could vote anywhere, upon any question, except in Kentucky. There widows with children of school age could take part in electing school committees. Today women can vote for President of the United States in twelve States—one quarter of the whole number; and they enjoy some form of suffrage in more than half the States of the Union.

But the change has been much greater than this. When Lucy Stone was born, a married woman had hardly more legal rights than a baby. Her property, her person, her children, and her earnings were under the absolute control of her husband. Women who had their living to earn were limited to a few poorly paid occupations. All the professions were closed to them. No college in the United States would admit a woman. A tyrannous public opinion sternly condemned any woman who wished to speak in public. Even the few who wrote for publication were looked upon as unwomanly. There were hardly any women's organizations. It was thought unbecoming and strong-minded for a "female" to belong to a temperance society. Even so late as 1837 the appointment of Abby Kelly upon a committee of the Anti-Slavery Society was so shocking an innovation that it split the association in twain.

Dr. Emily Blackwell once said to me: "No woman whose memory does not go back sixty years can conceive of the iron wall that ringed around every woman who wanted to do anything in the least out of the common groove. Such a woman was simply crushed. Those who were of such a charicter that they could not be crushed without resistance had to break a pathway through for themselves and for others."

In these days the attitude of law and custom toward women was at least consistent; they were treated as minors in almost every respect. But new laws and customs have been largely revolutionized. Today women are treated as full-grown human beings in almost all respects. It is only in the matter of suffrage that the fiction of their perpetual minority is still kept up. All these other changes have been knocking away, one by one, the buttresses and scaffoldings which upheld that doctrine; and soon that final fiction will have to follow the rest.

Today the revolution is more than half over. The admission of women to the ballot will not be nearly so great a change as the aggregate of the changes already made.

ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

A LUSITANIA SECRET.

Mr. Vanderbilt's Errand Was of Interest to the German Red Cross.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I see that in the new German music hall song glorifying the sinking of the Lusitania the name of the late Alfred Vanderbilt is coupled with that of Sir Edward Grey, Germany's arch enemy, according to her publicists. It may interest the German public to know, through your columns, that Mr. Vanderbilt sailed for Europe with the intention of giving a very large sum of money to the Red Cross of the Allies and the Austro-Germans. Naturally, his death put a stop to the realization of this project and many wounded men of the Teutonic forces will suffer and perhaps die who might have been spared both suffering and death had Mr. Vanderbilt been spared to complete his plans.

All Holidays on Monday.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have taken into consideration your article in THE TIMES issued by the Rev. H. P. Hames, curate at All Angels' Episcopal Church, Eighty-first Street and West End Avenue, and have the following suggestions to make:

I think the idea of having all holidays fall on Monday a very good one, but I do not think it necessary or advisable to change the number of days in the month, for that would impel too much inconvenience and misunderstanding in regard to birthdays and other affairs that come after the 28th of each month. Would it not be a better idea to merely celebrate all holidays on a Monday? For instance, if a holiday comes on Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday of a certain week, that holiday ought to be celebrated on the Monday of the same week, but where it comes on Thursday, Friday, Saturday or Sunday of a week, then it ought to be celebrated on the Monday of the following week, and in that way the amount of days in each month will remain the same.

Motor Races for Women.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Now that we have a motordrome of our own in the East, which is shortly to be opened, to the intense delight of "race fans" about New York, why not have an event for women drivers? The track, as I understand it, will be as safe, probably more so, than any in the world, and I know positively there would be no dearth of entrants. Heretofore the trouble has always been that road races were too dangerous, and as no special women's events were run, the men drivers refused to race against the weaker sex in a mixed contest. With the improved facilities now at hand, and considering the great number of licensed woman drivers from which competitors could be recruited, I believe such a race, properly restricted as to power of cars, distance, &c., would prove a great success.

As a "feeler," I would suggest to Mr. George Robertson that in his plans for the motor parade of Sept. 18, he include provision for a women drivers' section, and entries could be solicited at that time.

Our Many Flags.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Under the caption "Ireland's Many Flags," in this morning's TIMES, your correspondent reasons that as Ireland was governed by 168 kings when the English came, and as each king probably had a flag of his own, ergo, there could have been no national flag.

In reply, I would say that when I came to the United States I found it governed by forty-eight men, called Governors, each of whom had a flag of his own called a State flag. Is there, then, no national flag?

Woman in Her Turn.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reply to Mr. Philips's suggestion of a "Woman First" Society in THE SUNDAY TIMES, it seems enough to say that the women at present are clamoring to be treated just like men, legally, politically, and socially, not as superior or inferior, but equals. Why then, "Woman First" rather than "The Other Man First"?

HOW ITALY WENT TO WAR.

Not as a Business Proposition, but for Idealistic Reasons.

Florence, Italy, July 23, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you permit me to comment on Professor McClellan's article, "With Italy War Is Business Only," which appeared in the Magazine Section of THE NEW YORK TIMES? The article is, of course, written in a masterly manner, and with admirable clearness analyzes the peculiar Italian political situation that preceded that war; but I venture to express my earnest conviction that it discusses only the surface conditions—even these with two or three dangerous inaccuracies and with an even more dangerous omission—and that it is completely without a conception of the deep feelings that lay beneath.

Professor McClellan refers to Giolitti's famous letter, in which that great politician stated that, in his opinion, a good deal ("parecchio") could be obtained from Austria without going to war; and he tells of the Italian Government's efforts in pursuit of this Machiavellian policy. But he says nothing of the generous outburst of scorn and anger that this "parecchio" evoked in letter after letter from eminent men in all walks of life and in impassioned editorials in some of the best Italian newspapers.

It is true, as Professor McClellan says, that the Chamber of Deputies was with Giolitti; it is a profound error to say that the country was with him. The Interventionist demonstrations were what Professor McClellan calls them—"crowds made up almost entirely of half-grown lads and schoolboys"—only so long as it was clear to all that Italy's progress toward war was steady and sure. When Giolitti's blow, what is called throughout the country his "tradimento," fell, and the Ministry resigned, and all seemed lost, then the manifestations became real. A wind of anger swept the country. The handfuls of demonstrators became hosts—men, not boys, and in earnest. It is absurd to imagine that d'Annunzio stirred up the people to war. He was cheered because he spoke what they felt. Professor McClellan's explanation that the Government stampeded the people is an inversion. It was the people who stampeded the Government. For reflect: The Ministry had resigned; the Chamber of Deputies was neutralist, and the general impression was that the King did not much want war. Then, why stampede the people?

Again, Professor McClellan asserts that, "Italian interests apart, Italy would prefer to fight as the ally of Germany, and, were it possible, against Austria, England, and France," and he quotes a "prominent Italian" as regretting that Italy could not join Germany in August, and have already received as her share of spoils Corsica, Tunis, Egypt, and possibly Morocco. I think that, without any pretense to divination, I could name the Italian—a member of the insignificant Nationalist Party—a party of a few theorists so blind that they could not see (what any educated Italian of whatsoever other party will tell you) that to make the Italians fight the French would be an impossibility.

Further, Professor McClellan says that "the general mobilization saw the regiments marching to the front, not singing and cheering, but in silence. * * * * Of course it is difficult either to make or to refute such judgments. They can come only from personal observation, and personal observation is limited. My own, however, leads me to quite a different conclusion. My wife and I were members of a committee that at the Campo di Marte station in Florence made little gifts—cigarettes, postcards, flags, flowers, &c.—to the trainloads of soldiers passing through on their way to the front. We must have seen between 25,000 and 50,000 soldiers, (we were at the station three hours a day, three days a week, for several weeks,) and I can assure you that they were very far from being silent and unenthusiastic. Their spirit was thrilling. Although the soldiers were, as they knew, on their way to fight the Austrians, their execrations were far more often directed against "Guglielmone" than against "Cecco Beppe," whose name, indeed, was invariably greeted with laughter. Since then we have received scores of postcards from some of these soldiers at the front—courageous, enthusiastic cards.

In the main, sentiment was not adequately expressed in the newspapers, save in letters from individuals and in the correspondence of such famous journalists as Luigi Barzini, a glorious exception being Il Popolo d'Italia, the organ of the most intelligent Socialists, who, under the leadership of Mussolini, seceded from the old party when the latter declared for peace at any price. But in general the feeling was expressed in other ways—by the fact that the "Marseillaise" was prohibited and no French or Belgian flag allowed to be shown on the stage of any theatre or cafe concert; by the rumble of applause of the crowd before a bulletin chronicling a French success, by a thousand phrases overheard in the street, by something in the air.

It is difficult to analyze such things. Professor McClellan will probably consider me an optimistic dreamer seeing about me what I desire to see. But at least I am not alone in my impression. All other foreign observers whom I have met share it, and Mr. Trevelyan, the well-known historian, has said that Italy's war is nine-tenths a war made for idealistic reasons. I am not so rash as to maintain that Italy would have moved for altruistic reasons alone, but I do earnestly assert that the Italian people would never have gone heartily to war had they not felt that passionate sympathy for Belgium and France. It was an essential factor, and not the least. CLAUDE C. WASHBURN.

Poetry In Us.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to express my appreciation to you for the enjoyment which I derive from the many selections of poetry which appear in your editorial page daily. Since I began reading your worthy paper I have never failed to observe and read carefully the poems in it. I even have a collection of the clippings, which I keep pasted in a book, kept for that purpose.

I think we ought to cultivate a taste for poetry equal to that of the periods in which poets were plentiful. This would be for our own benefit, as poetry helps us not only to enjoy life, but also to endure it. To my mind, an easy way to obtain that better taste would be through our public schools. There we teach literature, but not enough stress is laid on poetry. In the lower grades pupils study poetry as memory gems, but they are then too young to understand what poetry really is. They look on memorizing those gems as a burden. In high school, on the other hand, the pupil is older and can understand better the beauty that is in poetry. I would suggest that in the high school more stress should be laid on the study of poetry. In that way we would help poetry to live.

Disbelieving In Signs.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your correspondent "Passenger," complaining about smoking on the general deck of the ferryboat Castleton, seems to think that a notice board forbidding the practice would stop it. If "Passenger" will cross to Staten Island any week-day he will be able to find a dozen or two American gentlemen smoking pipes, cigars, or cigarettes on the upper deck, although there are at least four notices in prominent positions which read: "Smoking not allowed on this deck," and a smoking deck is provided. Is this not a free country? K.

A Vanishing Eighty-Three Cents.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On my farm near here (and the same conditions exist among my neighbors) we are being offered the monopoly creating price of 17 cents per bushel for new potatoes. THE SUPER-NAPOLEONIC GERMAN IN RUSSIA.

How He Proposes to Crush and Banish the Slavic Peril Before Returning to the Other Front in France.

By WALTER E. IVES,
Formerly Lieutenant Prussian Thirteenth Dragoons.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Since the fall of Warsaw interest in the military situation has largely assumed the character of a speculation as to what will be the next aim and, accordingly, the next move of the German General Staff.

The assumption is generally predominant that the near future will bring a renewed vigorous offensive of the Teutons on the west front, or an invasion of Italy or Serbia, made possible by their going on the defensive along the Narew-Vistula-Wieprz-Bug and Dniester line in the east.

This view betrays a misconception of the military situation in general, and of the magnitude of the Germanic operations in the east in particular. The military situation is mostly likened to that of the days of Napoleon's invasion of Russia, and numerous critics indulge in a comparison of the two campaigns against Russia, deriving from it the prediction that the Czar's country is unconquerable, and that, consequently, the Germanic allies are doomed to failure.

The maximum strength of the entire Russian forces at Barclay de Tolly's and later Kutusow's command exceeded at no time 400,000 men. Divided into three, mostly not co-operating armies, the individual, comparatively small units could be easily provisioned from various small bases of supplies. When the enemy's advance would threaten one, another would be at the Russian Army's disposal. Thus, never severely beaten in battles, which they always avoided, the Slavs never ceased to be a constant menace to the French armies. Today it is not a question of provisioning from 300,000 to 400,000 men, but one of supplying from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 soldiers. For this purpose, and in particular regard of Russia's comparative scarcity of big cities and inadequate roads of communication, four great central provisioning depots, Petrograd, Moscow, Kiev and Kharkov, were for years prepared, and are now established in the Russian empire.

All operations of the armies north of the Province of Volhynia are ultimately based on Petrograd and Moscow; those from Volhynia and south of this province are based on Kiev and Kharkov. If the Russian armies in the field can be cut off from all or any part of these four central bases of supplies, the remaining subordinate provisioning depots will in short time prove inadequate to provide for the enormous numbers of troops. Once the sources of all supplies have been dammed the Russian armies may be considered as eliminated from the conflict, for a withdrawal behind those centres into a country topographically, economically and technically wholly unfit and unprepared for the maintenance of armies of modern proportions would mean their dissolution into numerous units unable of co-operation.

The German advance, on the other hand, while it gradually draws further from its great supply centres, Koenigsberg, Thorn, Posen, Breslau, Cracow and Lemberg, will find plenty of subordinate centres strategically, economically and technically well fit for adequate provisioning of the vast armies, such as, for instance, Lublin, Warsaw, Vilna, Riga, &c., and modern means of communication in western Russia, though not equal to West European means of travel and transportation, are altogether different from the few miserable post roads in the times of Napoleon I., and have now cut distance between Warsaw and Moscow into less than one-fifth of the original length.

The plan to follow up a Russian retreat can, therefore, be carried out on a basis entirely different from that of 1812, and before all, unlike the French Emperor's adventure, it has a certain and definite aim—the severance of the Russian armies from their only vital bases of supplies—while the campaign of Napoleon was bare of all strategic objects; merely undertaken to carry French power and glory into the capital of the only unconquered rival.

And so the course of strategy, which the German Staff will further on pursue, cannot be doubtful. The Teutons will cling to their most formidable enemy in the east until he is definitely crushed.

The soundness of this reasoning is indicated by the magnitude of the operations under way on the eastern front. For the mere capture of a city a campaign so gigantic that its proportions will never be even approximately conceived by the layman would have never been launched. How little the present operations are generally understood is evidenced by the belief often expressed that an army of millions like that of Grand Duke Nicholas could have been completely surrounded and that the movements of Generals von Hindenburg in the north and von Mackensen in the south had co-operated to that end and had failed.

However, the objects of the northern and southern offensives, for the time being, at least, are not at all directly cooperative. While von Mackensen's operations are directed against all Russian troops which are based on Kiev and Kharkov, Field Marshal von Hindenburg's strategy aims at the Russian armies supplied from Petrograd and Moscow. If this theory is correct, the first step of the Teutonic General Staff must have for its object the separation of the Russian northern armies from those of the south, then to operate against the two groups of Russian provisioning centres in the north and south separately. The only direct railway communication between both groups of Russian armies leads from Kiev over Sarny and Kovel to Brest-Litovsk. All other communications eastward from the latter fortress, the most southern of which runs over Pinsk and Gomel at an average distance of 100 miles from the Kovel-Kiev road, lead to the bases at Petrograd and Moscow. The vast country between both roads is swampy and wholly unfit for military operations, and traversed only by one single one-track road, connecting both main roads between Sarny and Luninez. A glance at the General Staff map will show that the possession of Kovel, therefore, virtually separates all communications between the Russian armies of the north and of the south. The direction of Field Marshal von Mackensen's advance will consequently, in all probability, shortly be found to swing again eastward and later southeastward. The control of the Lublin-Cholm-Kovel railroad must therefore have been the principal aim of his northward movement. Kovel, and then Sarny, the last link connecting the north and the south, should now be the object of von Mackensen's centre; Luzk and Rowno that of his right wing.

To the Austrian armies along the upper Bug, the Zlota Lipa and Dniester, will fall the task to engage and detain the Russian forces opposing them, in order to enable von Mackensen to cut them off from the northeast—from Kiev and Kharkov. The Field Marshal's left wing will probably remain in co-operation with the Austrian army northeast of Lublin, which, under Archduke Joseph Ferdinand, will continue to drive against Brest-Litovsk. Serious attempts to take this stronghold of the first class by force will hardly be attempted. The army of Brest-Litovsk, forming the extreme left of the battle front of the Russian northern armies, extending over Bialystock to Grodno and Kovno, must fall a victim to Field Marshal von Hinderburg's operations, directed from the northwest, from the Provinces of Kovno and Courland, where they have now assumed the proportions and gained the significance which I predicted for them in an article in THE NEW YORK TIMES as early as May 5.

All movements along the Vistula and the Narew are now but of secondary importance. Their object is merely to detain as large a body of Russian troops as possible, preventing them from supporting the Russian armies protecting the Vilna-Dunaburg lap of the railroad to Petrograd, the capture of which would automatically seal their fate. This, the Russian Staff cannot have failed to recognize, and it is hard to understand why they have clung on to the western part of the Narew line so long, and, even harder, what could have possibly been the object of dooming a large garrison to capture in Novo-Georgievitch, the strategical importance of which had vanished with the abandonment of Warsaw. The natural course would have been the abandonment of Novo-Georgievitch simultaneously with Warsaw, and subsequently the gradual abandonment of the positions along the Narew from its mouth, in cooperation with the gradual retirement of the armies from the Polish capital. Clinging too long to Novo-Georgievitch and the western part of the Narew front may become a source of great regret to the Russian General Staff.

Meanwhile, all hopes for the Russian Armies of the north west on Kovno. The road through this fortress is the best and most direct to reach the Petrograd railroad at Vilna. Further northeast, between Wilkomir and the region west of Dunaburg, the country is extremely difficult for an advance. At the same time, Kovno forms a menace to the right wing of General von Bülow's army. From Kovno, in the direction of the mouth of the Niemen, if at all, must come the Russian counterstroke. While it would have a fair chance of temporarily, at least, checking the German advance on the principal Russian "bread line," the capture of the fortress on the other hand would doom the campaign of a great part of the Russian northern armies.

The German operations against Riga must be regarded as merely protecting the advance on the Vilna-Dunaburg line in its left flank, and are, therefore, temporarily at least, of but secondary importance.

If Kovno should fall, Grodno, the centre of the Kovno-Brest-Litovsk front, like Brest-Litovsk, would not have to be forcibly taken by the German troops now pushing forward from the Narew and Bobr region; it would become void of its strategic value, and would have to be voluntarily abandoned.

A further Russian retreat would now necessarily converge from all roads on Minsk, from where the only road of escape

PLANTED MYSTERY OPENS THE GAIETY

"Search Me" Is a Melodramatic Farce by the Author of "Officer 666."

SEARCH ME—A new comedy in three acts, by Augustin MacHugh, in the Gaiety Theatre.

The doors of the Gaiety Theatre were opened for the season last evening with the production there of "Search Me," a new play by the man who wrote "Officer 666." Upon inspection, it proved to be an acceptably presented, fairly entertaining and exceedingly intricate mystery farce in three acts.

Augustin MacHugh's latest effort is distinctly reminiscent of "Grumpy" and the enormously amusing "Seven Keys to Baldpate." The resemblance to the melodrama which has so profitably engrossed the attention of Cyril Maude for nearly two years, is caught a few moments after the rise of the curtain. There you behold the country seat of a quondam English barrister, who is ancient, fond, irrascible, extremely foxy and given to barking, and who has in his house a priceless jewel, which, after a properly exciting struggle in the dark, is discovered to have disappeared.

But it is "Grumpy" with the twist of "Seven Keys"—"Grumpy" with not only all the characters under suspicion but the playwright also under suspicion. If it began to dawn upon last evening's audience before the play was half spent that the whole thing was what detectives and reporters call a plant, it was hardly Mr. MacHugh's fault. Your habitual theatregoer is growing wary, and after his recent experiences with the Cohan farce, "The Big Idea," "Under Cover," and the like, he is become far too canny to trust any plot at its first appearance.

But if it is fairly obvious early in the evening that the author of "Search Me" is playing a trick on his audience, it is not so obvious that he is playing a whole bagful of tricks. You may suspect that the old barrister has just pretended to lose his ruby as a publicity scheme for a bouncing young American playwright, but then you are only half way there. It is improbable that the most objectionably knowing person could guess all the moves in the new farce, for it is as involved as a chess game.

Something of this intricacy may be gathered from the mere table of contents. Here is an elderly former barrister pretending that he has lost a costly jewel, here is a millionaire from Australia pretending that he has stolen it, here is an ex-convict quite reasonably pretending that his past has been spotless, here is a man from Scotland Yard and here is a man from Scotland Yard pretending to be a local Constable and achieving that disguise so successfully that he seems ever on the verge of warbling about the coster who leaves off jumping on his mother.

It it must be said that in following this tangled thread, the interest slackens rather often from time to time, but it must also be said that several moments of thorough excitement are achieved. Of course it is all quite wildly absurd, but that was not unintentional. That is the way with what is called the mystery farce, a little name given to any melodrama that is too preposterous to present itself with a perfectly straight face.

The cast which Moffatt and Pennell have assembled for the presentation of the new play at the Gaiety is, for the most part, quite satisfactory. First honors go easily to Fred Graham as Mr. Anthony Moreland, K. C. That is the Grumpy like gentleman, capable of great duplicity. Mr. Graham assumes the part in a most engaging manner, and after this performance could safely present himself as a successor to Cyril Maude whenever that actor is ready to turn from "Grumpy" to something else.

Howard Estabrook is pleasing and does as well as could be expected with the rôle of the visiting American playwright, whose ghastly manners provide one of the elements of mystery. Montagu Love is wasted as the slightly romantic scoundrel. In minor parts, Charles A. Stevenson, George Gaston, and Rollo Lloyd do very well indeed, Mr. Lloyd as the ex-convict with a faint tendency to reform, succeeding in looking precisely as though he had just been gently discharged from Sing Sing.

Ethel Gray Terry as the heroine of the American playwright is an agreeable newcomer to the New York stage, but seems somewhat depressed by the absurdity of her rôle.

If Mr. MacHugh's very serious offering of last season may now be regarded as a lapse, this new play at the Gaiety might be described as a return to his earlier manner, but it will leave him still best known as the author of "Officer 666."

MOVIES FOR KNICKERBOCKER

The Triangle Film Corporation has taken over the Knickerbocker Theatre for a year from Klaw & Erlanger and the Charles Frohman Company. The film company will take possession next month and will make some alterations before reopening the house.

This is the new company formed recently with D. W. Griffith, Thomas Ince, and Mack Sennett as its artistic directors, and in the Knickerbocker the films made under the supervision of these men will be shown for the first time. The company has leased the Studebaker in Chicago and is negotiating for first-class playhouses in other cities. Regular theatre prices from $2 down will prevail.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

George Mooser, in association with Elisabeth Marbury, will place in rehearsal today under the direction of T. Daniel Frawley a new comedy by Louis K. Anspacher entitled "Our Children." The cast will include Emmett Corrigan, Christine Norman, Alma Tell, Arthur Lewis, Alphonse Ethier, Albert Bruning, Richard Barbee, John McKee, Gavin Harris, and Elizabeth Ariaans.

HENRY HAS A COTTON PLAN.

Wants Government to Lend $500,000,000 to Planters.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—Representative Robert L. Henry of Texas, had a conference today with W. G. P. Harding of the Federal Reserve Board, in regard to a proposal to issue reserve notes to finance the Southern planters and save them from a repetition of the enormous loss sustained on part of last year's cotton crop.

Mr. Henry's proposition is that the Federal Reserve Board shall authorize the immediate issuance of $500,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes for deposit in the sub-treasuries nearest the Federal Reserve banks, and that this money be lent to members of the Reserve banks at 2 per cent., with the understanding that loans be made to planters at 4 per cent. on warehouse receipts, the planters to pay the warehouse charges, which will run from one-half of 1 per cent. to 1 per cent., the period of the loans to be six months.

Assurances were given that the Federal Reserve Board would work out a plan for the relief of the cotton planters, and Mr. Henry's suggestion was taken under consideration. The board is entirely willing to approve the acceptance of warehouse receipts as security, but is not prepared to say what rate of interest should be required.

Representative Henry says that if his plan fails to be adopted he will ask the Secretary of the Treasury to withdraw the funds from the reserve banks which the Secretary has the authority to do under the law and deposit them with the Southern banks to make loans on warehouse receipts. The basis of the plan to finance this year's crop is 8 cents a pound. That price was used last year, but a great deal of the cotton was bought at 6 cents by the brokers.

GOETHALS 'FLIRTS WITH JOB'

Post is Here, but Not Police Commissionership.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—Brig. Gen. George W. Goethals, Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, told friends here today that he was "flirting with a New York job." He would not give any further information, but he did say his remark had no reference to the office of Police Commissioner of New York.

General Goethals said yesterday that he would tender his resignation from the Governorship of the Canal Zone, to take effect some time in November, but he would remain in charge of affairs in the Zone longer than November if the War Department desired him to do so.

HER SIX-HOUR NAP ILLEGAL?

Inspector Holds That Telephone Girl Works While She Sleeps.

MARLBORO, Mass., Aug. 11.—The question whether a telephone operator works while she sleeps is at issue in a case filed in the District Court today, the result of which is expected to decide the legal status of work of many women employed as night operators throughout the State.

An Inspector of the State Board of Labor and Industries holds that the law limiting the working hours of women to ten a day, and fifty-four a week, is being violated in the case of a night operator at the local exchange. The young woman reports for duty at 7 P. M. and is in the office until 7 A. M. But is allowed to sleep subject to call from midnight to 6 A. M. It is the complainant's contention that this constitutes twelve hours' work.

HAS MENINGITIS CURE.

Eucalyptus, Australian Scientist Asserts, Is a Specific.

MELBOURNE, Australia, Aug. 11, (via London.)—The discovery of a specific for cerebro-spinal meningitis was announced today by Dr. Richard Bull, Director of the Bacteriological Laboratory of the University of Melbourne. Dr. Bull asserted that eucalyptus would destroy the germ.

The treatment of cerebro-spinal meningitis has long presented a serious problem for medical science. Up to a comparatively short time ago it may be said that there was no effective treatment for the disease, known generally as "spotted fever," or "the black death."

The introduction of serum therapy, however, offered hope of combating the disease successfully. In the epidemic in New York in 1905 the serum of Flexner and Jobling was used with striking success among young patients. The death rate where serum was employed fell to 40.3 per cent., compared with 90 per cent. without its use.

In the nineteenth century there were serious epidemics of this disease in Europe and in the Eastern part of the United States.

The medicinal properties of the oil obtained from leaves of the eucalyptus tree have long been recognized. It has been used in treatment of microbic diseases of the lungs and employed as an antiseptic.

NED WAYBURN GETS CENTURY PLAYHOUSE

Leases the Central Park West Theatre for Production of Musical Revues.

ALTERATIONS TO SEAT 3,000

Negotiations which have been pending for two months between the New Theatre Company and Ned Wayburn were concluded yesterday, when the big playhouse in Central Park West was leased by a corporation. The theatre is to be conducted as a music hall after the manner of London and Continental music halls.

The corporation, a charter for which was issued last week in Albany, is known as the Ned Wayburn's Productions, Inc. It has taken over the theatre for a term of years, a period which, Mr. Wayburn said last night, was not less than five years, although he did not care to state the exact length of time. He likewise was reticent about the identity of those financially interested with him and the terms of the lease.

The general plan for the new regime, announced when the negotiations were begun in June, will be adhered to. This includes structural changes that will require an expenditure of about $50,000. Only minor alterations will be made in the auditorium. A stage box will be added at either side of the proscenium, and the addition of a row of chairs at the edge of the orchestra pit will bring the seating capacity up to 3,000.

The main lobby on the Central Park side will be retained for entrance and exit, while the Sixty-second Street lobby will be converted into a bar for men. The corresponding lobby on the Sixty-third Street side will be made into a refreshment room for women. The Vanderbilt room, which is the Circassian walnut room just off the mezzanine promenade, will become a refreshment and dancing room. A negro band will be stationed here, and before the performance and between acts will play for dancing. One of the tea rooms on this floor will be used as a private dining room.

The roof, which was designed to be used as a concert hall and garden, the concert hall subsequently having been made into a children's theatre, will be remodeled. The concrete floor and sloping floor will be torn out of the miniature playhouse. A dance floor will be laid in the auditorium and a midnight revue will be given on the stage. A considerable part of the roof now without a covering will be encased in glass to increase the space for dancers. The tap room in the basement also will be turned into a dancing club.

The kitchens will be on the roof and there will be facilities for serving 1,200 persons in various parts of the building simultaneously.

Musical revues will be given in the auditorium for the present, though the style of entertainment may be varied in the future if the popularity of this type wanes. The first production will be made early next month, and will be entitled "Town Topics," and has been in rehearsal three weeks. The cast will embrace several hundred, counting supernumeraries and chorus, and next to the Hippodrome productions it will be the biggest musical entertainment ever staged here.

A month later the roof show will open, and a month after that the basement dance room will be opened under the direction of Miss Grace Field. Mr. Wayburn said last night he planned making several productions a year in the theatre proper, sending the shows to the larger cities when they had exhausted their public here.

Otto H. Kahn, one of the founders of the New Theatre, through his secretary, confirmed Mr. Wayburn's announcement of his occupancy. He would not say to what extent any of the founders was interested financially in the venture. The upper right hand stage box has been retained as the founders' box, and the forty men who established the playhouse will have entree to it.

In its six years of its existence the great building has been used as a repertoire theatre, a playhouse in which the Lieblers made spectacular productions and as the home of the Century Opera Company. Under these respective regimes it was called the New Theatre, the Century Theatre, and the Century Opera House. Now it will be called merely The Century.

HOBOKEN WORRIED ABOUT THE ADRIATIC

Even Hears a Wireless Hint at Disaster to Her That Nobody Else Picks Up.

A rumor, which spread through Wall Street yesterday afternoon, that the White Star steamship Adriatic, carrying the largest cargo of war munitions ever shipped from this port on any one vessel, had been sunk by a German submarine, was traced last night to its source in Hoboken. The Hoboken original of the rumor was that the Captain of a sea-going tug, name unrevealed, had said that he had picked up a wireless message reading "Adriatic stung," which might have meant "Adriatic sunk," the static conditions being bad.

No wireless station along the coast heard any such message yesterday. The Adriatic, which left New York at 3 o'clock last Wednesday afternoon, is not due off the Irish coast until tonight, and will, therefore, not enter the "war zone" until tomorrow morning at the earliest. She is expected to dock in Liverpool some time on Saturday.

Similar rumors afterward proved to be baseless, were circulated about the Adriatic on her last outward voyage. These also were first current among the Germans in Hoboken.

TO EDUCATE TAXPAYERS.

Samuel T. Howe Says Most Systems Should Be Radically Changed.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 11.—An educational movement, nation-wide in scope, to acquaint the people with the fundamental principles of taxation, was urged here tonight by Samuel T. Howe, Vice President of the National Tax Association, in an address before the ninth annual conference of that organization.

Mr. Howe, who is Secretary of the Kansas Tax Commission, pointed out that the average taxpayer knows nothing of the facts of taxation. He asserted also that in the United States today there is a vital need of tax reform, laying stress on "prevalent haphazard methods" of taxation.

"The member of the community whose annual income is consumed wholly by frugal living expenses is relatively much more heavily taxed, under present conditions, than is the citizen whose income permits the accumulation of wealth," he said. "If the ideal of equality of burden is to be realized in any considerable degree, most tax systems must be radically changed."

PUT CEMENT BEHIND ARMOR.

Government Alters Practice in Construction of Battleships.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—The old practice of backing armor plate on battleships with wood has been abandoned and hereafter cement will be employed. The object is to make a good job and a tight one as the cement has no value in a protective sense. In fact, it is to be two inches or less in thickness. Experiments were made on the dreadnaught New York, and it was found that cement could be used at less cost for material and very much less for labor.

The first ship to be finished with cement backing only behind the armor plate is the dreadnought Arizona. The cement is poured in until it fills the space between the armor and the plates of the sides of the ship, and so makes the construction solid and tight against water and the possibility of rust.

RILEY DENIES 'FRAME-UP.'

Calls Osborne's Charge Against McDonald an Absurd Accusation.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 11.—John J. Riley, Superintendent of Prisons, said tonight that the charge made by Warden Thomas M. Osborne of Sing Sing that Patrick H. McDonald, confidential agent of the Prison Department, had participated in a plot to "frame" him was absurd. Mr. Osborne's accusation was to the effect that Mr. McDonald had tried to enlist the co-operation of an Ossining saloon keeper in staging a "convict orgy" in a rear room of his saloon with a view of taking snapshots for presentation to the Governor in connection with charges against Mr. Osborne's management of the prison.

"McDonald has never been inside a saloon in Ossining," said Mr. Reiley. "The mere admission that such a 'frame-up' was possible is a serious reflection on the management of Sing Sing."

Mr. Riley said that Mr. Osborne's affidavit came from a saloon keeper, who did not get the convict trade. Mr. Riley has heard that convicts have been in the habit of visiting the place of a rival liquor dealer in Ossining.

COWAN IS WITH TAMMANY.

Commissioner of Records Will Be Candidate for $8,000 Place.

John F. Cowan, Commissioner of Records, has lined up with Tammany Hall, and it was announced yesterday that he is to be the Tammany candidate this Fall for Municipal Court Justice of the Ninth District, to succeed John F. Fallon, who died recently. Petitions have been sent out naming him as the Democratic candidate for the place in the primaries. The salary is $8,000 a year. The district takes in the Twenty-sixth, Twenty-eighth, Thirtieth, and part of the Thirty-first Assembly Districts. Frank J. Hendrick is leader of the Thirtieth District, which for many years was ruled over by Percy Nagle. Hendrick, with Cowan's help, took the leadership from Nagle last year.

Cowan has been fighting Murphy alongside of County Clerk William F. Schneider, who controls the Cleveland Democracy.

McGEE OUT FOR SHERIFF.

"Suspender Jack" Will Enter Progressive Primaries.

John C. McGee, known as "Suspender Jack," who nominated Oscar S. Straus for Governor on the Progressive ticket in 1912, announced yesterday that he was a candidate for Sheriff this fall on the same ticket. In his announcement McGee said:

"If elected, I pledge a true economy in public office; to use my influence to do away with the fees of the Sheriff's office, as I believe it to be a burden on the public, and to do all in my power to further the ends of social justice. My name stands for justice, charity and mercy."

It could not be learned if the Progressive organization intends to indorse McGee's candidacy.

CONFER ON L. I. R. R. TRACKS

City's Representatives Think Rent Asked for Use Too High.

There was a conference yesterday between members of the Public Service Commission, the Board of Estimate, and officers of the Long Island Railroad regarding the proposition of the company to rent to the city, in connection with the new rapid transit lines in Queens, its tracks from Whitestone Landing through Flushing to Bayside and Little Neck.

C. L. Addison of the railroad said his company could not take less than $200,000 a year for the tracks, and that the city must bear 7 per cent. of the cost of additional improvements, such as grade crossing elimination, station construction, &c.

The general feeling of the city's conferees was that the rent was too high, and no agreement had been reached. Another conference will be held soon.

TEST IN MACHINISTS' STRIKE

Garvin Plant Will Try to Reopen Today on Company's Terms.

There is posted at the main entrance to the Garvin Machine Company's plant, 141 Varick Street, a notice that the factory will be opened at noon today, the men to return to work on the company's terms. J. J. Keppler, Vice President of the International Association of Machinists, said yesterday he believed the plant would not be opened, because the machinists, who had been on strike for ten days, would not go back.

"If the Garvin Company wants machinists to work for it, the company must grant our demands," said Keppler. "The men will not go back to work until they get the eight-hour day."

Keppler announced that a conference of executive officers and district delegates of the eighteen locals of the Machinists' nion in the New York district would meet here on Monday night to hear reports of organizers on the agitation for an eight-hour day for all metal trades workers.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 11.—An aggressive campaign of education among machinists for the eight-hour day was urged by J. J. Keppler, Vice President of the International Association of Machinists, at a meeting here tonight. He characterized as phantomy-like the report that the machinists were on the verge of a general strike.

"We can bring about the eight-hour day without a general strike," he said, "by agitation and organization."

The union machinists of Trenton struck a year ago for increased wages, but lost.

DEMAND 8-HOUR DAY.

More Boston Machinists Now Threaten Strike.

BOSTON, Aug. 11.—A committee representing machinists at the B. F. Sturtevant Company's blower works in Hyde Park to day presented demands for an eight-hour day and a wage increase. Unless the demands are granted a strike is predicted.

The Sturtevant Company is controlled by ex-Governor Eugene N. Foss, who is also President of the Becker Milling Machine Company, where a strike has been in progress for two weeks.

MILLS'S $2,000,000 GIFTS PAY NO TAXES

Presents to Mrs. Reid and Ogden Mills Not Made with Death in View, Court Holds.

LONG A CHRISTMAS CUSTOM

State's Claim for $20,000 Under Transfer Law Disallowed by Surrogate Cohalan.

The Christmas presents of $1,000,000 each made by Darius Ogden Mills in 1909 to his two children, Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and Ogden Mills of this city, were not made in contemplation of his death; which occurred Jan. 3, 1910, and the gifts are not therefore subject to taxation by the State of New York, according to a decision handed down by Surrogate Cohalan yesterday.

State Controller Travis had appealed to the Surrogate from the finding of former Transfer Tax Appraiser Nagle, who decided that the gifts were not subject to any tax, the amount assessed being $20,000 under the Transfer Tax law.

In a letter sent from California to his son, Ogden Mills, at New York, dated Dec. 14, 1909, the decedent stated his intention to give to his said son, Ogden Mills, and his daughter, Elizabeth M. Reid, each the sum of $1,000,000 as Christmas gifts, and that these gifts should take the form of the transfer of Atchison stock in each case to the extent of 8,000 shares, and that the difference between the value of said stock and the aggregate amount of said gifts, to wit, $2,000,000, be made up in cash.

The son did not receive this letter on its arrival in New York, because he had started for California to see his father. It was, however, opened by George W. Graff, who was the decedent's bookkeeper, as shown by a letter from him to the decedent under date of Dec. 20, 1909. Graff, in a letter to Ogden Mills, dated Dec. 20, 1909, stated the receipt of the father's letter of Dec. 14, 1909, to Mills, a summary of it so far as the proposed transfer of stock and the cash for the difference was concerned, and also stated that he had informed the father that he would credit the accounts of Mrs. Reid and Ogden Mills with the amount of the gift in each case, and also that there would be sufficient money on hand to make up the difference by the 1st of January, 1910.

In a letter from California from the decedent to Graff, dated Dec. 24, 1909, the latter is directed, among other things, as follows: "Credit Ogden Mills and Mrs. Elizabeth M. Reid each with $1,000,000. Charge my account with that practically same as last year."

The record shows also that Mr. Mills had made it a custom to make $1,000,000 presents to his children each Christmas time. The opinion then continues:

The relationship between the decedent and his son, Ogden Mills, appears to have been very close and intimate. Ogden Mills held from his father two powers of attorney. These powers were very full, and gave to Ogden Mills the authority to act in almost every conceivable way and emergency in his father's affairs. It is testified further that the stock in question was in a safe deposit vault, which vault stood in the name of Ogden Mills, and that the decedent had no right of access thereto.

The decedent had, for a long time prior to his death, at which time he was at the advanced age of 84 years been in a condition of health that a person of his age might be expected to be. There is no evidence, however, that these gifts were made in contemplation of death or to take effect at or after death, and I now so find.

The Surrogate then presents the contentions of both sides, and also this conclusion:

The appellant (the State Controller) argues that a real delivery in compliance with the statute means actual manual transfer of the gifts and an indorsement of the stock in question, and the turning over of the money needed, $16,000, to make up the whole amount.

The respondents, (the heirs,) however, take the position that there was a theoretical delivery and transfer, and that in this case an actual delivery by indorsement is not absolutely necessary owing to the peculiar circumstances surrounding the transaction.

The Surrogate then says that the bookkeeper, Graff, followed out the decedent's wishes, as evidenced by the letters and by a telegram, showing that the bookkeeper was the fully authorized agent of the elder Mills and that the younger Mills knew of the acts of the bookkeeper. The decision then reads:

"So far as the gift to Mrs. Reid is concerned, it is shown that she had full knowledge of what was transpiring in connection with her father's wishes, and, as I think the gifts were valid inter vivos, her brother may be considered as acting as her trustee."

$800,000 TO MRS. McMURTRY.

The will of George G. McMurtry, who was chairman of the Board of Directors of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company when he died at Atlantic City, N. J., on Aug. 5, was filed yesterday. No estimate of the valuation of the estate is given, but an indication is found in a provision for a trust fund of $800,000, left for the life benefit of the widow, Mrs. Clara L. McMurtry, and an annuity for life of $2,400 to a brother, Alexander C. McMurtry. These are to be taken out of half the residuary estate. There are cash bequests aggregating $101,000, including $10,000 to H. W. Pratt, secretary to the decedent, and $1,000 to Isabella Freideveaux, the testator's stenographer.

The widow receives all her husband's books, paintings, pictures, statuary, silver, jewelry, automobiles, and other personal property and effects "in and about" the home at 812 Fifth Avenue and $20,000 in cash as well as one-eighth of the entire residuary estate.

The residuary bulk of the estate that includes the trust funds is to be divided into three equal parts at the death of the widow and brother of the testator, and the income from each part is to go in equal amounts to the sons, George G., Jr., Alden L., and Edward P., during their lives, with the power of disposal to each at his death.

The remaining half of the residue is to be divided immediately into four equal parts, one of which is to be turned over to the widow. The income from two other parts is to go to the sons—George G., Jr., and Edward P.—until they respectively reach the age of 40 years, when the shares become outright bequests to them. The remaining part is to be divided into two equal shares, the income from one share to go for life to the third son Alden L., and the income from the last share to go for life to Miriam McMurtry, his wife. At the death of these latter two beneficiaries their interest goes in equal shares to their children.

Other cash bequests are: $10,000 each to the sons, George G., Jr., and Edward P.; $5,000 each to Alden L. and his wife; $15,000 to Helen Lothrop, a relative of the testator, and $5,000 each to two nieces, Edith McM. Bates and Wilhelmina McM. Olson, and three nephews, E. J., John G. and James McMurtry.

The will, filed by representatives of the Union Trust Safe Deposit Company, was dated May 23, 1913. The executors are Frederick S. Wheeler of Peekskill, N. Y.; Veryl Preston of Hohokus, N. J., and George G. McMurtry, Jr.

LORD & TAYLOR GET $114,000.

Claim Against Edward Hatch, Jr., Paid by His Father's Estate.

The legal entanglement between the firm of Lord & Taylor and Edward Hatch, Jr., since the death of the latter's father, Edward P. Hatch, who was President of the concern when he died on Sept. 20, 1909, has been adjusted, according tot papers filed in the Surrogates' Court yesterday, by the payment to the firm of $114,678 out of the estate.

The firm claimed $112,000 with interest on the "agents" and the "pollution" accounts on the books of the concern, asserting that these funds were used by the son while Chairman of the Merchants' Association Pollution and Sewerage Committee in a campaign to keep the waters and sewers in and around New York free from mosquitoes. The heirs maintained that this account ought not to be charged against the younger Hatch, as that was not the intention of the decedent.

Later a liability fund of $97,226 was required by a Surrogate's order to the executors, Edward M. Titus, Wilson Hatch Tucker, and Samuel M. Ordway, to be set aside until the litigation was cleared up. Surrogate Cohalan yesterday signed an order directing the executors to release this fund to Miss Cornelia C. Hatch, daughter of the testator.

Papers filed with the Surrogate by Henry G. Gray, attorney for Miss Hatch, show that the heirs agreed with her to pay pro rata shares to the amount of the fund released and that Miss Hatch paid also the difference between the fund and the settlement sum of $114,678. Miss Hatch had signed an agreement to indemnify the executors. She received more than $500,000 under the will of her father, who left $2,000,000. Her brother, Edward, received $398,000.

CUTS OFF WIDOW AND SON.

S. B. Shepherd Leaves All His Property to His Youngest Child.

In his will disposing of more than $20,000 in personal and real property, Scott B. Shepherd, who died at Cauldwell, N. J., on July 27, makes no provision for his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth L. Shepherd, nor his son, Walter S. Shepherd, but bequeaths the entire property to his son, Scott B. Shepherd, Jr. The latter is under 14 years, the petition accompanying the will recites, and lives with his mother at Cauldwell. The will reads in part:

"I make no provision in this will for my wife or for my son, Walter Scott Shepherd, or his children, for reasons which I deem good and sufficient."

It is further provided that if the sole beneficiary dies without children, the estate is to be divided equally between the testator's brother, Frank A. Shepherd, and his sister, Mrs. Louise A. Irving of 322 West Twenty-second Street, this city.

The Bankers Trust Company is to hold the entire estate in trust and pay the income to the boy until he reaches 30, at which age the principal is to be paid over to him.

TELEPHONE NEW POLICE AID

All Points Within 100 Miles to Know Instantly of Criminals Wanted.

Police Commissioner Arthur Woods announced yesterday that the New York Telephone Company will co-operate with the Police Department in capturing criminals. The territory within 100 miles of New York has been divided into seven zones, and as soon as headquarters notifiers the telephone company, descriptions of men wanted will be sent to all the zones.

"Just as soon as a chauffeur, after running over a pedestrian, or any other criminal escapes," the Commissioner said yesterday, "word will be flashed to the telephone company, and within a few minutes all Chiefs of Police, Sheriffs, constables, and railroad station men will be on the lookout.

"If that system had been in use when Edward C. Kindred ran away with $22,000 a week ago, his description would have gone to all points within a hundred miles, and the police would have been on the watch for him.

"Joseph Heinel, who murdered Mrs. Julia Heilner last April, would not have escaped. He was seen as he left the house with the packages he carried to Philadelphia, and some station agent would have identified him. His description was in the hands of the police of all five boroughs within two hours after the murder, but that was too late and he managed to reach Philadelphia."

CITIZENS' UNION PROTESTS.

Tells Convention Home Rule Proposal Is Unworthy the Name.

There will be delivered to every delegate in the Constitutional Convention today, before the debate on the Cities Committee's home rule proposal begins, a brief in opposition to that proposal, prepared by the Constitutional Convention Committee of the Citizens' Union. This brief criticises the proposed amendment and says that it furnishes no real curb on special city legislation; that the grant to cities of power over their local affairs is wholly inadequate; that the grant of power to cities to initiate legislation is valueless; that the method proposed of obtaining a charter is cumbersome and the privilege illusory.

The union says the proposed amendment is unworthy of the name of a Home Rule measure. An analysis of the proposal before the convention accompanies the brief, which was filed with Schieffelin, Chairman of the Citizens' Union, sent a copy to Elihu Root, President of the Constitutional Convention, with a personal letter.

WESTERN RAILROADS GET SMALL INCREASE

COAL LINES GAIN THE MOST

Approximate Advance $1,632,387 on Total Freight Revenues of $641,000,000—Two Members Dissent.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—The Interstate Commerce Commission today handed down its decision on the applications for increases in freight rates on railroads in Western classification territory. The decision affects forty-one carriers and covers the transportation business of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Colorado, Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico. Indiana, Kentucky and Alabama are also involved so far as coal traffic is concerned.

The increases as proposed, according to a rough estimate prepared by the commission's experts, would have been as follows:

Grain and grain products	$2,940,237
Live stock	1,500,000
Packing house products and fresh meats	1,500,000
Hay and straw	175,000
Broom corn	31,623
Coal	1,226,122
Fruits and vegetables	134,205
Rice	42,000
Import rates	55,000
Total	$7,604,247

Coal	$1,226,122
Fruits and vegetables	134,205
Rice	42,000
Import rates	55,000
Total	$1,632,387

Sought 2 Per Cent. Advance.

The total freight revenues of the forty-one roads in 1914 were $641,000,000 and the increases asked, according to the commission, would have been practically two per cent. of present earnings. The syllabus of the decision giving the items in the decision is as follows:

1. The proposed increased carload rates on grain and grain products, considered as one commodity are not justified.

2. The proposed increase from 30,000 pounds to 40,000 pounds in the minimum carload weight of grain products is justified.

3. The proposed increased carload rates on live stock are not justified.

4. The proposed increased carload rates on packing house products and fresh meats, except as indicated between points on the Missouri River, are not justified.

5. The proposed increased carload rates on fertilizer and fertilizer materials are not justified.

6. The proposed increased rates on bituminous coal, except as to South Dakota points, are justified. The rates on coke here proposed, which are the same as on coal, are justified.

7. The proposed increased carload rates on brewers' rice and less than carload rates on domestic rice are justified.

8. The proposed increased carload rates on broom corn are not justified.

9. The proposed increased import rates and proposed increases in carload minima from Gulf ports are justified.

10. The proposed increased carload rates on fruits and vegetables are justified.

11. The proposed increased carload rates on hay and straw, where not in excess of Class C, are justified.

12. The proposed increased any-quantity-rates on cotton piece goods, and proposed increased carload rates from points in Texas, are not justified.

Finding Value of Roads.

At the outset of its decision, the commission said:

"Inasmuch as the work of railroad valuation by the commission has not as yet sufficiently advanced to afford definite knowledge of the true value of the railroad properties involved in this proceeding, we are confronted at the outset with the problem of finding an appropriate method, if such there be, which might aid in determining the reasonableness and propriety of the proposed increased rates. It is hardly necessary to say that the duty of determining the justice and reasonableness of rates devolved by law upon the commission prior to the authorization by Congress of the work of valuation, and that the commission has been obliged to determine this issue without having available for its use, authoritative valuations of the carriers' property.

"In approaching the problem, we shall first study variations in the operating ratio for recent years. We shall next analyze the investments of carriers since 1907, and the concomitant variations in the revenue returns. Our accounting rules have been in force since that date, and the statements of additions and betterments to property and the contemporaneous revenue returns are believed to be substantially accurate. We shall thereafter analyze the variations in the carriers' revenues as compared with the book cost of their property, a procedure hitherto employed, but always with acknowledgment of the unverified character of the book cost in 1907 and the infirmity which its inclusion in subsequent figures of book cost entails. Next in order will come an analysis of such evidence as if of record with reference to valuations made by State commissions, by the carriers themselves in some instances and by engineers who have testified in this case. Finally, before undertaking the study of increases as proposed on individual commodities, we shall scrutinize the evidence bearing upon the financial experience of the carriers as regards their returns and their credit."

In studying the operating ratio the commission finds that from the testimony of experts before the commission there was for twenty-six roads an increase in cost steadily from 1910 down to 1914. At the same time it is held that the record shows that, in spite of waste, mismanagement and inflated book estimates of values, the forty-one roads are earning a fair rate on a reasonable valuation of their properties as a general rule. The commission finds that on an average valuation of $30,000 a mile the per cent. of return is 6.7 to 8.4; on a valuation of $40,000 a mile it is from 5 per cent. to 6.3 per cent., and on a valuation of $50,000 a mile it is from 4 per cent. to 5.1 per cent.

After devoting several pages of the decision to an analysis of the valuation of physical properties, the commission, however, says:

"In view of the facts that the roads covered by the valuations which appear in the record are not sufficiently inclusive, and that the details of methods adopted in making the valuation are not of record, we have no sufficient evidence, taking the case as a whole, upon which to make a finding as to the fair value of the property devoted to the public service of transportation by the carriers which are here seeking an increase in rates."

Harlan and Daniels Dissent

Commissioner Daniels presented dissenting views and includes his protest against the methods pursued by the commission in denying the increases sought with the following significant declaration:

"In the matter of rate regulation we have reached a point where one of two courses ought deliberately to be chosen and clearly announced. If, despite increased costs, not offset by increased revenue, increases in rates are to be denied, except where in individual instances gross injustice would be occasioned by their denial, the carriers ought to be apprised of this policy, so that they may set their house in order, if they can, against such a situation. If, on the other hand, we are to acknowledge in general what we are perforce compelled to admit in detail, just and reasonable increased rates should be permitted, not grudgingly, but with such fair measure of allowance as will indicate that the transportation industry is entitled in the interest of the public to earnings sufficient to provide a service commensurate with public needs."

Commissioner Harlan also dissented from the decision of the majority of the commission in refusing the increases asked. He said:

"While the record shows that the revenue earned upon grain is fairly satisfactory, grain and grain products, generally speaking, have long taken a common rate throughout this territory, and considered together as one kind of traffic the record, in my judgment, justifies an increase in rates on substantially the basis proposed by the carriers."

PLEASES CHICAGO PACKERS.

But the Rate Decision Disappoints Railway Chiefs.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—There is wide diversity of opinion in this city today over the Western railroad rate decision handed down by the Interstate Commerce Commission in Washington. Railroad men were disappointed because the increase on the transportation of live-stock was denied, but the Chicago packers were jubilant on this score.

E. H. Frederick, traffic manager of Swift & Co., said: "We are well pleased. It is the natural outcome of the showing made. The commission was satisfied that the railroads didn't need the increases as much as the general public needed a curb on the growing cost of living."

"From the standpoint of the railroads the decision, as a whole, is disappointing," said Slason Thompson of the Bureau of Railway Statistics. "The increases asked were so small there was no chance of increasing prices to the consumer as a result of them. In fact, the packers argued at the hearings that the smallest increase they could make would be one-eighth of a cent, while the freight increase amounted to only one-thirty-third of a cent. The increase was asked as a matter of principle more than revenue, and, taken from this standpoint, it may prove more acceptable to the railroads."

W. A. Gardner, President of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, said: "Judging from the information at hand, increases have been granted on those items in which our company is particularly interested. Our ability to secure future net earnings is dependent upon increased volume of receipts and decreased cost of operating expenses. We shall continue to apply ourselves diligently in both these fields."

J. W. Blabon, Vice President of the Chicago Great Western, thought the denial of an advance in grain rates would be a disappointment to all railroads interested.

"Crops have been very large, the farmers have been prosperous, and there could have been no opposition to the advance," he said. "These people were all willing that we should have it. Since the war everybody who has had anything to do with grain has been prosperous."

E. P. Ripley, President of the Santa Fé, says the decision will do little good. The Santa Fé expected to be benefited to the extent of $400,000 in earnings as result of a favorable decision, while this decision may bring the figure up to $100,000.

"As a whole," Mr. Ripley added, "I believe the decision will be disappointing to Western railroads."

George M. Reynolds, President of the Commercial and Continental National Bank, was pleased to hear of the increase, whatever it might be.

"I believe anything along the line of giving the railroads relief is helpful in a sentimental way," he said.

ASK PASSENGER ADVANCE.

Western Roads to Continue Fight for More Revenue.

Eastern railroad officials were unanimous in asserting that the rate increases granted to the Western roads by the Interstate Commerce Commission were almost too small to make any material change in existing conditions. Taken in the aggregate, the increase amounts to one-quarter of 1 per cent. additional to be divided among forty-one lines.

The increases asked for by the Western roads ranged from 2 to 3½ per cent. and in some instances to as much as 5 per cent.

It is understood that the Western roads will now renew their agitation for increased passenger rates, the tentative schedule of which calls for advances of 8 to 15 per cent.

WOOL MARKET IMPROVES.

Good Buying and Prices Firmer—Cotton Goods Stronger.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Aug. 11.—The American Wool and Cotton Reporter will say tomorrow:

"It was a compartively big week in the Boston wool market, with sales of 6,310,000 pounds. More medium wools were sold than for the previous week. Prices are a shade firmer. That the market is in for a period of high value is the feeling practically throughout the trade. Trading seems to be pretty general on both domestic and foreign wool. There has been some speculation in noils in anticipation of army contracts.

"It is almost entirely a sellers' market for woolen and worsted goods. The tendency is toward blacks and whites. Buyers have been interested in lines showing large values. Some manipulated fancy worsteds have sold very well. These may be among the leading styles. Certain serges have also done very well.

"More interest in war contracts was evident during the week than for some time. The dyestuff situation is becoming of greater interest. The dress goods situation has improved during the week, with bigger orders for immediate delivery of goods. Tweed suiting fabrics are selling very well, and also similar styles for cloaking. Vigoureux mixtures have been among the interesting sections in the men's wear market, and it is believed that much larger orders will be received in the near future. The outlook is growing more favorable every week.

"In the cotton goods market the situation is considered by sellers as relatively strong. Narrow goods have sold rather better and there has been less interest generally in wide goods. Bandage fabrics have been ordered in very large quantities."

WORK FOR 8,000 MEN.

Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Orders Go to Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—With the Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio Railroads preparing to spend $10,000,000 in new equipment and local improvements, work has been provided for approximately 8,000 men, the greater proportion of whom will be employed in and near this city.

Orders for equipment worth $3,500,000 were placed today by the Baltimore and Ohio as follows: 17,000 tons of rails and 1,000 car bodies, to cost $1,000,000, and 2,000 steel hoppers, to cost $2,500,000. This equipment will be made in the South Chicago, Gary and Pittsburgh Steel Mills.

A new roundhouse with thirty-three stalls and coach yards is being built for this road at Fourteenth and Robey Streets, and will be finished by the first of the year.

The Pennsylvania Line is constructing freight houses adjacent to the yards along the river between Twelfth Street and Jackson Boulevard.

FIELDER'S SECRETARY WINS.

Pennsylvania Railroad Loses Suit for $400 for Trips on a Pass.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 11.—A suit brought against L. Edward Herrmann, private secretary to Governor Fielder, by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to recover about $400 for trips Mr. Herrmann took over the railroad on a pass that the company held to be illegal, has been decided in favor of Mr. Herrmann by Judge Carrick of the First District Court, Jersey City.

The company and Mr. Herrmann agreed to allow the case to come to issue before Judge Carrick. The company submitted bills to all State employes who rode on passes, which the company claimed to be worthless. Judge Carrick decided the case at issue involved the constitutionality of a State law and it was therefore not in the province of the district court.

MARINE COMPANY'S EARNINGS INCREASE

International Mercantile Total for First Six Months of 1915 Is $11,000,000.

WAR RATES RAISE PROFITS

Indicated They Will Meet Cost of a Large Amount of Tonnage Now Being Constructed.

The earnings of the International Mercantile Marine Company for the first six months of this year, according to a statement issued yesterday by the reorganization committee, amounted to $11,000,000. This represented an extraordinary increase over the earnings of the company in times of peace.

The high ocean freight rates prevailing as a result of the war, will enable the company, it was indicated in the committee statement, to pay out of earnings for a large amount of new tonnage which is now under construction. These unprecedented earnings, coming so closely on the heels of the appointment of a receiver for the company, were pointed to yesterday as a striking illustration of the change in the fortunes of some companies, brought about by the war.

In the statement made yesterday by Charles E. Haydock, secretary of the reorganization committee, the sources of the International Mercantile Marine Company's earnings were set forth as follows:

First—From the earnings of the American Line, the ships of which line are actually owned and operated by the company.

Second—From the earnings of the White Star Line, the Atlantic Transport Line, Limited; the Dominion Line, (English companies,) the Red Star Line, (a Belgian company,) and the Atlantic Transport Line, (an American company,) all the stock of which lines is owned by the Mercantile Marine Company.

Third—From the earnings of the Leyland Line, all but a few of the common shares of which company and $2,847,095 (at $4.85 per English pound sterling) of the 5 per cent. preferred out of a total of $6,859,608 outstanding, are owned by the Mercantile Marine Company.

Fourth—From dividends paid by the Holland-America Line, one-fourth of the entire capital stock of which company is owned by the White Star and the Atlantic Transport Lines.

Six Years' Net Earnings.

In the statement of earnings set forth in the reorganization plan, the average annual net earnings of the company for the six years, (1909 to 1914,) inclusive, after deducting a depreciation charge at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum and all fixed charges except interest on the 4½ per cent. bonds and 5 per cent. bonds, are stated to have been $2,656,387. While that statement includes all the earnings of the American Line, the Red Star Line, the White Star Line, the Atlantic Transport Lines and the Dominion Line, it includes only the dividends actually received from the Leyland Line and the Holland America Line during that period.

The committee's statement contained this information regarding the last earnings of the company and the earnings under the conditions brought about by the war:

"As the Mercantile Marine Company own all but a few of the common shares of the Leyland Line it might be said, that all of the earnings of that line, less the amount required for 5 per cent. dividends on the preferred stock of said line not owned by the Mercantile Marine Company, should also be included in estimating the future earnings of the properties. Owing to requirements for the payment of accumulated and unpaid dividends on its preferred stock, the creation of a reserve fund, as provided by the company's charter, in respect of its preferred stock and its building requirements, all of such past surplus earnings of the Leyland Line have not been available to the marine company. The abnormally large earnings of the current year, however, have enabled the Leyland Line to pay all the accumulated and unpaid dividends on its preferred stock, and will no doubt enable it to provide the reserve fund required in respect of such preferred stock.

Prospect of Increase.

"Such surplus earnings of the Leyland Line will, therefore, hereafter be available to the new company. On the basis of the last three years' (1912-13-14) earnings of the Leyland Line, the net earnings of the new company will be increased by approximately $1,352,336, which, being added to the above-mentioned average annual earnings of $2,656,387, gives a total average of $4,008,723.

"It might also be added that the steamship Britannic, now practically completed for the White Star Line, but not put into commission on account of present conditions, is nearly all paid for, and that the steamship Belgenland, for the Red Star Line, well over half completed, has been about half paid for, which investments at present yield no return.

"The earnings for the current year are abnormally large, and of course only temporary, and as stated by the committee, were not considered a proper foundation upon which to base the reorganization, either as to fixed charges, or total capitalization, as owing to the risks of war, the English war tax to be borne by the English companies, and other probable extraordinary expenses due to the war, even the ultimate net earnings for the year 1915 are problematical. However, the current earnings did indicate to the committee an amount which made unnecessary the substantial assessment on the stock originally thought to be necessary.

Indicated Surplus Earnings.

"The returns of all the properties, including the Leyland Line, for the first six months of the current year indicate that the surplus earnings for such six months will amount to approximately $11,000,000 after deducting a depreciation charge for such six months on the basis of an estimated annual depreciation charge of $5,500,000, (approximately 5 per cent.) the amount required for dividends on the preferred stock of the Leyland Line not owned, and setting aside a proportionate amount required for the reserve fund in respect of the preferred stock of the Leyland Line.

"As to whether the abnormally large earnings for the last six months will continue, as to the ultimate amount of war risks and other extraordinary expenses due to the war will eventually actually amount to, the security holders are in as good a position to judge as any one else.

"The companies have tonnage under construction and contracted for, which after deducting the amount already paid on account thereof, leaves building obligations of about $15,000,000, which it is expected can be paid for out of accumulating earnings and subscriptions of stockholders under the plan."

ACCUSED OF CHECK FRAUD.

Young Man Held on Complaint of Hotel McAlpin Manager.

Carl T. Crocker, 22 years old, of 529 Madison Avenue, was held in $1,000 bail by Magistrate Krotel in the Yorkville Court yesterday, on a charge of having cashed a worthless check for $35 at the Hotel McAlpin. Robert Dunlop, manager of the hotel, appeared as complainant and Crocker waived examination.

The young man arrived here ten days ago and introduced himself to Mr. Dunlop as a former clerk of the Hotel La Salle in Chicago. According to his story he is a son of Irving T. Crocker, a manufacturer of Evanston, Ill., and Mr. Dunlop told him that he knew Irving T. Crocker. Crocker cashed a check, drawn on the Northern Trust Company of Chicago, which was returned marked "no account."

MANUFACTURERS SEND PROTEST TO LANSING

Illinois Association Asks That Interference With American Trade Be Stopped.

CHICAGO, Aug. 11.—The Illinois Manufacturers' Association today addressed a letter to Secretary of State Lansing asking that conditions growing out of the interference with American trade in non-contraband articles with foreign countries be remedied. The association commends the policy of President Wilson regarding interference with trade with belligerent nations.

It is declared that the communication is the start of a movement that will be joined in by commercial organizations all over the country. The letter follows:

The interference by certain of the belligerent nations in the overseas non-contraband commerce of the United States, in violation of the rules of international law, is seriously disturbing and injuring American business and working hardship against both our manufacturers and their wage earners.

The detention of vessels sailing to and from neutral countries is unnecessarily long, and unless expedited will render impossible business relations with these countries, for the reason that freight rartes are forced to prohibitive figures.

The stand taken by the President in insisting that the law of nations be complied with meets with the concurrence of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association. The President may rely on the hearty support of this association in any step that he may see fit to take to put an end to a situation which is contrary to international law and is disturbing to the rights of neutral trade.

The Illinois Manufacturers' Association is in hearty accord with the position of the President that it is not admissible that any belligerent should assume power at will to modify any doctrine of international law relating to overseas commerce.

The letter was drawn for the association by a committee consisting of Charles Piez, George R. Meyercord, and Colin C. H. Fyffe. It was announced that it represented the views of the manufactrers of the Middle West.

FILE NEW EXPRESS RATES.

Service Board Unlikely to Interfere with Schedules.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 11.—Various express companies have filed with the up-State Public Service Commission their new schedules for State business showing the increases in rates granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission on interstate business. The new tariffs effective on Sept. 1 increase the rates on first-class shipments within the State of less than 100 pounds weight, as follows: 1 to 5 pounds, 5 cents; 6 to 29 pounds, 4 cents; 30 to 49 pounds, 3 cents; 50 to 70 pounds, 2 cents; 71 to 99 pounds, 1 cent.

The increases in the rates on second-class shipments less than 100 pounds in weight will be 75 per cent. of the first-class rate increase. The Public Service Commission in a statement today said:

"The express companies showed an imperative need for increase in revenue when they appeared before the Interstate Commerce Commission and could probably present the same proof before the Public Service Commission should complaint be made against the proposed increases or should the commission determine on an investigation on its own initiative.

"In view of the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission it is not considered likely that the Public Service Commission will hold up the parallel increases in State rates unless a complaint is pressed against them."

CANNED RICE BIRDS "GAME."

The game bird provision of the tariff, which has been giving importers and the Government a good deal of trouble since the law became effective nearly two years ago, came up for a new judicial construction yesterday, when the Board of General Appraisers overruled a protest by the Ohashi Importing Company of San Francisco. Former controversies over the interpretation to be given the paragraph in question have related to game birds dressed in one form or another, but yesterday's protest, for the first time, dealt with the status of canned game birds.

The shippers invoiced the merchandise as "canned roast bird meat," whereas the Collector took a 30 per cent. duty, under Paragraph 227, as "game birds, dressed." Free entry was claimed by the importers under Paragraph 542 as prepared or preserved meat. It was held by the board that the fact that the birds were cooked did not prevent their classification as dressed game birds, and the Collector's action was sustained. The bird which figured in the case is known here as the rice bird. It was imported, in the canned state, from Japan.

SUBWAY CONTRACT LET.

Two-Track Line Under Nostrand Avenue to Cost $1,692,370.70.

The Public Service Commission yesterday awarded the contract for the construction of that portion of the Nostrand Avenue branch of the Eastern Parkway subway in Brooklyn extending southerly under Nostrand Avenue from Church to Flatbush Avenues, to the Dock Contractor Company, the lowest of ten bidders, for $1,692,370.70.

It is a two-track line and will be operated under the dual system agreements by the Interborough Rapid Transit Company as an extension of the existing Brooklyn-Manhattan subway. The contractor will be required to begin work within sixty days and must complete the line sufficiently for operating purposes within twenty-one months and all other work within twenty-five months from the delivery of the contract.

The cost of the work will be defrayed 95 per cent. out of the construction contribution of the Interborough Company toward the cost of the city-owned lines, the other 5 per cent. being paid by the city.

BEG WILSON TO END BRITAIN'S EMBARGO

Importers and Exporters Tell President of the Losses by Allied Acts at Sea.

FORCEFUL ACTION URGED

Suggested That Exports of Food and Munitions Be Stopped to Bring Allies to Terms.

Speaking yesterday at the Hotel Biltmore before 400 merchants interested in imports and exports, Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia strongly condemned Great Britain's attitude in the present war toward neutral commerce and scored British Orders in Council as a flagrant violation of international rights.

The Senator thought that while the Administration was all right, it had not been as potent as he would like in pushing claims upon Great Britain. He intimated strongly that an embargo by this country on foodstuffs and war munitions would bring Great Britain and her allies to a proper observance of international law.

Herman A. Metz and other speakers thought Congress should be summoned to empower President Wilson to declare an embargo.

The meeting adopted a petition to the President calling attention to the fact that on June 26 last a memorandum was filed with Secretary Lansing reciting the serious situation in which importers found themselves as a result of the British embargo and adding:

The situation of the importers is infinitely more serious today because of the lapse of time. The importers placed their orders relying, in good faith, upon the observance of international law, permitting even in the case of blockade the shipment of non-contraband merchandise from neutral ports to neutral ports. The importers have to pay for their merchandise whether they receive it or not; this country has, and in many cases, have already made payment. The refusal to permit the shipment of merchandise of German or Austrian origin to the United States neither benefits nor damages any belligerent, but works an incalculable harm upon citizens of a friendly neutral.

The petition points out that a great majority of orders placed by importers were for Fall and Holiday trade, and unless this merchandise is received very soon serious financial losses will follow. These losses, it was stated, will fall not alone upon the importing interests, but thousands of employes will be thrown out of work, while the indirect damage to jobbing and retail interests, who in turn have ordered this merchandise from importers, is beyond measure. After pointing out to the President the injury being done to both the exporting and importing interests of the country by the existing British embargo, the petition concludes:

We wish to repeat our expression of appreciation of the efforts made by the Administration in this situation, and we now urge you to adopt such energetic measures as will afford prompt relief from the present intolerable conditions.

Senator Smith in his speech said that this country must see that the rights of neutrals were respected, and added:

Being neither pro-German nor pro-Allies, our every word and act should be intensely pro-American. I need not discuss the disregard of neutrality in Belgium by Germany. The most aggressive could not wish our Government to do more to protect those rights than has been done. What concerns us now are our relations with Great Britain and the Allies. No belligerent has the right to interfere upon the ocean with cargoes belonging to citizens of neutral countries, except where the right is given by the established customs of nations under international law.

Mr. Smith then defined contraband, and traced the steps taken by Great Britain in its Orders-in-Council to put an end to neutral trading. He maintained that citizens of neutral countries have the right to buy in Germany and Austria the products of those countries and ship them without obstruction from neutral ports, and continued:

Great Britain does not defend the seizure of goods shipped by citizens of the United States on the ground that they are contraband or conditional contraband. Exports and imports are equally seized by Great Britain. In reality Great Britain is simply making an illegal blockade of the neutral ports of Holland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, and thereby destroying the commerce of citizens of the United States legally entitled to pass through those ports.

Senator Smith gave it as his opinion that England's offer to pay for cargoes diverted to English ports does not relieve at all the enormous injury to the commerce of this country. He also scouted the idea that "we should permit Great Britain to tie this question up in arbitration for months."

Robert F. Rose, formerly foreign trade adviser to the State Department, who resigned last week, announced that he had become head of the American Retention Bureau, with headquarters at Washington, composed of shippers and importers, to carry on a campaign of publicity to influence the Administration and Congress in favor of a determined stand in behalf of the rights of neutrals.

Mr. Rose said that it has been estimated at the State Department that American-bought merchandise held by Great Britain's embargo had a value of $167,000,000.

Several speakers, among them Mr. Metz, charged that Secretary of Commerce Redfield was sending out incorrect reports about the business conditions of the country.

FUR DEALERS ASK RELIEF.

Complain That English Blockade Is Ruining Their Business.

A petition for relief from the English blockade and the addition of furs to the contraband list was adopted and sent to President Wilson yesterday by a joint meeting of the Raw Fur Merchants' Association and the Fur Merchants' Credit Association at 220 Fifth Avenue.

One dealer at the meeting said that the Captain of a steamer carrying furs from this country to Sweden had a few days ago, under orders of the British Government, refused to deliver the cargo after making a port in Sweden.

The associations say that from June, 1913, to April, 1914, there were $14,096,705 worth of furs exported from this country, but that from June, 1914, to April, 1915, the value of fur exports from this country fell to $3,637,062. In the same period the export of furs from this country to Germany fell from $4,326,799 to $232,148. In the same periods imports of furs from all countries fell from $14,221,213 to $9,014,213, and imports from Germany decreased from $4,755,958 to $1,608,465.

"The effect," the petition says, "of this inability to export the usual large amounts of furs has been to glut the American market with American furs. The importer finds himself with a rapidly decreasing stock of foreign furs on hand, so that unless conditions are radically changed within the next few months the business of the importer will be reduced to a minimum."

The associations urge that steps be taken to induce England to remove from the contraband list at least such furs as mink, sable, marten, and ermine, which could not be used practicably for war purposes. The main cause of loss to the trade, however, is cited to be the blockade which cuts off furs bound for Germany, Austria, Holland, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark.

Sir Courtenay Bennett Visits Fair.

Sir Courtenay Walter Bennett, the retired British Consul General at New York, has gone to San Francisco with his family to see the Panama-Pacific Exposition and to say good-bye to the friends he made when he was Consul General at that port. He will return to New York in time to sail for Liverpool on the White Star liner Lapland on Sept. 15. Consul J. J. Broderick is in charge of the British Consulate at 17 State Street. The name of Sir Courtenay's successor has not been announced by the British Foreign Office.

NEW SEAMEN'S RULES OUT.

Many Must Wait for Attorney General's Decision, However.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—Partial regulations for the enforcement of the new seamen's law were issued today by the Bureau of Navigation.

Rules for the enforcement of many provisions of the measure cannot be framed until Attorney General Gregory has passed upon certain clauses in the law referred to him for an opinion.

Regulations sent today to Collectors of Customs, Shipping Commissioners, and other officials cover that section prohibiting "allotments," or the advance payment of a seaman's wages to persons other than dependent relatives of the seamen.

The regulations become effective Nov. 4 as to American ships and March 4, 1916, as to foreign vessels, except in cases where treaty provisions would be violated, when the effective date is postponed until the abrogation of the treaties.

Olive Oil Prices Will Not Drop.

Cables received here from Italy by wholesale handlers of olive oil leave no hope of lower prices this season. All reports agree that the advanced costs of tinplate, solder and packing materials, in addition to the scarcity of labor as a result of the war, combine not only to maintain present prices abroad, but probably to send them higher. This upward tendency is being emphasized here. The demand for olive oil is excellent in this country at the present time, and seems to be getting larger every day.

Cocoa Prices Continue Firm.

While the movement of raw cocoa in this city has been sufficient in the last week to keep prices firm generally at previous levels, it has not been large enough to cause more than a slight advance on any single grade. Domestic business is up to normal for this time of the year, it is said, but the export demand is a bit unsteady. On the whole, however, a fair amount of business has been put through lately with buyers in Europe and Australasia. The shipping situation is still a stumbling block in the way of better trade. Stocks in this market do not show a great deal of change from those of the previous week, and quotations ranged yesterday from 13¼ to 13¾ cents for Haiti cocoa to 19 @ 19½ cents for the best Maracaibo.

Quinine Prices Are Rising.

An advance of three cents an ounce in prices for quinine was the most significant change announced in the drug market in the last week. Weekly Drug Markets will say today that domestic makers of these salts said, in revising their schedule, that they were actuated chiefly by a desire to forestall an export demand that had become very insistent owing to the fact that prices abroad were relatively higher than those on this side. There were no other upward revisions of importance announced by the manufacturers, but higher prices were quoted for numerous coal tar products to be had only in a small way from second hands, such as acetphenetidin, antipyrine and saccharin. Thymol has declined sharply. Cod liver oil holds firm, with little business doing but interest in the market keen.

Issues Farm Products Directory.

In an endeavor to bring farmers, dealers and commission merchants in closer relation with each other, the Lehigh Valley Railroad has just issued a directory of farm products grown along its lines. This directory, which will be sent to the markets in this city, Philadelphia, Boston and the Far Western cities, as well as to the farmers and merchants themselves, is so arranged that the names of those dealing in a certain product are listed under that head. For example, all the farmers, commission merchants and dealers handling apples are shown under the heading of "Apples," and the same system is used in listing the other products. The railroad management believes that the directory will be the means of increasing the general prosperity of the towns located on its lines by opening up new markets for their products.

Fall Underwear Orders Better.

Reports from the underwear trade tell of a slow, but steady, improvement in the duplicate business that is being placed by the jobbers on Fall goods. While the amount of goods called for in the individual orders is small, there are enough of these orders to make the aggregate volume of business fairly good. Spring business is uneven, but the aggregate is fair on these goods also. The quotations on the cheaper lines of men's goods now seem more settled than they have been, but buyers are still showing little sign of being hungry for lightweight goods. A sustained advance in cotton is needed, it is said, to stimulate this buying. Present export business is fair, a large part of it being done with England on special heavy goods for women. War orders for heavy cotton and woolen underwear apparently exist only in the rumors that are heard in various quarters of the market from time to time.

Wholesale Jewelers Are Pleased.

Quite a little satisfaction is expressed among the local wholesale jewelers in the Maiden Lane district over the report that has been heard there to the effect that several of the leading fashion magazines for women are planning to print articles advising the women of the country what sort of jewelry they should wear and when they should wear it. This is right in line with a trade movement which promises to be one of the chief topics of discussion at the convention of retail jewelers to be held in this city in the near future, which movement was outlined in THE SUNDAY TIMES several weeks ago. The chief object of the movement, as then pointed out, is to educate the women in the proper wearing of both useful and decorative jewelry, with a view to harmonizing the piece or pieces worn with the dress of the wearer and the occasion. An increase in the demand for various kinds of jewelry is expected to result from this education.

Many Millinery Novelties Shown.

The war note is evident in many of the novelties that are being shown for the Fall season by the local millinery trade. Among the novelties in trimmed hats are Italian bersaglieri effects, which are offered with and without chin-straps, but which are plentifully bedecked with feathers. German helmet effects, with chin-straps of velvet, are also shown, as are Father Knickerbocker models, in the decoration of which huge buckles play prominent parts. The Pilgrim note is strongly sounded by other hats, and in addition to these there are models which have China written all over them. These latter ones include both sailors and small, close-fitting shapes. Good business is reported on "tams" for early Fall wear, they being shown in a number of novel solid and two-tone color effects, in which black and white effects figure prominently. Fur bandings, edges, feather fancies and wings, buckles, beads, spangles, worsted embroideries, and pyroxylin ornaments all figure in the new season's trimmings.

Gray Goods Demand Improves.

There was a better demand for gray goods here yesterday than for some time. Quite an active inquiry for printcloths was reported, some of it at prices which certain sellers did not care to consider. Sales of 38½-inch 64-60s were made at 3¾ cents for delivery during the remainder of this month and September, and similar business was done in other quarters, for delivery to the end of the year, at the same price. Sales of 38½-inch 60-48s were made at 3¼ cents for nearby delivery, as were sales of 39-inch 80 squares and 68-72s at 5⅝ and 4⅜ cents, respectively. Business was also reported on these goods, at the same prices, for shipment to Jan. 1, but the reports were only partially confirmed. A fairly good business was reported on sheetings, notably on 36-inch 4.70s at 3⅝ cents. Drill business was uneven from all accounts, but good orders were told of in certain quarters, especially on 36-inch, 4.20s at 4¼ cents and on 37-inch 3.90s at 4⅝ cents. Fancies continued to sell well. Spot prices follow:

39-inch, 68-72s	4⅞c	38½-inch, 60-48s	3⅛c

ALLAN LINE IN COMBINE.

Will Form Part of the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Aug. 11.—The name of the new steamship company organized for the purpose of acquiring the Atlantic and Pacific fleets of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as well as the Allan Line fleet, is the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services, Limited, with head offices in Montreal, under the arrangement.

The Allan Line will not be wiped out, but will be continued under the same name, standing in the same relation to the Ocean Services, Limited, as the White Star Line does to the International Mercantile Marine.

Although there have been some changes in the personnel, the firm of H. & A. Allan will continue to be the traffic agents of the Allan Line as heretofore.

The new steamship company will not begin operations before Oct. 15 or Nov. 1.

May See Concession Contract.

Americans interested in obtaining concessions from the Central or South American Governments for manufacturing, mining or other commercial ventures may obtain an idea of a typical concession contract, which was granted by the Salvadorean Government to a certain firm for the manufacture and refining of vegetable oils from seeds in that republic, by calling at the local office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Custom House. E. C. Porter, agent in charge, said yesterday that a translation into English, giving the full text of the concession, may be inspected by those interested. The concession in question, which is representative of the kind of contracts prevailing in Latin America, grants free entry for machinery, accessories and articles used in manufacture, exemption of the manufactory and its products from fiscal or municipal taxes, and the right to export the factory's products without the payment of duties of any kind.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Gross, Franzblau & Co., auctioneers, have removed from 29 Greene Street to larger quarters at 27 Greene Street, where they will conduct sales of merchandise on Wednesdays and Fridays, as heretofore.

The firm of Higgins & Seltar, which for more than twenty-five years did business in china, glassware, and special decorations at a former location in Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets, near Sixth Avenue, has been reorganized and is to continue business at 9 and 11 East Thirty-seventh Street. It is said that the showrooms will be completely stocked with new goods by early Autumn. There will be practically no change in the management or business policy. The officers of the new company are: President—Arthur S. Higgins; Vice President—William S. Anthes; Treasurer—Elliot Cross, and Secretary—John Neeb.

Reaction—Western Rate Increase Less Than Was Hoped —The London Treasure Shipment.

The reaction on the Stock Exchange yesterday—it did not extend to all parts of the list, for a number of issues showed further net gains—was in the main ascribed to disappointment over the favorable decision in the western freight rate case. More than the Commission allowed had been expected, or at least wanted, and so the decision was regarded as disappointing though it really was favorable inasmuch as it confirmed the impression that the Commission has come to be more disposed than it was for a long time to consider the rate question a two-sided question. Application for increases in the general level of rates no longer lead inevitably to a refusal, as is seemed for a long time that they did. Therein yesterday's decision, considered in connection with the earlier decision granting an advance in eastern freight rates, was a decidedly favorable development. But the market, on announcement of the decision, proceeded to sell stocks and to ascribe its selling to the decision.

As a matter of fact the market was probably not far from the stage at which it would have reacted with or without bad news, for even in aggressive bull markets reactions have to have their day. The excellent crop conditions remained and the western roads have gained something, though by no means as much as they wanted. The fact that prices had been rising and rising rapidly accounted for a condition in the stock market in which even the semblance of bad news was enough to account for some setback. Moreover, many traders had for some days been mistrusting a further rise and had been disposed to sell for a reaction. Selling of this sort gained enough force yesterday to cause some substantial reactions. The war stocks shared in the fall, but only a few of them were conspicuous by reason of the extent of their decline. Trading was only a little short in volume of the dealings of the previous day which overtopped a million shares.

The selling which brought the reaction, counteracted as it was by further upbidding of a fair number of issues, left the list quite irregular. From the low points of the day recovery occurred which reduced a good many net losses to fractions. The heaviest losses among the railroads were in the eastern stocks, notably Reading and Lehigh Valley. They had been bought in anticipation of a satisfactory western rate decision and yesterday they lacked the sentimental effect of a large increase in western rates while the western roads themselves, while getting less than they expected, nevertheless got practical benefit from the decision. As for the larger aspects of the reaction, it seems clear that the market had been giving itself over to very free upbidding of stocks and the general interest is not harmed, but rather helped by setbacks which help to put a check on unrestrained bulling of stocks.

The bankers who received the gold sent here from London prudently refrained from discussing the possibility that the Bank of England will send further lots of gold here in behalf of the British Government to help meet the very large expenditures which are being made here. It is very likely, however, that the gold just received will be supplemented by other shipments. It will have to be if England continues to conduct her purchases here on a cash basis. No definite information was supplied concerning the use to which the American securities which have been sent here by England will be put, but clearly they have been sent here to be used. In one form or another, the proceeds will most probably be applied to the purchase of supplies in this market. Further shipments of our securities to be put to similar use are likely. Both gold and securities as in this case may again be sent, but if the war is to last long, some credit arrangement on a large scale seems the only means by which the rate of exchange can be protected by England, for even this large gold shipment has not prevented a further decline in sterling exchange which yesterday sold at a new low record.

If the securities can be gotten together the chances are that a large credit will be obtained through the pledge here of American securities owned in Europe. The securities which have just arrived are said to have been bought in the London market by the Bank of England acting for the British Government. Plans have been discussed here in tentative fashion looking to an arrangement which in effect would amount to the British Government not buying, but borrowing American securities from English holders. Such a plan might overcome the reluctance on the part of English investors to part with their American securities and, at the same time, would supply the collateral needed for convenient borrowing here.

SALE OF GREENHUT ASSETS ON AUG. 17

To Be Offered at Public Auction, First in Several Parcels and Then in One Lot.

MRS. VOGEL'S PROTEST VAIN

Judge Augustus N. Hand in the United States District Court yesterday confirmed an order of Referee in Bankruptcy Peter B. Olney, directing a sale of the assets of the bankrupt J. B. Greenhut Company, to be held at the concern's main building, Sixth Avenue and Eighteenth Street, on Aug. 17. Judge Hand also denied a motion made by Henry L. Scheuerman of the firm of Hirsch, Scheuerman & Limberg, 160 Broadway, attorneys for Mrs. Blanche E. Vogel, widow of Frank E. Vogel, who holds $253,000 worth of the defunct company's gold mortgage bonds, to set the referee's order aside.

The sale of the company's property is to be made at public auction, and Referee Olney's order provides for the acceptance of conditional bids on the estate in bulk, after it has first been auctioned off in parcels. This, Mr. Scheuerman contended, will tend to stifle competitive bidding and is wholly in the interest of the Greenhuts and against the interests of the independent bondholders in that it will turn over the assets for a totally inadequate consideration and at the same time release the Greenhuts from liabilities in large amounts.

"The terms of the order," Mr. Scheuerman said, "are such that no one will be willing to waste his time to make a bid, knowing in advance that it will be fruitless."

None of the other creditors opposed the confirmation of the referee's order, and Judge Hand decided both motions immediately on the close of the arguments. According to recent appraisals of the Greenhut assets, it is said that after the satisfaction of the first mortgage on the real property, there will be no remaining equity to satisfy the creditors under the gold mortgage bond issue, which is a second mortgage for $6,000,000.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

It was in Allis-Chalmers that trading attention became focused in the final dealings on the Consolidated Stock Exchange. The big rush up in price of that stock was attended by very heavy trading. The market generally was strong at the start, with the railroad stocks promihent in the early trading. Later, the list, as a whole, tended to react, following the publications of the Interstate Commerce Commision's decision as to Western rates.

CANADIAN NORTHERN NOTES.

Sale of $9,500,000 Two-Year 5 Per Cents Under Way.

Arrangements are under way for the sale to William A. Read & Co. of $9,500,000 two-year 5 per cent. notes of the Canadian Northern Railway. It was said that the transaction probably would be completed today.

The notes are to be secured by Canadian Northern Railway general mortgage 4 per cent. bonds, which bonds are guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada. The proceeds will be used in part to take up outstanding notes, but the greater part will be used for construction work on the Canadian Northern. More than 7,000 miles of the railway is under operation and when completed the railway will extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The system will have a total length of 9,876 miles. The Canadian Government owns a large amount of the stock.

ACTIVE PIG IRON MARKET.

Prices Advanced and Steel Corporation Said to be Buying.

With pig iron still advancing in price it is regarded as probable by the technical journals that the consumers are getting under cover because they are scenting still higher prices. Credence is given to the report that the United States Steel Corporation is buying pig-iron in the open market.

The Iron Age, today, will say:

Active buying at advancing prices has centred attention on the pig iron market. Steel-making pig iron has led in tonnage and has advanced $1 a ton in nearly all markets except Chicago. Thus the heavy demand for open-hearth steel which caused so abrupt a rise in billets is now also the dominant factor in pig iron.

Some excitement has been added to the situation by a reported purchase of pig iron at Cleveland by the Steel Corporation, but confirmation of this report is lacking. Naturally, the possibility that the large steel companies would need to go into the market for iron, as at other times of cumulative demand for steel, has been a factor in the week's advance.

Signs have multiplied that after many months of groveling prices a seller's market has returned. While there is no scramble for finished material, some manufacturing consumers who made large contracts at prices $2 to $3 below present levels are finding it difficult to get full deliveries—a condition that has been known to bring on buying to forestall further advances.

The Iron Trade Review will say:

Pig iron activity remains a prominent feature of the present iron and steel situation. Under a demand that has continued to spread in practically all districts, prices have further advanced on the average of 50 cents to $1 a ton. In the East, steel-making iron has scored a clean advance of $1.

There is evidence that pressure is being exerted by dominant interests not to let the situation go ahead too rapidly in order to reduce the possibility of a runaway market. The market is gradually getting away from a uniform level of prices and individual makers are quoting in accordance with their willingness or ability to fill further orders for the near future. Some fancy prices have been offered and paid for prompt accommodation. The Steel Corporation's operations remain at a high pitch, with ingot capacity engaged at 93 to 94 per cent. and blast furnaces at about 87 per cent. Reports persist that the leading interest will be obliged to buy pig iron if it has not already done so.

SUBMARINE BOAT BOARD.

Eleven Directors Named for Concern to Succeed Electric Company.

At an organization meeting yesterday of the new Submarine Boat Corporation, successor to the Electric Boat Company, eleven Directors were selected. The Directorate is made up largely of members of the technical staff of the old company, and includes E. B. Frost, L. Y. Spear, Henry R. Sutphen, Gregory C. Davison, Thomas C. Dawson, H. C. Sheridan, Norman Johnson, George W. Hoyt, Stacy C. Richmond, William H. Remick, and Andrew Fletcher.

No President was elected, but a selection will be made soon. E. B. Frost, L. Y. Spear, Henry R. Sutphen, and Gregory C. Davison were elected Vice Presidents. Stacy C. Richmond was made temporary Treasurer.

It is expected that a circular setting forth the detailed terms of exchange of the stock of the old company for the stock of the new company will be issued in a few days. The basis of exchange, as announced, is ten shares of the new for one of the old. Stockholders will be asked to deposit their stock under a voting trust agreement in order to assure the continuance in office of the present management.

COMMODITIES MARKETS.

WHEAT.

A report by The Price Current yesterday, showing that the quality of the Winter wheat has been seriously damaged, attracted a great deal of attention, and September shorts became nervous and covered freely. This sent the September position to a premium of, at one time, about a cent a bushel over December, and prices throughout the entire market were firm and higher, closing with net gains of ½ to 1⅝c. In the local cash market No. 2 red Winter wheat was quoted at 1.23, cost, insurance and freight, New York spot; No. 2 hard, at 1.30½, cost, insurance, and freight, New York to arrive; No. 1 Nor. Duluth, 1.18½, and No. 1 Nor. Manitoba, 1.11, cost, insurance and freight, Buffalo.

CORN.

The corn market was moderately active and prices were firmer in sympathy with wheat, closing with net gains of ¼ to ⅜c. Country offerings were said to be moderate, but receipts at interior points were larger. In the local cash market No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at 90¼, lake and rail, prompt shipment.

The local cash market was firm, standard being quoted at 68c; No. 2 white, 68½c; No. 3 white, 67¾c; No. 4 white, 67c; fancy clipped white, 68 to 73c; ordinary clipped white, 67 to 70c, all elevator.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The market for cottonseed oil was quiet and about steady during the greater part of the day, but during the afternoon there seemed to be more liberal offerings, which were thought to be against increased pressure of crude oil, and prices late were easy, closing at 1 to 6 points net lower.

COFFEE.

The coffee market was again under the influence of heavy receipts at primary points, and at the outset the market showed a decline of 7 to 10 points, with longs inclined to liquidate. The selling pressure was particularly heavy in September, but during the day price changes were comparatively narrow, and the close was about steady, with prices showing net losses of 7 to 9 points. Total sales for the day were 35,750 bags. The local spot market was very inactive and prices were largely nominal, with Rio 7s quoted at 6¾c.

SUGAR.

Interest in the market for sugar futures was materially increased by rumors that a combination of Cuban and New York interests was buying up large quantities of raw sugar against foreign requirements, but the volume of business was not particularly heavy, and, after opening at 1 to 5 points higher for the active positions, the market sagged a little and closed at 8 points decline to 3 points advance, with total sales of 5,350 tons.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 12,783 packages. Tuesday's sharp advance in high-grade creamery checked buying, and with receipts little liberal in the afternoon and forenoon day morning the market has weakened, with very little buying support at this writing. Out-of-town demand for medium and lower grades was lighter, but not a heavier burdensome supply of these now here, and asking prices without material change. Cheaper butters unchanged. Creamery, extras, (92 scores,) 29@29¼c; higher scoring, 29¼@27¼c; firsts, 24@25½c; seconds, 22½@23½c; thirds, 21½@22c; State dairy, finest, 25½c; good to prime, 23½@25c; common to fair, 20@22c; renovated, extras, 23@23½c; firsts, 22@22½c; lower grades, 19@21c; imitation creamery, firsts, 22@22½c; ladles, current make, firsts, 20½@21c; seconds, 19½c; lower grades, 18@19c; packing stock, June make, fine, 20c; current make, No. 2, 18½c; lower grades, 16@18c.

EGGS.—Receipts yesterday, 15,214 cases. The market is showing a generally firm tone on desirable qualities, but there is still a wide range of values and considerable irregularity. The demand is fair but not especially active. Fine qualities are meeting fairly prompt sale, and there is perhaps a gradual reduction in the accumulations of medium and lower grades. Near-by stock in light supply and fancy new-laid qualities are scarce and show further improvement. Fresh gathered, extras, per dozen, 28½@25c; extra firsts, 24½@23c; firsts, 19½@21c; seconds, 17@19c; thirds and poorer, 12@16½c; dirties, No. 1, 14½@15c; No. 2 and poorer, 10@14c; checks, choice, dry, 13½@14c; fair to good, 12½@13c; cull and inferior, 9@11c. State, Pennsylvania, and near-by hennery whites, fine to fancy, 33@34c; ordinary to good, 27@32c; gathered whites, as to size and quality, 24@32c; firsts, 19½@21c; seconds, 17@19c; thirds and poorer, 12@16½c; State, Pennsylvania, and near-by hennery browns, 26@30c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 18@24c; duck eggs, State and near-by, Indian Runner, 24@25c.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—The tropical storm was apparently central near the extreme east portion of the Island of Santo Domingo, still moving west northwest at 4 P. M. yesterday. During Tuesday night it probably passed very close to the south portion of Porto Rico and the wind at San Juan reached a velocity of sixty miles an hour from the northeast. If the storm maintains its present rate of progression, it should reach Southeastern Cuba about Friday.

The moderate Southwest disturbance of the present week has reached the Lower Ohio Valley, and during the last twenty-four hours there were general showers and numerous thunderstorms in the Ohio Valley, the Southwestern Lake Region, Tennessee, the South Atlantic and East Gulf States.

There were also local showers in Virginia, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, and a few widely scattered showers farther west, where pressure is generally low.

High temperatures still continue west of the Rocky Mountains and moderate temperatures to the eastward.

There will be showers Thursday in the Ohio Valley, the lower lake region, the Middle and South Atlantic and East Gulf States, continuing Friday in the Middle and South Atlantic States. In New England fair weather Thursday will be followed by showers Friday.

Winds for Thursday and Friday along the North Atlantic Coast will be gentle and mostly south; Middle Atlantic Coast, gentle to moderate southeast and south; South Atlantic Coast, moderate southeast and south except east and southeast off the Florida Coast.

FORECASTS—TODAY AND FRIDAY.

New York, Southern New England, New Jersey, and Eastern Pennsylvania—Cloudy Thursday; thunder showers at night or Friday.

Northern New England—Fair Thursday; Friday, showers.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

8 A. M.	72	69	4 P. M.	83	80

8 A. M.	75	72	9 P. M.	72	71
12 M.	78	77	11 P. M.	72	70

This thermometer is 414 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 74; for the corresponding date last year it was 78; average on the corresponding date for the last thirty-three years, 76.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 68; at 8 P. M. it was 72. Maximum temperature, 81 degrees at 3 P. M.; minimum, 66 degrees at 6:40 A. M. Humidity, 78 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 79 per cent. at 8 P. M.

The barometer at 8 A. M. yesterday registered 30.04 inches; at 8 P. M. it stood at 30.03 inches.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD.

$500,000 Building Loan for Big Apartment on West End Avenue and Ninety-ninth Street—Harlem Flats in Trade—Bronx and Long Branch Deal—Another Equitable Lease.

Plans for another large west side apartment house were successfully closed yesterday in the financing of the operation projected a short time ago for the southwest corner of West End Avenue and Ninety-ninth Street. The property, including seven old residences from 789 to 799 West End Avenue and 302 West Ninety-ninth Street, were purchased from various owners by the McMorrow Engineering and Construction Company last May. The largest owner was the John Wilson Estate.

Title to all the parcels passed yesterday to the 789 West End Company which has obtained a building loan for five years of $500,000 from the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, and an additional mortgage of $50,000, has been taken by the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company. The plot has a frontage of 110.10 feet on West End Avenue and 100 feet on the street. A twelve-story apartment will be erected on the site.

Harlem Flats in Trade.

The two five-story flats with stores at 2,574 and 2,576 Eighth Avenue, covering a plot 50 by 100, between 137th and 138th Streets, have been purchased by Frederick Brown from Jessie Helmsley and Ida Tanjes. In exchange the buyer gave five lots on the corner of Miller and Water Avenues, St. George, S. I.

Buyer of Heights Plot.

Ephraim Adler, of the firm of Brody, Adler & Koch, is the purchaser of the plot of ten lots running through from 189th to 190th Street, 125 feet east of St. Nicholas Avenue, reported sold yesterday.

Bronx-Long Branch Trade.

The two-family house at 1,329 Plimpton Avenue, 22.6 by 100, just south of 170th Street, figured in a deal for Long Branch property. The Bronx plot was owned by John H. Herrin and was given in part payment to Henry Joline for the three-story dwelling at 6 Hollywood Avenue, Norwood Park, Long Branch, with a plot 145 by 350. Henry M. Fitch was the broker.

Westchester County.

Angell & Co. have sold at Scarsdale, for the estate of Ann Laight, the residence and half acre plot on Autenreith Road, in the Elmdorf section. It was held at $20,000.

Four plots on Union Avenue, Peekskill-on-Hudson, have been sold by the Nelson Estates through the Robert F. Farley Organization to Lent & Burchette of Peekskill.

Brooklyn.

Emanuel De Mari has purchased from the Alco Building Company 2,030 Sixty-fourth Street, a one-family dwelling.

Commercial Leases.

The fourteenth floor of the new Equitable Building, 120 Broadway, has been leased by the American Can Company for its new offices. The firm will move about Sept. 1 from its present quarters at Tenth Avenue and Fourteenth Street.

Lewis L. Rosenthal, in conjunction with Morris Rose, has leased for a term of eight years the store and basement, 3,772 Broadway, adjoining the southeast corner of 157th Street, for the Grandville Realty Company, to the "Gramma's Sweets."

The Real Estate Management Company have leased for Manse & Fink a store at 4,216 Broadway to A. Dedejian for a term of years.

Private Dwellings Leased.

Slawson & Hobbs have leased the four-story dwelling at 145 West Seventieth Street for Mary A. Frageser to Mrs. W. S. Hunt.

Pease & Elliman have rented for Mrs. Lillian Tims to Wager Swayne the four-story dwelling at 76 East Ninety-first Street.

The Houghton Company has leased for H. Nelson Flanagan the three-story dwelling at 140 West Ninety-second Street to M. A. Forgotston.

$500,000 Apartment for West End Avenue.

Plans are being prepared by G. Ajello for a sixteen story apartment house to be erected on the northwest corner of West End Avenue and 103d Street by Paterno Brothers. The structure, which will occupy a plot 100 by 100.11, is estimated to cost $500,000.

Queens Building Operations.

Nearly $150,000 were involved in real estate transactions in connection with building operations just closed in Queens. The Bauer & Stier Building Corporation has taken title from Sarah M. Streeter to a plot at the northwest corner of Gates and Cypress Avenues, Ridgewood, 100 by 304.

The Ring-Gibson Company, another active building concern in the Ridgewood section, gave mortgages aggregating $37,500 on a plot at the corner of Palmetto and Doubleday Streets, 100 by 220. Both of the companies will erect several three story brick tenements.

The Wilton Building Company gave mortgages aggregating $23,000 on a plot on Cooper Avenue, east of Wilton Avenue, and also on Wilton Avenue.

Realty Notes.

It was rumored that a New York investor has made an offer to purchase the sixteen-story building which the 511 Fifth Avenue Corporation proposes to erect on the Wilson plot, southeast corner of Forty-third Street, transferred to the new owners yesterday.

Plans have been filed in the Bronx for a new three story building for the Bronx Maternity Hospital. It will cover a plot 50 by 100 on the east side of Intervale Avenue, 195 feet north of 165th Street. Its cost is placed at $65,000, by the architect, C. N. Whinston.

AUCTION FOR FRUITS OF NEW YORK STATE

Department of Foods Expects to Cut Out Middlemen and Make Savings in Handling.

TO BENEFIT THE CONSUMER

Public Sale to be Conducted Here by Strong Company, Insuring Honest Deal for Producer.

The New York State Department of Foods and Markets has signed a contract with the Fruit Auction Company of 204-6 Franklin Street providing for the public auction in the city of the fruit products of the state, it was announced yesterday by John J. Dillon, Commissioner of the Department. Daily auctions in the company's salesrooms and at railroad terminals will begin about Sept. 1, and apples, pears, and probably peaches will be offered to local retail dealers at prices fixed entirely by bidding.

By this means the Department of Foods and Markets, which was organized this year, hopes to bring producer and consumer closer together for the benefit of both. The public auctions, it is believed, will enable fruit growers to dispose of their entire crops at fair prices and give consumers the opportunity of buying fruit at prices commensurate with the size of crops.

Under present conditions, it is said, fruit grown in New York often rots on the ground while local consumers pay fancy prices for imported fruit handled with no regard for the economics of distribution by a series of wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers, each of whom is chiefly interested in disposing of any stock he has on hand at a profit to himself. The elimination of unnecessary middlemen will automatically result from the institution of the open markets, it is expected.

The plan of the department is comprehensive, and, according to Commissioner Dillon, has been worked out in every detail. Having signed the contract with the Auction Company, the department is now advertising this fact among the fruit growers so as to insure the delivery in New York of fruit in sufficient quantities to supply the expected market.

Already arrangements for the delivery of apples and pears have been completed, and Mr. Dillon hopes soon to come to an agreement with the peach growers of the State, for the peach crop this year is expected to be the largest for many years past.

For its services in getting the fruit into and out of the auction market, the department will charge the growers 5 per cent. of what they receive for their products, which, it is said, is much less than they have to pay at present for commissions to private salesmen. With the income from this charge the department will defray the costs of the auctioning and advertise the markets among retailers and consumers.

This advertising is one of the big things included in the scheme, for through it the department hopes to dispose of the entire crop of every fruit. For example, the peach crop is unusually large this year. People, therefore, who want to eat fruit cheaply should eat peaches. If every one buys peaches the entire crop will be disposed of to the benefit of the growers, and the consumers will be able to buy peaches at prices fixed by the bidding of retailers in a well supplied market.

Commissioner Dillon yesterday gave twelve reasons why fruit should be sold at public auction, on which, he said, the strength of the department's plans rested.

"When the goods are sold at auction," he said, "there is competition among the buyers for the goods. There is no simultaneous competition among the producers to sell the goods. Prices are always bid upwards. In private sales the buyer beats the seller downwards.

Save Expense in Handling.

"The railroad and other transportation companies furnish, free of cost, ample space for the display and sale of the goods, thus saving the enormous rent charges.

"The railroad and other transportation companies furnish, free of cost or at a nominal cost, all of the labor employed in the loading of the fruit onto wagons or trucks for direct distribution to the retail distributers who buy at the auction.

"When the fruit is sold at auction it is loaded directly on the buyers' wagons or trucks, and the shipper is saved the cost of cartage.

"Fruit sold at auction is sold immediately upon arrival unless held over by the shipper's representative. In this way the goods are not allowed to become stale, discolored or in any way injured before being used.

"When fruit is sold at auction any opportunity for dishonest returns is absolutely eliminated. Thefts of any kind and partiality to favorite buyers are also eliminated.

"The auction sale saves not less than one-third to three-fourths of the cost of salesmen selling at private sales. One auctioneer selling California fruits has disposed of as much as ninety carloads in a single day in New York City. Had these goods been sold at private sale it would have required at least fifty salesmen.

"All foodstuffs sold at auction in Europe and in America are handled by strong companies, well and properly financed, and there is absolutely no danger to shippers of a loss through financial failures or dishonesty. Returns are made promptly.

Protection for Producers.

"For all foodstuffs sold at auction the owner receives a certified copy of the catalogue and sale, showing the price of each article and what other goods sold for on the same day. Official records are kept, and when request is made the shipper is given the name of the buyer in each instance.

"All foodstuffs sold at public auction are correctly quoted in the public press and in price currents. When private sales are made the quotations are made from statements by a multitude of salesmen—a few of them truthful and many of them absolutely untrue and incorrect. Further, when a line of foodstuffs is sold at auction, credits are absolutely controlled by the auction companies and there are practically no losses in bad accounts.

"Auction sales give wide publicity and reliable quotations to the wholesale market. Middlemen have no chance of manipulation or monopoly, and retailers who ask an unreasonable profit are confronted by housewives with the quotations of wholesale prices. This keeps retail prices down to a fair profit and increases consumption.

The fruit auctions will be tried in New York City first, and, if successful, public markets will be opened at other large centres of population in the State. The auction plan may be extended to include farm produce other than fruits.

BELGIAN BARON HAS A ROMANTIC STORY

Shanghaied Across the Holland Line After Being Drugged, He Says.

FOUND $1,000 IN POCKET

Thought His Mother Wanted to Keep Him from Army and Came Here to Work in a Restaurant.

Working as a checker in Bustanoby's restaurant in West Thirty-ninth Street is a Belgian who describes himself as Eugene A., Baron van Holthausen de Horst. His home is in Antwerp, where his father, who died in 1908, was director of the Société Anversoise de Chemins de Fer Vicinaux. The Baron is here in New York, he says, because one night last Spring he was drugged near the Dutch border and woke up the next morning to find himself in Holland, dressed as an Armenian, with the passport of an Armenian subject of the Turkish Sultan and $1,000 in his pocket.

According to the story which he told a TIMES reporter last night he was released from military service on account of poor health and hence took no part in the battles of last year. A brother and a brother-in-law, however, were both killed in the fighting on the Yser in October and November, and his mother was afraid that he, too, would somehow get out of Antwerp to join the army fighting under King Albert, or would become entangled in some plot in Belgium. The Baron thinks that perhaps he was shanghaied by men hired by his mother in order to get him out of danger, particularly as he was the last male of his line.

When he found himself in Holland, in the garb and with the papers of a member of a race with which he was entirely unfamiliar, the Baron first spent some time trying to find out why or by whom he had been shipped across the border. As the frontier is closely guarded on both sides so that none may pass or repass without authorization, it seemed that there must have been some high influence to get him across the line, but whatever it was, he could not discover it.

Then he tried to get back into Belgium. He got to the line and talked to a German officer, who displaye scant courtesy to the poorly dressed Oriental and at all disposed of credit in the Oriental's story that he was a Belgian nobleman. So the Baron thought the matter over, and knowing his mother's opposition to his going to the war he decided to come to America instead.

He crossed in April on the Holland-America liner Rotterdam, sailing this time as a Dutchman, with papers obtained in some way which he does not explain. He wants to enter Yale next Fall, he says, and is working in the meantime to supplement the disappearing remnant of the mysterious $1,000.

Baron van Holthausen de Horst says he was a classmate at St. Ignatius's School, Antwerp, of Jan van Rickstal, Belgian Vice Consul in this city, and that he is a distant relative of Admiral von Spee, the German commander who defeated Sir Christopher Cradock off Coronel on Nov. 1, and was himself defeated and killed by Vice Admiral Sturdee's fleet off the Falklands on Dec. 8. The Baron is insistent, however, that he has no recent connections with Germany of any sort whatever. He is living at 74 West Eighty-fifth Street in a rooming house.

SELDOM SEPTEMBER MORNS

Mrs. Hale's Babies Were Undressed on Beach Only for Few Minutes.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Aug. 11.—Mrs. Beatrice Forbes Robertson Hale, the actress, wife of Swinburn Hale, said at Scituate today, with some feeling, that the truth about the report that her "suffrage twins," Rosemary and Clemency, went bathing naked was simply that twice they were undressed for a few minutes on the beach while their bathing suits were being dried. Outside of that the mother said the twins wore their usual bathing suits, such as they had on today.

The twins are 18 months old only, but, according to reports from Scituate, Mrs. Peter F. Tague, wife of the Congressman, had seen the twins stripped on the beach, and had protested that girl babies should not bathe publicly while nude. Mrs. Tague, who has a girl of 12 and a boy of 14, was quoted as saying:

"I object to the practice, because it endangers the morals of other little boys and girls who bathe with them."

At her home Mrs. Hale said:

"I have no special ideas or notions about how babies should be dressed, and never took any special attitude in the matter. On one of the occasions mentioned my mother was with the babies on the beach, and was taking off their bathing suits for a few moments to dry them, intending to put them on again immediately. Some one came along whom my mother did not know and criticised her for having them undressed.

"Only twice that I know of have the babies had their bathing suits off on the beach, and it was simply to dry the suits as before.

"If there is criticism it seems to me very foolish."

THAW STILL ARGUING.

Wires a Disquisition on Juries to The Times from Omaha.

Harry K. Thaw, who has now reached Omaha on his automobile trip to the Panama Exposition, volunteered this telegram to THE TIMES last night:

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 11.

Now that we are in Omaha, the gateway to the West, I would like to make plain that every New York jury was on our side. Many people during this trip have said that had they been on the jury they would have freed me. Evidently they did not realize that I was acquitted and confined after my acquittal by Judges alone, and that the Judges acted contrary to the intentions of the juries. People may be interested to know the juries in New York did exactly what would have been done by jurymen out here.

Were it not for the jury system a poor man would have little chance in a place like New York. When my first lawyer, Lew Delafield, instead of standing up for a jury trial schemed to hush things up two days after my arrest, I was left in the position of a poor man; so I know. However, while in New York there seems to be one law for the rich and another for the poor, yet not even the District Attorney's office under Jerome attempted to corrupt any jury.

Many people have gained the impression from the frauds practiced after my acquittal that New York juries were subservient to vicious influences. So far as my experience goes, and it goes a long way, New York juries are all right, and I want to do my part toward correcting any mistaken impression which may have been gained by people elsewhere.

SEVENTY MEN QUIT WORK ON NEW SUBMARINES

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 11.—Seventy machinists and helpers employed by the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, which is rushed with orders for submarines for the United States Government, quit work late today because the company refused their demands for an eight-hour day with increased pay. The walk-out was said to be unexpected in labor circles.

The employes of the American and British Company and Standard Manufacturing Company tonight voted to present demands for shorter hours and to strike if their demands were refused. The Burns & Bassick Manufacturing Company tonight granted a fifty-hour week to its employes, but the machinists at a mass meeting rejected the proposal.

President W. H. Johnston of the International Association of Machinists said tonight: "Strikes are like scarlet fever epidemics—contagious—and I fear that unless the manufacturers show a more conciliatory attitude, the situation will get beyond our control."

SCHWAB GETS ANOTHER MILL

Detrick & Harvey of Baltimore Sell to Bethlehem Company.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 11. — Announcement was made here today that the Bethlehem Steel Company had purchased the modern plant of the Detrick & Harvey Machine Company for several hundred thousand dollars.

Immediate possession of the plant will be taken and the manufacture of munitions of war will be begun as soon as possible.

The property will be improved and many additional men will be put to work immediately, filling the millions of dollars' worth of rush war orders now in the hands of Charles M. Schwab. Much of the machinery now set up in the local plant is splendidly equipped for the making of shells, guns, and other metal parts, and very little changes will have to be made, it is said, in order to make the establishment one of the most complete concerns of the kind in the country.

The firm of Detrick & Harvey was founded in 1884 by Alexander Harvey and John S. Detrick.

FIND DIABETES CAUSE; NOW SEEK A REMEDY

Rockefeller Institute Doctors Say Disease Is Due to Failure of the Pancreas.

Two years of research and experiment by two physicians of the Rockefeller Institute, Drs. S. J. Meltzer and I. S. Kleiner, have resulted in the discovery that diabetes is apparently due to a defect in the operation of the pancreas. The discoveries made indicate that pancreatic action, or non-action, is the origin and cause of the development of excessive dextrose, a form of sugar, in the blood.

Doctors Meltzer and Kleiner are to continue their work in the hope of finding a cure. Their deductions have been presented in a paper to the National Academy of Sciences at Washington and are now made public through the official publication of the Academy.

The results attained lead them to hope that by further investigation they may discover some chemical reaction that may supply what defective pancreatic action leaves wanting, if they do not succeed in restoring the functional power of the gland, for it is now believed that only by direct theatment of the pancreas will a true remedy for diabetes be found. The medical treatment as known today provides for elimination of the surplus sugar from the blood circulation, but it is not a cure.

It was found that the normal dog easily disposed of an injection of dextrose. The same experiments made after the removal of the pancreas showed a failure to dispose of the surplus fluid injected. But when the dextrose was injected with an emulsion mixture of pancreas, rubbed to fine particles and strained, the injection was disposed of in a natural way within a short period, leaving nothing to indicate diabetic presence.

The physicians refrain from asserting any value for their discovery beyond what is shown by the results of the experiments. The question is, In what direction will the discovery lead? Will it have a practical value; Dr. Meltzer said yesterday:

"We are not justified in saying that the idea gained in these experiments may be utilized in a practical manner. We hope to understand much more of the origin of diabetes and the relation of the pancreas to the disease and to clear up certain preliminary questions from further work."

Dr. Kleiner, to present the matter to the lay mind in a form free of technical detail, summed up the result of the work of Dr. Meltzer and himself in this way:

"We have shown them, in the first place, that dextrose injected in the normal animal is easily taken care of. Secondly, if dextrose is injected in connection with the pancreatic mixture, chopped fine and strained, it restores to the diabetic animal the functional power to handle it properly, which seems to indicate that the pancreas in health manufactures something to prevent diabetes.

"The experiments would indicate the incorrectness of the theory that diabetes is of a nervous origin. Further work may show some hint of a means for reaching the source of defective pancreatic action, which might open the way to a more effective method of treatment for diabetes."

CITY MAY GAIN $8,000,000.

Riverside Tunnel for Railroad Tracks to Restore Land.

Members of the Committee of Civic Organizations representing fourteen associations who want the railroad tracks removed from the vicinity of Riverside Drive or put in a tunnel, held a conference in Controller Prendergast's office yesterday, with Ira A. Place, vice president of the New York Central Railroad, Deputy Dock Commissioner Harrison and members of the Board of Estimate's Committee on Port and Terminals.

Reginald P. Bolton of the Committee of Civic Organizations suggested putting the tracks in a tunnel from Seventy-second street to Spuyten Duyvil at a cost of approximately $28,000,000 for a four-track road and $35,000,000 for a six-track road. The plans of the Dock Department call for $35,000,000 for a four-track road, while the New York Central officials claim that to make a four-track tunnel would cost approximately $42,000,000.

Mr. Bolton explains that the most important thing was to get rid of the tracks as far north as 153d street, which, he said, could be done for $16,144,400 under the plans of his committee, for $20,328,575 under the Dock Department's plans and for $25,000,000 under the railroad's estimate. For the work from 153d street north to Spuyten Duyvil the cost is estimated at $1,211,400 by the committee, $17,626,525 by the Dock Department and $17,541,870 by the railroad.

Under the Bolton plan it was stated that about eight miles of property, averaging sixty-six feet wide and worth about three dollars a square foot, would be returned to the city. This would aggregate nearly $8,000,000 in value. It was also brought out that under the Dock Department plan, which calls for part tunnel and part covering over the present tracks, much additional park land could be obtained by the city. The civic organizations want the railroad to stand the entire cost of the tunnel. According to Vice President Place, a tunnel for passenger service would be possible, but it would be impracticable for freight service.

The hearing was adjourned, and meantime engineers from the Dock Department, the New York Central and the civic organizations will get together and try to decide just what the cost of the improvement would be.

CONTINUES 10-CENT STORES

Court Allows American Company to Reorganize Its Business.

The American Five and Ten Cent Stores Company, a corporation having stores in this and other cities, by a decree made yesterday by Judge Augustus N. Hand in the Federal District Court, is permitted, on putting up a bond for $30,000, to continue the business and to preserve and marshal the assets estimated to be worth $442,000, for the benefit of the creditors. The corporation, while it says it is solvent, admits it owes creditors more than $200,000 that at the present time it is unable to pay.

The decree, while declaring that nothing in it shall be construed as an appointment of a receiver of its property, enjoins all creditors, stockholders, or other persons from instituting or prosecuting actions against the company and states that the company is permitted to apply to the court for leave to sell such of its assets not usually sold in the ordinary and customary conduct of its business, such as leases, stores, fixtures, merchandise in bulk, claims, &c., at public or private sale, upon notice to the creditors.

The American Five and Ten Cent Stores Company, of which Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, is a Director, was organized Sept. 29, 1911, under the laws of Maine. It has a capital stock of $1,000,000, of which $837,000 has been issued. The offices are at 315 Fifth Avenue.

FIRE FUMES ON SHIP MADE SAILORS DRUNK

Minnehaha Back with Her Decks Warped as a Result of Bomb Explosion.

FLAMES BURNED RUM CASKS

Old Crew Got a Bonus, but New Crew Had to be Shipped for Return Voyage.

Officers of the Atlantic Transport liner Minnehaha, which arrived yesterday from London, said there was no doubt about the fire in No. 3 hold on her last eastward voyage being caused by a bomb which had been placed among the cargo on the upper orlop deck. All on board agreed that the suspense after the wireless message was received on Wednesday morning, July 7, from Secretary Daniels warning them that a bomb had been hidden on a British steamer and timed to explode that day, was worse than the fire itself.

When the bomb exploded at 3:45 o'clock in the afternoon with a dull sound that was heard in the saloon and on the bridge quite distinctly, there was a feeling of relief throughout the ship, the officers said. They realized that the threat told of in Secretary Daniels's warning had been carried out and the Minnehaha was the victim.

When the hatch on the 'tween decks of No. 3 hold had been taken off it was discovered that the deck had been lifted by the force of the explosion and several of the iron stanchions crumpled into fantastic shapes. The flames were kept down in the upper orlop by steam and the hatches on that deck were not removed until the ship arrived at Halifax on Friday morning. The 'tween deck hatches had to be replaced because the air got down into the lower orlop which caused the fire to blaze up and reach several hogsheads of rum.

At frequent intervals Captain Claret went down to the 'tween decks to see what progress the fire was making. After the hatches were removed in Halifax Harbor the fumes of the rum were so powerful that the sailors staggered about like drunken men when they went down in the hold and had to be hoisted up every fifteen minutes to recover in the fresh air.

On the deck of the upper orlop a large mass of molten metal was found which looked as if it might have been shrapnel from a shell, and the officers who examined it in London believed that the bomb had been of an incendiary nature as well as explosive. Nothing definite regarding its ingredients could be obtained.

Purser C. A. Willis of the Minnehaha said that a new crew had been shipped this voyage because the old crew would not sign articles. They had had no time to spend their wages. In recognition of the manner in which the sailors, stewards, and firemen fought the fire and assisted in getting out the burned cargo at Halifax the Atlantic Transport Line gave each man a bonus of half a month's wages on arrival in London.

When the men were told to be at the shipping office on Friday, July 30, to sign on and sail Saturday for New York they declined and sent word that if the Captain would keep the Minnehaha back until Tuesday, Aug. 3, they would all sail with him. To their surprise he refused, and others were shipped in their places.

The damage done to the upper orlop deck has not yet been repaired, as there was not time in London, the officers said, and it does not concern the safety of the ship in any way.

CULEBRA CUT REOPENED.

A Number of Ships Through—New Channel Only Temporary.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PANAMA, Aug. 11.—The channel through the Culebra Cut of the Panama Canal was reopened this afternoon, permitting the passage of a number of large ships, including the Panama-Pacific liner Finland, with 560 passengers on board, which had been delayed here since Saturday.

Because of the delay, the Finland's owners in New York demanded that the vessel be the first allowed to pass through the reopened cut, but the officials replied that the ships must take their turn, and there were several tramp steamers ahead of the Finland. It is the policy of the Panama Canal officials to give preferential treatment to no ship.

The new channel is only a temporary one. Further movements of the banks on both the east and west sides are anticipated by the engineers in charge of the dredging, who say that the cut is likely again to be closed to traffic any day.

ARREST MAN AS A SPY.

Officials Accuse August Orbolph of Espionage at Gulf Points.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Aug. 11.—Federal officials here today arrested a man giving his name as August Orbolph on a warrant charging him with "entering upon property under the control of the United States Government for the purpose of obtaining information concerning national defenses to which he was not entitled."

Orbolph is alleged to have visited and made drawings of military reservations and lighthouses at Flag Island, Port St. Joe, Crooked Island, Moreno Point, Santa Rosa Island, Apalachicola Bay, St. Andrew's Bay, Panama City, Fort Pickens, and Barancas, all along the Gulf Coast of Florida.

HAITI ELECTION TODAY UNDER OUR AUSPICES

Capt. Beach Tells Candidates We Will Control Customs But Seek No Territory.

PORT AU PRINCE, Aug. 11.—The Revolutionary Committee has made public a decree dissolving the Senate and Chamber of Deputies and convening a constituent Assembly. The Senators and Deputies will, however, not heed this decree, but will meet tomorrow to elect a President of the Republic.

At a preliminary meeting today in the Parisiana Theatre, which was attended by many Senators and Deputies, Captain E. L. Beach of the cruiser Washington, administrator of customs at Port au Prince, said that the American forces, which already occupied the national assembly room, would protect the liberty of the election and repress any attempt at disorder.

Captain Beach also stated that to avoid any misunderstanding he would inform the candidates that the United States would ask for effective control of the customs of the country. He added, however, that the United States had no territorial ambition and that everything done and to be done was for the happiness of the Haitian people.

As the Revolutionary Committee have been sending alarming reports to the provinces, the Americans have taken charge of the Haitian telegraph lines.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—General Auguste, at the head of 200 troops, attacked St. Marc last Saturday and was repulsed by a Haitian committee of safety.

Rear Admiral Caperton reported today that General Auguste and four of his followers were killed.

ARRESTED FOR $15,000 PAWNSHOP ROBBERY

Italian Alleged to be One of Three Who Bound and Gagged Stern and Clerks.

Special to The New York Times.

WATERBURY, Conn., Aug. 11.—Antonio de Lallala was arrested here today upon the arrival of Detective Felix de Martine of the New York police. The local police have had him under surveillance ever since he came here several days ago to stay with his brother. He said he would return to New York without awaiting extradition. While neither the local authorities nor de Martine will talk much about the case, it is understood that de Lallala is wanted in connection with the looting of a New York pawnshop several months ago.

The man arrested is suspected of complicity in the holdup of Jeremiah Stern, son of Adolph Stern, proprietor of a pawnshop at Eighty-fifth Street and Third Avenue, and two of his clerks, who were covered with revolvers, then bound and gagged, at 9 o'clock on the morning of Saturday, Jan. 30, after which the thieves got away in an automobile with diamonds valued at $15,000. Loans aggregating $7,500 had been made on the articles taken.

Three men took part in the robbery. The trio entered at intervals of a few minutes, the first and second asking to see articles of jewelry. While Stern and one of the clerks were attending to them the third man entered, and all three drew revolvers and forced Stern and the clerks into a rear room. There they were bound and gagged.

According to the description given of the robbers they were Italians. They took their time in cleaning out the place, while one of their number acted as lookout and guarded the door. Even the cash register was emptied. Adolph Stern is one of the oldest pawnbrokers in the Yorkville district, where he opened his present shop twenty years ago.

At about the time of the Stern robbery there was a series of pawnshop robberies, including the College Loan, in Eighth Avenue, near 114th Street, and Levine's place, at 3 West 116th Street.

CRAZED MAN FIGHTS FERRYBOAT CROWD

WOMEN ON VERGE OF PANIC

Policemen Leap from West 130th St. Pier to Craft Entering Slip and Arrest Disturber.

As the ferryboat Edgewater, from Fort Lee, N. J., with 1,000 passengers, was entering her slip at West 130th Street at 7 o'clock last evening a man, believed to have been crazed, swung a lather's small hatchet through the air and struck Stephen Mahoney of 158 East Forty-fifth Street from the rear across the right side of his face as he was leaning over the starboard rail on the main deck near the bow. A part of Mahoney's ear was cut off and he fell to the deck stunned.

John Mahoney, a brother of the injured man, and Michael Fleming of 1,083 Park Avenue, a friend, turned upon the assailant, but he backed against the rail and swung the hatchet so viciously that they dared not approach him. Other men in the crowd rushed at the man, but he drove them back with swings of his weapon, meanwhile screaming at the top of his voice.

Many of the passengers were women and children, and their excitement verged on a state of panic. As soon as he saw the trouble on the lower deck, the Captain sounded the whistle and Police Sergeant James Hamil and Policeman Ford of the West 125th Street Station, who were in the ferry house, rushed to the end of the pier and jumped aboard the ferry when she was still several feet from the landing. Sergeant Hamil knocked the hatchet from the man's hand with a night stick and overpowered him.

At the West 125th Street Station, the man said he was Luke Malloney, but he refused to give his address. He said that Mahoney had caused him to lose several jobs, and added that he had recognized Mahoney by his cap. Dr. Frascola of Bellevue Hospital, decided the man was suffering from paranoia, and removed him to the hospital. Dr. Padula of Knickerbocker Hospital, attended Mahoney's injuries. Mahoney said he never had seen his assailant before.

SHOTS FLY IN FIGHT IN JAIL.

Guard Routs Foes in Dark and His Watch Stops a Bullet.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Aug. 11.—Victor Brown, one of the night guards of the Morris County Jail, started downstairs into the cellar of the jail before daybreak this morning, when a noise attracted him. He drew his revolver because threats had been received recently by the Nassau authorities that some of them would suffer unless several prisoners charged with bomb placing were released. Warden and county detectives had received warnings in the last few days that an attempt would be made to force the jail from the outside and free the prisoners.

As Brown started to walk down the stairs into the cellar, which was pitch dark, several shots were fired. The flames spurting from the revolvers showed him that more than one man was firing. Brown shot back in the direction of the flashes and more shots were fired at him. One caused him to stagger, but he continued to shoot until the fire of his assailants had ceased.

Sheriff William H. Thompson and Theodore Greiser, a passerby, ran into the building. Brown then was groping about the basement to find out if any of the intruders had fallen. A flashlight was obtained and a search of the basement showed that the persons attempting a jail delivery had escaped by a rear door.

Brown, who thought that a bullet had struck him and glanced from a rib, took off his clothes and found a black-and-blue mark under his heart, but no bullet wound. Then he looked into his vest pocket and discovered that the bullet had smashed his watch.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Secretary Lansing will make no response to the letter sent to him yesterday by Agent Arredondo of the Carranza Government in behalf of Carranza, in which the United States was practically warned that the Carranzistas would not tolerate any interference in their affairs by any American nation. That was stated authoritatively in the office of Secretary Lansing today. The attitude of this Government toward the Carranza communication will be indicated, however, by its action in forwarding to the defiant "First Chief" the appeal of the United States, Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala, that the Mexican factions compose their differences and set up an orderly Government in Mexico City.

It was made apparent today that President Wilson and Secretary Lansing intend to go ahead with their Mexican program in spite of the implied threats of Carranza to cause trouble. The appeal was perfected and signed in New York yesterday by the Secretary of State and the diplomatic representatives of the six Latin-American countries who were called into conference on the Mexican situation. Secretary Lansing discussed the appeal with President Wilson today and preparations are being made at the State Department to forward it to Carranza, Villa, Zapata, and the Governors of the several Mexican States. It was said at the department that the failure to forward the appeal was due partly to difficulty in getting the addresses of all the Mexican factionists to whom the appeal is to be sent.

Yesterday's conference in New York, and developments today, seem to make clear that if the United States finds it necessary to undertake any more positive action than is contemplated in the appeal to the Mexican factions, it will do so. Furthermore, it was said officially that the appeal to be forwarded to the Mexican factionists, while it will be signed by the American Secretary of State and the diplomatic representatives of the six Latin-American Governments, will not be a joint note in a technical sense. The draft of the appeal, it was explained, had been signed severally and the distinction between "jointly" and "severally" was pointed out as consisting of the fact that "severally" meant that each signatory nation was not obliged to adhere to any action that might be determined on by a majority of the conferees. In other words, each signatory is bound individually only and not required to join with the others in any future course. The appeal was signed in the understanding that it was to be regarded as if it comprised seven notes to the Mexican factions, each signed by one of the participants, thus leaving every Government free to take its own course without feeling bound by what the others desired to do, in the event of a rejection of the appeal.

Surprise at Argentine Answer.

Some surprise was occasioned in official circles here today over statements made in a communication from the Argentine Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Carranza Government. The Argentine official stated that the Pan-American conferences held in Washington and New York were "based from their incipiency on the understanding that any act or design which might mean an interference in the internal affairs of Mexico should be eliminated beforehand, and, above all, any purpose of armed intervention."

At the outset of the conferences it was made clear by Secretary Lansing that there was no intention on the part of this Government to undertake any action that would in any way interfere with the sovereignty of Mexico, including the right of the Mexicans to govern themselves. But Mr. Lansing pointed out that there was now no Government in Mexico, and therefore no sovereignty was being exercised, and the United States Government was of the opinion that other American nations had the right to make efforts to bring together the ungoverning and virtually irresponsible fighting factions in the hope of having them establish a real authority in the republic. It was said today unofficially, however, that while there was no suggestion of armed intervention the understanding among the conferees was not precisely described by the statement of the Argentine Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The complete text of the Argentine answer to the protest addressed by Carranza to the President of that nation was as follows:

General Venustiano Carranza, Vera Cruz:

The President of the Republic has received the telegram you addressed to him on account of the conference held in Washington between the Secretary of State and the representatives of various American countries, calling the attention of the Argentine Government to the dangers which may result from a policy of interference in the internal affairs of that country.

I am directed by the President to reply to you that the Argentine Government in having a representative at that conference, has done so not only in accordance with its traditional policy of respect to other sovereignties, but also to reaffirm it in the face of a problem which by affecting the destinies of Mexico, will equally affect the great American family. The above-mentioned conference has been based from its incipiency on the understanding that any act or design which might mean an interference in the internal affairs of Mexico should be eliminated beforehand, and above all any purpose of armed intervention. Once the opinion of all were united

SAYS ITALIAN CONSULS HAVE LEFT TURKEY

Italy's Interests in Charge of American Officials, Vienna Newspaper Reports.

PARIS, Aug. 12.—A dispatch to the Temps from Geneva says that the Neues Wiener Journal (a newspaper published in the Austrian capital) announces that Italian Consuls have left Turkish territory and that Italian interests have been confided to American officials.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The State Department has no information as to whether Italian Consuls have yet been ordered to leave Turkish territory, turning over their archives to American representatives. Long ago an arrangement was made whereby in case of the spread of the Italian war area, American diplomatic and consular officers should look out for Italian interests. But whether that arrangement will become effective in Turkey in the near future is not known at the State Department.

If Italy's Consuls have departed from the territory of Turkey the fact would seem to indicate that the expected break between the countries, to be followed by war, has occurred or is imminent.

ASKS $2,500,000,000 FOR GERMAN WAR CHEST

Federal Council's New Budget Will Bring Total War Credits Up to $5,000,000,000.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—A Reuter Dispatch from Amsterdam says:

"A Berlin telegram received here states that in a bill voted today by the Federal Council for a supplementary imperial budget for 1915, a new credit of 10,000,000,000 marks, ($2,500,000,000,) was asked for."

BERLIN, Aug. 12, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The installments paid on the second war loan have reached a total of 8,979,600,000 marks, ($2,244,900,000,) or 89.6 per cent. or the amount subscribed, the Overseas News Agency announces.

The sum lent by banks for war loan purposes has decreased 38,800,000 marks, ($9,700,000,) to 315,300,000 marks, ($78,825,000.)

The vote of the German Federal Council for an extraordinary appropriation of $2,500,000,000, will bring the German credits voted for the war, when this vote shall have been passed by the Reichstag, up to a total of $5,000,000,000, as against $5,100,000,000 voted by the French Parliament. The British Government practically worked on a blank check between Nov. 15, 1914, when its appropriations amounted to $1,650,000,000, and May 4, when the Chancellor of the Exchequer asked for a flat war credit of $5,000,000,000, which he said would sustain the country until April 1, 1916.

Nothing is officially known of the war budgets of Austria and Russia. The Budget Committee of the Duma recently placed the extraordinary expenditure of the empire at only $67,000,000 for 1915.

Political economists are one in agreeing that the credits voted by the German, English, and French parliaments, enormous as they are, represent little more than 20 per cent. of the gold that must ultimately be paid for loans, treasury notes, and other promises to pay by which the various Governments are now securing the much needed gold to pay the rapidly accumulating indebtedness abroad.

LONDON EXPECTS NEWS OF A SEA BATTLE

Steamers from Holland Report Sounds of Heavy Firing—Tells of the India's Loss.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—Steamers arriving from Holland report having heard sounds of heavy firing to the north again today, and the British public is prepared to hear news of great importance.

An official communication issued this evening announces that the British auxiliary cruiser India, while engaged in patrol duty in the North Sea on Aug. 8, was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine.

The announcement adds that 22 officers and 119 men of the India were saved.

CHRISTIANIA, Aug. 12.—Captain William Kennedy of the British auxiliary cruiser India, who was on the bridge of his ship when she was torpedoed by a German submarine in the North Sea on Aug. 8, was among the eighty-six members of the crew who were saved. Among the survivors were nine other officers. Some of those rescued were taken from a raft where they stood singing "Tipperary." In the India's two lifeboats were fifty-two other men.

The bodies of eleven sailors who perished were buried today with military honors. When the bodies were brought ashore they were taken to a chapel, where they were placed in caskets, each of which was covered with the Union Jack.

The natives are showing much sympathy for the British sailors who have been taken to private houses, where they are being provided for. No decision has been reached as to whether they will be interned here during the war.

ARREST SOCIALISTS ON TREASON CHARGES

Germans Accused of Publishing Pamphlet Criticising "Loyal" Socialists.

They are charged with having published a pamphlet containing an article from the Berne Tagwacht severely criticising the attitude of the leading Socialists supporting the Government.

COAL RATES CUT $8,000,000 A YEAR

Commerce Commission Reduces Railroads' Tariff on Anthracite 5 to 80 Cents a Ton.

THINKS PROFIT TOO GREAT

Says Some Carriers Are Making 200 Per Cent. on the Traffic at Present.

TO END DISCRIMINATION

Decision Orders That Through Rates Be Granted to Independent Shippers.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The Interstate Commerce Commission today rendered a decision which reduces the rates on anthracite from the producing districts in the Wyoming, Lehigh, and Schuylkill regions of Pennsylvania to tidewater and to certain interior points from 5 to 80 cents per ton. The decision is the result of an investigation made pursuant to an order by the commission of June 10, 1912. It is the finding of the commission that the present rates are unreasonable because they yield too great a profit over the operating cost.

In the case of the coal traffic of the Central Railroad of New Jersey it was found that the weighted average cost per short ton per mile was 3.3 mills, while the average revenue per short ton per mile was 9.45 mills, and on the long ton 10.59 mills. This comparison is held to be typical of the majority of the roads concerned. In most cases the carriers are declared to be making over 200 per cent. on the traffic, and in many cases much more. However, for a number of the smaller roads, less favorably situated, the decision may mean a loss on the traffic. It is estimated by experts that the total reduction in coal road revenues will be fully $8,000,000 a year.

Unable to Get Cost of Roads.

As in former decisions, the commission reiterates its adherence where possible to the principle of employing, as a basis in ratemaking, the valuation of physical properties. None of the roads made respondent in the coal case was able to furnish data as to cost of construction of its property, the present organizations not being in possession of the books of the original corporations.

The question of actual cost and the return of empty cars having been raised, the commission held that its determination of a reasonable rate must be based on the cost of the service, and not by adjustments of average revenue. There being no basis in the evidence for an adjustment according to cost of property or an approximate figure of cost, the commission dismissed from consideration the questions as to cost of properties to the present operating companies.

A number of examples, however, which throw light on this view of the case are discussed in the decision, and the general conclusion is that, owing to manipulation with construction companies, the book cost of the majority of the roads is very greatly exaggerated, in some cases set forth being double the actual value of the working property. A large factor in this phase of the case is discussed under the head of unproductive construction, and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company's investment in its New York Terminal comes in for a large share of attention as bearing on the matter of coal rates in affecting the public in the price of the commodity.

Orders Through Rates for All.

The commission denounces certain practices of the coal-carrying roads and makes a drastic order against further continuance of them. The decision deals with these matters in the following findings, as stated in the syllabus of the decision:

The respondents, by means of trackage arrangements and the free transportation to junction points in the mining regions of coal exchanged by their allied coal companies, have extended the advantages of interline transportation to their coal companies, to the prejudice of other coal shippers to whom interline transportation at joint rates has been denied. Respondents are required to establish through routes and publish joint through rates applicable thereto.

Anthracite coal is a low-grade commodity, which is transported in vast quantities in trains of maximum tonnage. The tonnage loaded in each car is much greater than the loading of most other classes of traffic. Most of the anthracite tonnage is shipped from collieries whose daily production, measured in carloads, is very large. These conditions tend toward lower operating costs.

Concessions and offsets granted by respondents to their allied coal companies in the form of interest charges, royalty earnings, the use of valuable property at inadequate rentals, the free use of the carriers' funds and credit, or by other means, are as pernicious as direct cash rebates. Such concessions and offsets are unlawful.

Lateral allowances paid to a coal shipper in accordance with an agreement, alleged to be additional compensation for the use of a facility furnished by the shipper, are unlawful rebates.

The railroads made respondents in the case are the Central Railroad of New Jersey, Philadelphia & Reading, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, Lehigh Valley, Erie, Wilkesbarre & Eastern, New York, Susquehanna & Western, New York, Ontario & Western, the Pennsylvania, the Northern Central, and the Delaware & Hudson.

Attacks Coal Control by Railroads.

The commission takes the opportunity, in the conclusion of its consideration of the case, to express an opinion of the manner in which the railroads have exercised ownership and control of coal properties. It says:

"We cannot overlook the fact that some force has brought the production and sale of most of the tonnage of this commodity under their control. If they established excessive rates on anthracite they became the beneficiaries of conditions which were prejudicial to the business of the individual operator or shipper. The power to fix freight rates on this commodity was the opportunity to confiscate property if the carrier so willed.

"Since 1908 the Delaware and Hudson

WILSON BEGINS WORK ON DEFENSE PLANS

Confers with Daniels on Naval Increase and Will Take Up Army with Garrison.

NOT A PARTISAN POLICY

It Will Feature Administration's Legislative Program, and Republican Support Will Be Sought.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Almost immediately after his return to Washington from Cornish this morning, President Wilson began active work to determine the legislative program to insure the strengthening of the national defense. He had a conference with Secretary Daniels, and it was arranged that Mr. Daniels should submit to the President an outline of a plan of naval increase, concerning which Mr. Daniels has been conferring with the Naval General Board and other experts. The President expects to confer tomorrow with Secretary Garrison concerning the army increase and the establishment of an adequate reserve. Later he will confer with Congressional leaders.

It was said in a semi-authoritative way that the President desired to arrange a program that would meet with the approval of the Military and Naval Committees of Senate and House, the leaders in Congress, and the people generally. The President has written to Chairmen Chamberlain and Tillman of the Senate Committees on Military and Naval Affairs, respectively, and to Chairman Hay and Padgett of the House Committees on Military and Naval Affairs, respectively, saying that he wished to confer with them shortly, and inviting them to submit in writing their views concerning the measures that should be adopted to put the country in a better state of preparedness for defense.

Prior to going to Cornish the President sent notes to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy requesting them to be prepared to submit to him on their return such recommendations to increase the efficiency of the army and the navy. At the conference with the President Monday Secretary Garrison submitted a statement of that kind, but his outline plan will be ready very soon. Secretary Garrison has been conferring with high ranking officers of the army with a view to making a preliminary report to the President, and it is understood that he is ready to submit it to Mr. Wilson.

The purpose of the President, it is explained, is to draft a military and naval program consistent not only with the requirements of the situation, but also with the state of the public finances. Whether he is considering means of augmenting the national revenues in order to provide for greatly increased expenditures for military and naval purposes has not been made known, but it is understood that this subject has been taken under consideration in the Treasury Department.

Increase in the efficiency of the national defenses will be the main item in the Administration's legislative program for the next session of Congress. According to what was said today, the President does not regard this as a partisan subject, and he will endeavor to obtain support for his program from Republicans as well as Democrats.

While Mr. Daniels would not discuss what he had told the President about the needs of the navy, he indicated that the building program would include a striking increase in submarines. He would not confirm reports that he would recommend the building of four battleships.

In connection with his investigations Secretary Garrison has had Major Gen. Goethals prepare a special report on the defenses of the Panama Canal.

The President devoted much time to the study of national defenses while at Cornish, and was in communication frequently with Secretaries Daniels and Garrison.

TO MOBILIZE STATE MILITIA.

Demonstration for Governors of Preparedness in Massachusetts.

BOSTON, Aug. 12.—Mobilization of the full strength of the State militia, as a demonstration of preparedness, was proposed today by Governor Walsh and favored by leading business men at a meeting to arrange a program of entertainment for the national conference of the Governors, to be held here Aug. 24 to 27.

Advocates of the plan said that while a gathering of 6,500 men of the militia, the first full mobilization in six years, would be expensive, the experiment in preparedness would be well worth the cost.

ARMY HOLDS ARMS EXPERT.

Major Hawkins Must Stay in the Service Until Nov. 1.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Secretary Garrison today declined to accept before Nov. 1 the resignation of Major Wilford J. Hawkins, an ordnance officer stationed at the Sandy Hook Proving Grounds, who desired to leave the army immediately to enter private employment.

Brigadier General Crosier, Chief of Ordnance, recommended that the resignation be delayed until another officer could be prepared to take Major Hawkins's place.

RUSSIAN SUCCESS RUMORED

LONDON, Friday, Aug. 13.—Wide circulation was given yesterday afternoon to a rumor that the Government had received news of military successes closely affecting Russia. This rumor was based on the activity and rising prices of Russian securities on the Stock Exchange.

Russian exchange dropped eight points today, to 136.

The financial expert of The Telegraph says, however, the drop in exchange was due to the expectation of gold shipments to England or the United States, which would form the basis of additional foreign credits to pay for munitions.

WORD FROM ALLIES STOPS WHEAT BUYING

Chicago Dealers Suddenly Cancel 2,000,000-Bushel Orders with $200,000 Loss.

PEACE ONE CAUSE HINTED AT

Prospect of Dardanelles Opening and Release of Russian Grain Another Rumor.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—The Chicago wheat pit, the pulse of the world's grain trade, closed today in a state of feverish excitement following the cancellation of contracts aggregating more than 2,000,000 bushels of wheat by persons who had expected to ship it to the Allies. This wheat was bought recently for September shipment.

What word these buyers received from abroad is not known. It was of sufficient import, however, to cause the foreign buyers to sacrifice a profit of around 10 cents a bushel, or more than $200,000 on the contracts canceled, so that they might be relieved of them.

Not only were cancellations reported by Chicago houses, but some of the seaboard exporters claimed to have closed out all open contracts, in one instance the United Kingdom buyer reselling at equal to twenty-eight cents under what the same wheat would cost delivered in Liverpool. Canadian exporters also reported cancellations, and three cargoes of Argentine corn were canceled by Italy. France also resold wheat in this country.

Whether the Dardanelles was on the verge of being forced, which would release Russian grains for European consumption, or whether there had been authoritative information that the opening of the straits was only a matter of a short time, was a question much discussed by prominent grain men.

They professed to be mystified, although intensely interested in an Associated Press cablegram early in the day from London telling of wide circulation there of a rumor that the Government had received news of "Military successes closely affecting Russia." The report, it was said, was based on the activity at rising prices of Russian securities on the stock exchange.

Italy Sanctions Repudiation.

On top of today's cancellation of contracts it became known to the grain trade that the Italian Government has issued a decree allowing buyers of grain at high prices to repudiate their contracts, and a seller of American grain to Italy at a high price, in event the contract was repudiated, would have no standing in an Italian court.

Today's happenings left grain men wondering if all outstanding grain contracts with the Allies, variously estimated at between 10,000,000 and 15,000,000 bushels of wheat alone, are to be canceled. All of this grain was purchased for late August and September shipment and shows large profits.

There was a small amount of buying today for immediate shipments. This was credited as being to fill out cargoes now awaiting to load.

While the cancellation of the grain contracts was generally credited to important news from the Dardanelles, a number of other conjectures were offered tonight, any one of which, or all combined, grain men said, might be at the bottom of the mystery. Some of the explanations offered were:

Reports of early peace, the low point of foreign exchange, sterling falling to a new low level today.

The determination of the foreign governments to use up home supplies first to help out home producers before using foreign imports.

A plan on the part of the allied Governments, and particularly Italy, to govern the home market and dictate prices themselves and prevent high prices being paid by consumers.

Maybe it was only the result of one of those strange panicky conditions which sometimes develop without apparent cause in the grain world.

An impression gained some adherents late in the day that an order had probably been issued temporarily preventing importation of grains into the countries of the Allies that will be shipped after September to protect the home growers. In support of this it was argued that at the extreme low level of foreign exchange and with the European countries' credit at low ebb in this country they realize they would soon have to pay for all grain bought here in gold. By buying in India, Australia, and Canada, England could utilize her credit there and save her precious metal to purchase war munitions.

Still a Big Shortage.

The three English colonies are expected to have about 310,000,000 bushels of wheat, which they can sell to the mother country by the first of the year, but the European crop itself is 24,000,000 bushels short this year. Experts say the grain from the colonies will show a large shortage, and Europe would have to come to the United States were the Dardanelles not forced and the Russian grain released.

In support of the theory that the European powers may be planning to take the grain situation firmly in hand and dictate what prices they will pay, the Italian decree is offered as being proof. It was declared by grain men that a scheme might be on foot to refuse to purchase all grains from the United States after the end of this month.

The heavy cancellations of contracts did not become confirmed until practically the close of the day's business on the Exchange, and as a result prices were affected but little. Around noon the tickers carried a "flash" saying there were rumors of large cancellations, but it was denied almost instantaneously by a large exporter, and the traders paid little attention to the report.

George E. Marcy, President of the Armour Grain Company, who canceled a large part of the wheat contracts today, said:

"I am unable to understand what has happened abroad. It must be something important or they would not have

Peace Certain in October German Army Is Told in Order Predicting New Drive in the West

LONDON, Aug. 12.—A significant order of the day, predicting a resumption by the Germans of a vigorous offensive in the west, has been issued to the Teutonic armies in Flanders, according to the Amsterdam Telegraaf.

An extract of this order, telegraphed by the Amsterdam correspondent of The Exchange Telegraph Company, follows:

"Our work now is practically finished in the east and we are about to begin in the west. Peace is certain in October."

Germany Denies Offer to Russia, but Is Ready for Proposals.

BERLIN, Aug. 12.—The report that Germany made peace proposals to Petrograd last week through the King of Denmark is denied by the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, which says:

"The German Government would not reject reasonable peace proposals if such should be laid before it, but the time to make peace proposals on its part will come only when hostile governments show themselves ready to recognize the failure of their military undertakings against us."

GERMAN ATTACK ON KOVNO FAILS

Army Exhausted by Losses Suffered in Trying to Storm the Fortress.

PROGRESS EAST OF WARSAW

LONDON, Friday, Aug. 13.—The Russians continue their retirement in Poland, but all the while they are retarding the German advance, which is now regaining momentum, by repeated counterattacks and stubborn resistance wherever the conditions are favorable.

There is still a considerable distance between the German armies to the southeast and northeast of Warsaw, so that seemingly the Russians will be able to make good their retreat, only, however, to be called upon to oppose a German attempt to outflank them at Kovno and further north.

The strength of the German offensive in the latter region has led to the assumption by some of the military observers here that the Germans are now aiming at Petrograd. It is pointed out, however, that there is a great stretch of marshy country between the present battlefields and the capital, which it is asserted would make the adventure a dangerous one. Besides the Germans would first have to capture Vilna, Dvinsk, and Riga, all of which the Russians are defending with strong forces, which at times are able to take the offensive.

Niemen River a Stumbling Block.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 12, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—The banks of the Niemen form the first stumbling block the Germans have had to encounter. Many thousands of corpses have been left behind, and the enemy still is on the south bank of the river.

Their efforts against Kovno fortress have cost them dearer than any previous attempt at storming made during the eastern campaign. They brought up by rail and motor traction their heaviest artillery. They used the experience gained at Antwerp and elsewhere in the West and tried nastily and boldly to take by main force what would have required prolonged operations. They used an entire army. They spared neither men nor shells in order that they might take Kovno quickly, and they lost a colossal number in trying to prevent the garrison of the fortress from repairing the damage done.

This haste of the Germans at Kovno is due to their failure at Riga and on the Poniowitz-Vilkomir front. In the latter area the enemy will probably be compelled to regroup and obtain reinforcements. Kovno is the chief obstacle to the Germans holding both banks of the Niemen, hence their continued desperate efforts to reduce the Russian fortress which will be the base of the Russian defensive line when the regrouping in the south is finished.

Experts regard the Russian front as favorable. The Zlota Lipa-Dniester line is very secure. The Narew-Bug line varies according to the stubbornness of the offensive conducted by the enemy. The Niemen front is secure, while the Dvina-Niemen front is gradually moving westward.

GERMANS SHIFT 5 CORPS FROM WESTERN FRONT

Seasoned Troops Drafted to Make Good Colossal Losses in Russian Campaign.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 12, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—From Riga right away to Vladimir Wolinsk the hosts of Germans continue their advance. The Russians are everywhere making a sturdy defense and inflicting upon the invaders the maximum of possible losses as they steadily fight in retreat.

The Germans are said to have brought five more army corps from the western front to fill complements on the Russian front, where their losses continue to be colossal. As in previous similar cases of withdrawals from the Western front of seasoned troops, their places are taken by newly formed corps who are considered by the enemy quite capable of maintaining the defense behind their splendid entrenchments, whereas the fighting on the Russian side makes more onerous demands upon the soldiery employed.

When the Russians want to stand they will stand, but it is advisable for the

CARDINALS HERE IN PEACE MOVE?

London Hears Gibbons and O'Connell Have Called Meeting of Churchmen in Switzerland.

BUT DENIAL IS MADE

Rome Report Says, However, That the Pope Is Expecting Proposals from Teutons.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Friday, Aug. 13.—The Morning Post gives prominence to a notice, circulated by a news agency, which is generally well informed on Vatican affairs, to the effect that Cardinals Gibbons and O'Connell of Baltimore and Boston respectively, have called a meeting of neutral Cardinals and Bishops to be held in the course of a few weeks in Switzerland for the purpose of discussing some concrete proposal for arranging terms of peace between the present belligerents.

"It would appear," says The Morning Post story, "that these cardinals had invited the Roman Catholic authorities in neutral countries to such a conference, which though not officially inspired by the Vatican, has undoubtedly received unofficial recognition. For the moment, the Pope in his last messages directed to the peoples and rulers at war has said the last word on the question of peace and any further initiative must come from the outside.

"But the fact that Cardinal Gibbons had a long conference with President Wilson on the question of acting as intermediary, is supposed to have given rise to the initiative of cardinals. It would seem also that this initiative was not unknown to or uninspired from German and Austrian sources."

At the home of Cardinal Farley last night, it was announced on good authority that no notice of the proposed conference of Cardinals in Switzerland had been received by the Cardinal. It was said furthermore that none of the leading officials of the Catholic Church in New York had been informed directly or indirectly of any steps to be taken in behalf of peace, and that if any such move were afloat Cardinal Farley most certainly would know of it.

PEACE DENIAL AT CAPITAL.

No Recent Meeting Between President and Cardinal.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The Washington Administration appears to be without any knowledge tending to confirm the European report that Cardinals Gibbons and O'Connell have called a meeting of neutral Cardinals and Bishops to be held in Switzerland to discuss means of bringing about peace. From a high source in the State Department it was learned that this Government had no information on the subject of the proposed conference, and in another high quarter it was asserted that President Wilson had not been approached or informed with reference to the matter.

The report reaching London mentioned that Cardinal Gibbons had a long conference with President Wilson on the question of acting as intermediary. An official of the Government close to the President who would be in a position to know of any conference between Mr. Wilson and Cardinal Gibbons said that the President had not talked with the Cardinal for a long time. He was unable to say exactly when the President and the Cardinal had met last, but he said that it was at least a year and a half ago.

HOPES RISE AT THE VATICAN.

Pope's Entourage Expect Peace Proposals from Germany.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—A Rome dispatch to The Chicago Daily News says:

"Prospects of peace, which until a fortnight ago were considered remote in well-informed Vatican circles, are now unexpectedly improved. The impression prevails in the Pope's entourage that the olive branch is to be offered by Germany, which, unvanquished and still sufficiently powerful to continue the war, is able to take the initiative in a peace movement without assuming the role of suppliant.

"A member of the Papal household, who wishes his name withheld—though it may be said that it is not Mgr. Gerlach, the only German Papal Chamberlain now at the Vatican—asserts that, according to indirect information available a day or two ago, Germany expects to propose acceptable terms of peace to the Allies.

"These terms, said my informant,

SOFIA BLOCKING THE WAY

Turkey, as Well as Greece and Serbia, Reported Unwilling to Cede Territory to Her.

RUMANIA UNDER PRESSURE

Teutonic Efforts Are Taken as Sign That Turks' Munitions Are Running Low.

LONDON, Friday, Aug. 13.—Public interest in Great Britain is centring at present on the Near East, where the diplomats of the Quadruple Entente powers are endeavoring to revive the Balkan league and bring all the Balkan States over to their side and to the armies of the Allies which are battling against the Turks on the Gallipoli Peninsula and in the Caucasus.

The diplomats of all the belligerents for the moment are concentrating their attention on Sofia, for Bulgaria holds the key to the situation. It is said she is being smiled upon and that territorial concessions are being offered as an inducement for her to join one side or the other or to remain neutral. Both the German and entente Ministers are declared to be finding their endeavors hindered by their friends. Greece and Serbia are unwilling to concede to Bulgaria the parts of Macedonia which are her price for joining the Allies, while Turkey is opposing concessions which Austria and Germany desire her to make to insure the continued neutrality of the Sofia Government.

Bulgaria, too, it is asserted, is weighing the victory the Austro-Germans have gained in Poland against the renewed efforts of the Allies in the Dardanelles and the reported signal victory which the Russians are said to have won over the Turks in the Caucasus and which the military experts here believe will keep the Turks quiet on that frontier for some time.

Teutons Are Pressing Rumania.

"German diplomats have redoubled their efforts to secure Rumania's consent to a renewal of shipments of munitions of war to Turkey," says The Daily Telegraph's Bucharest correspondent.

"This," the correspondent adds, "indicates that Turkey's need of supplies is becoming acute."

Another Bucharest dispatch says that according to the local newspapers, Austria and Germany have decided to endeavor to force Rumania to consent to the transit through Rumanian territory of munitions of war, by prohibiting the importation of Rumanian maize unless Rumania yields within a few days.

In this way, the Bucharest newspapers assert, the Germans hope to provoke a forceful protest from the influential agrarian and commercial interests, which would be hard hit by the closing of the main outlet for their harvests. It is added that Germany probably hopes to bring further pressure to bear through the Rumanian banks, which are largely under Austro-German control, and which, it is said, could seriously hamper commercial and agrarian interests by refusing to extend credits.

The editorials in the London newspapers this morning express the belief that the Balkan situation is hopeful for the Quadruple Entente powers. The general impression conveyed by the editorials is that Serbia will be successfully pressed to yield to the Bulgarian demands and that the diplomats of the Entente powers are now engaged in trying to arrange a suitable compensation for Serbia.

The assertion is made that if the Allies win Serbia will probably receive the whole of Bosnia and Herzegovina, with an outlet to the Adriatic and an indirect outlet through Croatia to Fiume. This, it is stated, will represent at least ten times the value of the concessions which she is asked to make to Bulgaria.

Say Allies' Efforts Have Failed.

AMSTERDAM, Friday, Aug. 13.—Representations made by the Entente powers can be regarded as doomed to failure, says The Frankfurter Zeitung in discussing the Balkan situation.

Regarding the same subject The Vossische Zeitung says:

"The agreement between Bulgaria and Turkey is now so complete it cannot be disturbed. The active fabrication of notes, suddenly begun by the Entente powers, is merely intended to throw sand in the eyes of the world as the Entente powers know only too well how the situation stands regarding Bulgaria. They know also that the Germanic Allies await indifference Rumania's decision."

Would Welcome German Attack.

ROME, Aug. 12.—"The key to the Balkan situation is not at Nish or Athens, but at Sofia," said M. Ristitch, Serbian Minister to Italy, in an interview published in the Tribuna. "Bulgaria does not wish to move. She makes impossible proposals to the Quadruple Entente and thus gains time without declaring herself.

"If Serbia gave Bulgaria not only a portion of Macedonia, but Salonica itself, Bulgaria would still find some excuse for not moving. The only way to clear the Balkan skies is for Germany to make a serious attack on Serbia. As it would be necessary to make this attack on the Danube near Orsova, Rumania would be obliged to come forward to prevent herself from being cut off from the rest of Europe. If Rumania moves Bulgaria will be obliged to decide one way or the other."

Venizelos Back in Athens.

ATHENS, Aug. 12.—Eleutherios Venizelos, former Premier of Greece, who resigned in March on account of King Constantine's disapproval of his policy in favor of the Entente Allies, but whose party won the general election in June, returned to Athens today.

The pronouncement of his policy is awaited with the greatest eagerness, but this may not be made until after the King's speech has been delivered at the opening of Parliament on Aug. 16.

SUCCESSES GAINED BY MONTENEGRINS

CETTINJE, Montenegro, Aug. 12, (via London, Friday, Aug. 13.)—It is officially announced that there was heavy artillery and infantry fighting yesterday near Gorazda and Gacko, the former in Bosnia, twenty-nine miles southeast of Serajevo, and the latter southeast of Herzegovina, a short distance across the Montenegrin border.

At both places the fighting ended in successes for the Montenegrins, according to the report.

TREAT WAR CAPTIVES BETTER.

Austria Gets Report of Commission Sent to Serbia to Investigate.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The Austro-Hungarian Embassy today made public the following dispatch from the Vienna Foreign Office:

"The international commission, consisting of the American Minister to Bucharest, Mr. Vopicka, the Spanish Military Attaché (name not legible,) and Captain Bilard of the Swiss Sanitary Corps, were requested to report on conditions among our war prisoners in Serbia after returning from a month's sojourn there.

"The commission visited the greater part of the prison camps in Serbia and spoke with a number of prisoners and it can be stated with pleasure that conditions among our war prisoners as far as board, lodging, and sanitation are concerned have greatly improved, but not to that degree desired by us."

SAYS ALLIES WERE REPULSED.

Four Attacks in Gallipoli Failed, According to Turks.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 12, (via London.)—Four attacks against one of the Turkish positions on the Gallipoli Peninsula were repulsed on Aug. 10, according to an official statement issued today at the War Office.

COMPLAIN OF OUR SHELLS.

Thrown by Russians Into Polish Towns, German Jews Assert.

BERLIN, Aug. 22, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The Association of Jews in Germany, the Overseas News Agency announces, has issued a dramatic appeal to America, drafted by Dr. Levi, a rabbi, for distribution in neutral countries. The appeal, based on the assertion that American shells are thrown by Russians into Polish towns believed to harbor Germans, says:

"Europe stands in flames. Across the ocean America alone lives at peace. She hears not the thunder of cannon. A fruitful rain of gold is falling on a land enjoying golden peace.

"We cry out to America: 'Thousands of thy most loyal and industrious citizens come from towns being destroyed by shells which thou art sending, instead of gifts of money once sent back to childhood homes, from Libau to Lemberg. Thou sendest iron shells to supply the army of the Czar. Thou givest iron for gold, death for life. The children are murdering their parents. America, thou hast peace. Thou are not fighting for existence. We implore thee to listen to this appeal.'"

RUSSIAN WARSHIP DAMAGED.

Vessel Lying at Mangelia, Rumania, Believed to be Battleship Sinop.

BERLIN, Aug. 12, (via London, Friday, Aug. 13.)—A Bucharest dispatch to the Vossische Zeitung says a badly damaged Russian warship, presumably the battleship Sinop, is lying in the outer roadstead at Mangelia, Rumania.

The warship is reported to have been one of those which attacked the Turkish coast July 29 and 30. She struck a mine and was barely able to reach Mangelia. The vessel has not interned and presumably is making repairs.

The Sinop is a vessel of 11,032 tons, built at Sevastopol in 1887. According to a Berlin dispatch of Nov. 5, 1914, the Sinop had been sunk that day in the Black Sea by Turkish gunfire.

CARDINALS HERE IN PEACE MOVE?

prove that it is Germany's intention to end the war without securing great territorial advantages or increasing its power. They will merely safeguard complete liberty and insist on equal rights with other nations. If the terms are accepted by the Allies peace will follow as a matter of course, but possibly the main difficulty consists of the lack of sufficient guaranties by the powers to abide by the conditions, since the war unfortunately has increased the distrust among the nations.

"It is thought, however, that this difficulty might be overcome by finding the requisite formula, especially since the Pope is determined to use his utmost influence in striving for peace when the outlook is hopeful.

"Possibly Germany's terms will be modified in the course of the negotiations, but once these are opened they are deemed likely to lead to practical results because, as my informant added, all the belligerents dread a second Winter campaign, and even if the war ends in a draw, with nobody either victorious or defeated, all will be willing to sheathe the sword. The Pope is reported to be optimistic and is doubling his efforts in the hope that peace may be obtained by Christmas."

REDMOND ON PEACE MOVE.

Irish Leader Declines to Support the Pope's Appeal Now.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—John Redmond, leader of the Irish Party, in reply to a letter urging him to support the Pope's appeal for peace, says:

"I must respectfully say that to the best of my judgment the course of action you suggest would not be calculated to promote the cause of peace. Nor do I think that I would be justified in endeavoring to bring pressure to bear upon the Government to enter into any negotiations for peace at a time when the German powers, who have been the aggressors in this war, show no sign of any disposition to repair the wrong they have inflicted upon Belgium and our other allies."

Walker Makes New Peace Plea.

John Brisben Walker, Chairman of the National Convention Committee of the Friends of Peace, issued a statement yesterday urging that none opposed to militarism for the United States allows the fact that Germans in this country are interested in the movement to prevent his co-operation and "seek to ease his conscience for failure to cooperate by assigning the Germans as the cause of his lukewarmness."

RUSSIANS RETREAT, THEN DEFEAT TURKS

Withdraw Before Army of 90,000, but Turn and Rout Enemy, Petrograd Reports.

BIG EXODUS OF ARMENIANS

Quarter of a Million, Fearing Kurds, Left Homes When Muscovites Began to Fall Back.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 12.—Explanation of the renewal of the recent wholesale exodus of Armenians from their country into Transcaucasia, which is now reported to have reached a quarter of a million, is found in an account of military operations on the Caucasus front since July 22, sent out from the headquarters of the Russian Army in the Caucasus, under date of Aug. 9 and made public today.

After the Russians penetrated to Mush (eighty-three miles south of Erzerum) and Plian, Halil Bey, commander of the Turkish forces in the Caucasus, reorganized his army, bringing its strength up to 90,000, including six divisions of infantry, one of cavalry, and a large body of Kurds. General Eudenitch, the Russian commander, thus faced the alternative of hastily attempting to concentrate his forces in the face of a strong Turkish army or to retreat and thus expose a large Armenian population to Turkish and Kurdish revenge.

In opposing this front the Turks exposed their communications, now 150 miles long, to attack from the direction of Sari Kamysh. On Aug. 3 General Eudenitch moved his forces from the Sari Kamysh District southeastward, threatening Halil Bey's flank and demonstrating against Erzerum. A Russian detachment marched rapidly by way of Ardos and Kara Derbent to Daiara, which is twenty miles west of Alaschgerd. One column had driven the Turks out of the important Merghe Mir Pass, fifteen miles south of Kara Derbent by Aug. 8. Another, striking farther eastward on the Alaschgerd road, had a decisive success Aug. 5 in the passes connecting Alaschgerd with Dutach in the Euphrates Valley.

The Russians, by a bayonet attack, drove the Turks from their trenches, making several hundred prisoners. In the meantime the Russians had been successful on the main front east of Alaschgerd and the Turks were compelled to retreat southward along the Euphrates under threat of a flank attack at Dutach. Russian cavalry reached Dutach and another point on the Euphrates four miles northward, on Aug. 7.

The Turks lost 300 prisoners at Dutach. Their total losses in three weeks' campaign are estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000 men, besides a large quantity of provisions and ammunitions. The Russians are continuing the pursuit southward.

Russian military authorities declare the reinforcements now being sent to Halil Bey are recruits who have had little training and they express the belief that the Turks will have difficulty in assembling another army which would threaten the Russian forces on the Caucasus front.

An official communication from the headquarters of the Russian Army in the Caucasus, made public today, says:

The attempt of the Turks to advance in the direction of Olti and the Passine Valley were everywhere repulsed. In the capture of the Merghe Mir Pass we took three machine guns and some prisoners, including the commanders of two regiments.

In the direction of the Euphrates the pursuit of the Turks continues. During the last few days one of our columns made prisoners of five officers and 1,172 men. We also took 200 wagons loaded with pyhoxylin (an explosive compound) and trenching implements. We also seized a quantity of arms and ammunition and tents. In the villages the enemy has abandoned its wounded. On the roads our troops are finding heaps of ammunition and artillery.

Another Communication says:

On Aug. 10, in the Passine Valley, our troops, after an engagement, captured the important heights and drove back the Turks toward the west, taking a battalion commander and three other officers and 300 men prisoners.

In the direction of the Euphrates the pursuit of the Turks continues. Twenty-one hundred men have been taken prisoners.

LAUSANNE, Aug. 12.—According to a dispatch received by the Lausanne Gazette from Tiflis, under date of Aug. 10, 255,000 Armenians have abandoned their country with the retreating Russian Army and are taking refuge in Transcaucasia.

ATTACK TURKISH PORT FROM AIR AND SEA

PARIS, Aug. 12.—A dispatch to the Havas News Agency from Athens says it has been learned from Mytilene that British aeroplanes bombarded Zagagik, near Smyrna, yesterday, destroying the barracks, the telephone offices, and eight houses. A destroyer which followed the aeroplanes also bombarded the city, in which there were said to be a large number of victims. The Governor of Smyrna, fearing an attack, sent 8,000 men to reinforce the coast defense troops.

The Turks are constructing new works about Smyrna, and large calibre cannon have been placed along the Smyrna-Skala Vourla Road.

ENVER PASHA OPTIMISTIC.

Considers Russia Defeated Beyond Recovery and Turkey Safe.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 9, (via Berlin, Aug. 12, by wireless to Sayville, N. Y.)—"The Entente Allies have lost the support of that army which they intended to use to crush the forces of the Central Powers," said Enver Pasha, the Turkish Minister of War, in an interview today with a correspondent of The Associated Press, alluding to the recent fighting in Poland.

"I realize that much work yet remains to be done," continued the War Minister, "but with the Russian army no longer a terrible offensive force, Turkey and her allies have nothing to fear.

"My opinion is that all talk about reorganizing the Russian Army is about on a par with the speech before the Duma of the Russian War Minister, who apparently was unaware that Napoleon's retreat from Moscow is unlikely to be repeated by the Austro-Germans. A man who imagines such a thing possible today, with all the modern means of transportation and communication, is a century behind time.

"One never knows what the fortunes of war may bring, but every indication now is that our side is sure to win. Before long the Russian Army will be disposed of long enough to allow our allies to become active elsewhere. Meanwhile we are taking care of the situation here better than before, because we are constantly perfecting our organization and increasing our forces."

BLEICHROEDER'S SON SLAIN IN BATTLE

Princess Engaged to Young Baron Killed Herself When Marriage Was Forbidden.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—Baron von Bleichroeder, son of the famous German banker, was killed while fighting on the Warsaw front on Aug. 1, according to an Amsterdam dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company.

He was at one time secretly engaged to Princess Sophia of Saxe-Weimar, who committed suicide in 1913 because her father, Prince William, refused to permit their marriage.

"The talk of war between Germany and England is a figment of the imagination. The relations between the two nations are too closely interwoven. Never for a moment believe the fiction that at dinner each day aboard every German warship is drained the toast of 'Der Tag.' That Day will never come."

Yet the Day came and in it has gone out the life of the genial, handsome Baron Hanns von Bleichroeder, who spoke the foregoing words as he stood on the deck of the Mauretania on Sept. 15, 1910, as he was about to sail for home after a sojourn of eight months in this city.

He was then 27, a graduate of Berlin and Heidelberg Universities, an officer in the Colonial Army of German Southwest Africa, and the eldest son of the wealthiest banker in Germany.

While here the Baron had attended strictly to business. He was the guest of Baron von der Bruegger-Brueggeng at the latter's apartment in Central Park West, but every morning found him at his desk at 37 Wall Street, where he held a position with Kissel, Kinnicutt & Co., the international banking firm.

He went little into society and those favors he received he tried to repay at a small but choice dinner at the Hotel Lafayette-Brevoort on the eve of his departure. On that occasion he said:

"It was my misfortune that I did not meet that fair American who could have made me her willing victim."

The public did not know then—possibly his guests did not know—that the Baron's affection had already been elsewhere bestowed, and to a Princess. The truth came out three years later, almost to a day, when the Princess killed herself for love of him.

She was Princess Sophia of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, and she shot herself with a revolver in her room in her father's castle at Heidelberg, Sept. 17, 1913.

It was another case of Richard Harding Davis's "The Princess Aline," only it did not end in comedy.

Princess Sophia, who was five years younger than the Baron, had met him twelve years before when he was a student at Heidelberg. Owing to their difference of rank and birth there was no possibility of their marrying, although his father had been ennobled by the Kaiser for valuable financial services to the empire, and her father, Prince Wilhelm, had once been a riding master and a waiter in New York under the name of William Rohde—but that was long before he had married the Princess Gerta von Sayerg-Biddingen, the Princess Sophia's mother, who had lifted him back amid royalty.

The father looked with benevolent eyes upon the young Baron and borrowed money from him. The trouble was not there, but with the head of the house, the Grand Duke Ernst. He was obdurate—not because of the difference in rank and birth alone, but because the Baron's father was "a Jew who has refused to renounce his creed."

At the end of nine years there was no change in the love of the Baron for his Princess. Then he came to America. On his return terrible scenes are said to have taken place at the Heidelberg Castle, where the young princess made tearful, pathetic appeals to her father. At one time she almost won him over, when the Grand Duke Ernst promptly informed him that if he permitted the marriage, his allowance would be cut off. That decided Prince Wilhelm.

Three years more passed. Then came the tragedy.

And yet there is a sort of posthumous sequel. It was published in L'Opinion of Paris on Oct. 4. Early in September two women had arrived at the Hotel Savoy at Fontainebleau and given their names as Baroness von Bleichroeder and her daughter. They were accompanied by a young man, whose identity was learned to be that of Baron Hanns von Bleichroder in the following manner:

While automobiling, the car driven by the man ran over a peasant's child and he was obliged to reveal his name to the police. That night he sought out the child's parents—the child had not been badly injured—and gave them $3,000.

On the following day the two women left Fontainebleau for Tyrol, and the Baron, after a final interview with the police, disappeared. When the tragedy of Sept. 17 became known the police said that the younger of the two women was the Princess Sophia of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, who had just killed herself.

purposes of this war that the Germans should penetrate as deeply as possible into Russia. The western Allies should know why. Russia's sacrifices should prove the death blow to German ambitions.

The sacrifice has been very great, for Russia has yielded up to the German advance nearly as much space as would make the whole German Empire. I regard it as not impossible that she will not hold more than temporarily even that line on which she is supposed to be now withdrawing. Her main object is to maintain her armies intact. No losses can cool the ardor of the Russian soldier and no sacrifices of space can break the resolution of the Russian people to destroy their foes.

GERMANS NEED MORE MEN.

Operations on Kovno-Suwalki-Grodno Front at a Standstill.

GENEVA, Aug. 12.—A dispatch to the Geneva Tribune from Innsbrueck, capital of the Austrian Tyrol, says:

"German operations have been suspended on the Kovno-Suwalki-Grodno front because of a lack of reinforcements, no new troops having arrived since Aug. 4.

"The Russian offensive at Kovno is of the greatest importance as the German first line troops, chiefly Prussian Landwehr, suffered terrible losses on Aug. 8 and Aug. 9. In this section as well as in the region between Lomza and the Bug, it is remarked that many regiments are much below the average in strength."

OFFICIAL REPORTS OF DAY'S OPERATIONS

German Armies Following Up Russians Retreating from Vistula Make Swift Progress.

BERLIN, Aug. 12, (via London.)—The following bulletin was issued by the German War Office today:

Eastern theatre of war: In Courland and Samogitia (government of Kovno) the situation is unchanged.

South of the Niemen troops belonging to the army of General von Eichhorn repulsed with sanguinary losses an attack begun by the enemy with strong forces in the Dvina section. The enemy left 700 prisoners in our hands.

The army of General von Scholz captured the bridgehead at Wizn'a and Waln and threw the enemy back across the River Gas. South of the Narew since the 8th this army has taken 4,950 prisoners, including eleven officers, and captured twelve machine guns.

The army of General von Gallwitz took Zambrowa, (eighteen miles southeast of Lomza) by storm, and penetrated further in an easterly direction by way of Androchow.

Before Novo Georgievsk there is nothing new. One of our airships dropped bombs on the railway station at Bialystok. Extensive explosions were observed.

The army of Prince Leopold of Bavaria continued pursuit of the enemy and while continually engaged in rearguard fighting, crossed the Muchawka section. Lukow, (forty miles northeast of Ivangorod) has been occupied.

The army of General von Meckensen having broken down strongly fortified enemy positions after sharp fighting, the Russians began a retreat during the night along the entire front between the Bug and Parazew.

VIENNA, Aug. 12, (via London, Aug. 13.)—The War Office to-night made public the following official communication:

North of the lower Wieprz the pursuing Austro-German forces captured Lukow today and crossed the Bystrzyca west of Radzyn. Between Tysmienica and the Bug the Russians were repulsed at several places. The enemy evacuated early in the morning his battlefields and retired. Otherwise the situation is unchanged.

Germans Checked in North.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 12.—The following communication was issued by the War Office tonight.

In the region of Riga Wednesday we repulsed German attempts to overwhelm our advance guards. In the direction of Jacobstadt and Dvinsk our troops on Tuesday and Wednesday continued their progress, successfully pressing the enemy. In the region north of Vilkomir we occupied Kovarsk and Toviny after a fight and took some prisoners.

Near Kovno we continued to repulse German attacks on the front west of the Niemen as far as Jessia. The enemy was not successful anywhere except near the village of Godlevqo, where a desperate artillery duel is progressing.

On the front between the Narew and the Bug the Germans continue persistent attacks, especially on the roads to Lomza, Snidaovo and Kossevo. Further south on two sides of the Tchjeff-Malkin Railway our troops Wednesday afternoon were able to assume a counteroffensive.

On the roads of the middle Vistula there has been no change of importance. On the front between the Wieprz and the Bug, Wednesday the enemy delivered a series of desperate attacks in the direction of Parczow and on both roads between Chodlin and Vladova. All were repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy. These were especially severe east of Ostrov, where the German dead lay in enormous heaps in front of our positions.

On the Bug, the Vistula, and the Zlota Lipa there has been no essential change.

In the Dniester district, around the mouth of the Stripa, we stopped an enemy attempt to take the offensive.

The enemy, in great force, approached simultaneously the entrance of the Gulf of Riga and the Aland Skerries Tuesday and bombarded the lighthouses. Coming under fire of our warships and shore batteries, the enemy ships rapidly put to sea.

SEEK TO AID INVADERS.

German Inhabitants of Russian Baltic Provinces Suspected.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 12. — Russian newspapers are directing attention to facts which indicate that the sympathies of German inhabitants of the Baltic provinces of Russia are with the German empire. Lettish newspapers report an exodus of German landholders from Volmar and other parts of Livonia, not toward Petrograd, but toward Riga, and at a time when Riga is threatened by the Germans. Many of these persons departed in the night, taking with them all their valuables. Trains from the north to Riga are crowded.

It is reported that German barons are openly counseling Letts to remain in Riga, and the newspapers say they are unwilling to comply with the order to move into the interior of Russia. The Mayor steadily opposed removal of the church bells until he was overruled, and still forbids municipal employes to leave.

In this connection the newspapers report purchases under suspicious circumstances of grain in the South of Russia for shipment to Riga. A certain miller for a time succeeded in procuring all available cars for the carriage of grain from Novo-Tcherkask, near the Black Sea. He arranged a train of sixty cars, but the military authorities intervened. Similar efforts to take grain into Kiev were blocked.

Students in the polytechnic school at Riga are working as teamsters to assist in the removal of machinery from factories.

OPPOSE AUSTRIAN POLES.

Germans Intimate They Will Not Be Allowed to Dispose of Poland.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The correspondent of Reuter's News Agency at Amsterdam sends the following:

"The announcement from Vienna that the Austrian Polish Club, comprising Polish Deputies in the Austrian Reichrath and the Galician Diet, has issued a manifesto demanding the re-establishment of the Kingdom of Poland as an independent whole under the suzerainty of the Hapsburg Monarchy, has drawn a protest from the Vossiche Zeitung of Berlin, which declares:

"'It is not in Cracow or in Lemberg that questions will be solved regarding the fruits of the war in which the German people and empire have exhibited a force unexampled in history.'"

NEW GOVERNOR FOR WARSAW.

Gen. Baron von Scheffer-Boyadel Appointed by the Kaiser.

AMSTERDAM, (via London,) Aug. 13.—General Baron Reinhard G. von Scheffer-Boyadel has been appointed Governor of Warsaw, according to a Posen dispatch to The Vossische Zeitung, a copy of which has been received here.

General von Scheffer-Boyadel is commander of the Eleventh Army Corps. He entered the army at the time of the Franco-Prussian war and attended the Military Academy from 1874 to 1877. He rose through the ranks of the army, becoming Quartermaster General of the Great General Staff in 1903. In 1905 he was raised to the rank of "Freiherr." He is 64 years old. He has the Iron Cross from the Franco-Prussian war.

FRENCH RECAPTURE ARGONNE TRENCHES

Part of Position Taken by Germans Won Back in Counter-attack, Paris Reports.

FRENCH CIVILIANS KILLED

LONDON, Aug. 12.—Trenches in the Argonne region have been won and lost by the Germans in heavy fighting, according to the reports given out at Paris and Berlin today. The Paris report claims the recapture of only a part of the ground lost, while Berlin says the French suffered heavily trying to hold the positions.

On the rest of the front there have been artillery actions, with some trench-to-trench fighting in the Forest Le Prêtre, near the Moselle.

Paris tells of the shelling of Raon l'Etape, a small town on the railroad ten miles northwest of St. Dié. Four civilians were killed and seven women and children wounded.

Tonight's French communication follows:

In Artois, around Souchez and Neuville, artillery fighting is reported.

In the Argonne we have, through further counterattacks, recaptured part of the trenches we had lost to the east of the road from Vienne-le-château to Binarville.

The artillery was rather active in the Northern Woevre, the Forest of Le Prêtre and in the Vosges at Barrenkopf.

The enemy shelled Raon l'Etape (ten miles northwest of St. Dié). Four civilians were killed and seven women and children wounded.

The French War Office this afternoon gave the following report:

There was last night in the Artois district cannonading and fighting with bombs in the vicinity of Souchez.

In the Argonne the enemy last night delivered two attacks against our trenches in the region of Marie Thérèse and near Fontaine-aux-Charmes, but they were completely repulsed.

In the forest of Le Prêtre there was fairly spirited fighting from trench to trench with hand grenades and heavy bombs.

In the Vosges near Linge the Germans delivered an attack, but were repulsed after fighting in which hand grenades were used.

There has been nothing new on the remainder of the front.

The German official statement is as follows:

In the Argonne north of Vienne-le-Château we captured a French group of fortified positions and took seventy-four unwounded prisoners, including two officers. We also captured two machine guns and seven mine throwers. The enemy suffered heavy losses.

During an engagement which led to the capture of an enemy trench northeast of La Harazes a few prisoners fell into our hands. The remainder of the occupants fled, leaving behind forty killed.

HILL 60 FULL OF CRATERS.

Opposing Forces at One Point Are Only Six Yards Apart.

DUNKIRK, France, Aug. 1, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The present position at Hill 60, which the British military authorities recently admitted had lapsed back into German possession, is peculiar and of great interest.

The hill is really nothing but a knoll of gently rising ground that forms the end of the Klein-Zillebeke ridge. The German trenches run in a double tier along the crest and upper slope; while the British trenches form an irregular line along the edge of the lower slope. The Germans are at the top of the hill, while the British are a little way up the side of it.

The whole face of the hill presents a picture of the wildest confusion. Everywhere are huge craters, the result of nine explosions on the night of the British attack. Torn and gaping sandbags are scattered in profusion; broken rifles, odds and ends of equipment of all kinds, smashed barbed wire, and a mass of other débris lie in bewildering variety down the hillside, the whole half hidden in the long grass that has sprung up between the trenches.

The trenches twist and wind in a remarkable manner. At one point there is an old communication trench running from the British lines straight into the heart of the German position, and down this two barricades have been erected, one on the English side and one on the German side. Here the opposing forces come within six yards of each other. Between the rival barricades there stretches a short patch of ground shut in on either hand by the crumbling walls of the old trench.

At one spot a railway bridge spans the British position, and in the cutting beneath it a large pool of stagnant water has collected. Beyond it stretches the railway line, the rails torn and twisted and partly covered with the weeds growing between the ties. The line is under direct fire from the German lines, and to cross it in the open would mean certain death from snipers in the opposite trench forty yards away. In the pool below the bridge a score or more of bodies have been lying for some weeks, and no man dares approach to bring them out for burial.

FRENCH SEIZE BIG ESTATE.

Sequestrate $40,000,000 Property of Wealthy German.

PARIS, Aug. 12.—The Civil Tribunal of the Seine has sequestrated the property of the German millionaire, Herr Jellinek.

This property, consisting for the most part of real estate in Paris and the Riviera, is worth about $40,000,000.

GIVES AID TO 3,000,000.

France Expends $384,000,000 in Feeding War's Needy.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—France expended $384,000,000 in the first year of the war in feeding the wives and families of mobilized soldiers and workers thrown out of employment. There are at present 3,000,000 persons receiving allowances from the State.

In the beginning a great many persons entitled to these allowances preferred not to claim them, considering it an easy patriotic sacrifice for them to make, but as the war dragged on and their resources diminished, they were obliged to avail themselves of State aid.

TURKISH GUNBOAT SUNK BY BRITISH SUBMARINE

The Berk-I-Satvet and an Empty Transport Torpedoed in the Dardanelles.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The Turkish gunboat Berk-i-Satvet and an empty transport have been torpedoed in the Dardanelles by a British submarine it was officially announced tonight. The announcement says:

"The Vice Admiral in the Dardanelles reports that one of the British submarines operating in these waters sank a Turkish battleship on the morning of Aug. 8 at the entrance to the Sea of Marmora.

"A Turkish gunboat, the Berk-i-Satvet, and an empty transport also have been torpedoed in the Dardanelles by one of the British submarines.

"In connection with the above, in a Turkish official communication dated Aug. 9, it was reported that the Turkish battleship Kheyr-ed-din Barbarossa had been torpedoed by an enemy submarine. The Kheyr-ed-din Barbarossa was a former German battleship purchased by Turkey in 1910."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Friday, Aug. 13.—A dispatch from Mytilene says that after sinking the Barbarossa, gunboat and transport near Gillipoli, the two British submarines drew in close to shore and shelled a column of troops marching toward Gallipoli town, causing them heavy casualties. "The destruction of the Barbarossa," the correspondent adds, "removes a thorn in our side, for the accurate fire of its well calibrated high trajectory guns across the peninsula had more than once seriously hampered the movements of our ships approaching from Saros."

The Turkish gunboat Berk-i-Satvet was built at the Krupp Works in 1907. She was 262 feet long, twenty-seven feet beam and eight feet deep. She displaced 763 tons and was fitted with two 4.1-inch guns, six six-pounders, two one-pounders and three torpedo tubes. She had a complement of 105 men. Her speed was twenty-two knots.

The sinking of the ex-ed-din Barbarossa was announced in dispatches from Constantinople on Aug. 9.

BRITISH WILL SHIFT ON COTTON SOON

Announcement of New Policy Is Imminent, but Plans Are Well Guarded.

PURCHASE PLAN RUMORED

Agitation for Contraband Meanwhile Has Overshot the Mark, According to London View.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—That the British Government is about to make a new departure in regard to the cotton question is now common knowledge, but the exact lines upon which the new policy will be framed are for obvious reasons a carefully guarded secret.

"It would be worth a fortune to possess inside information on that point," said a leading cotton dealer to THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent today.

Speculation as to the Government's course is running wild. One rumor is that the Government contemplates the purchase of a large portion, if not all, of the coming cotton crop, and there are reports that, on the assumption that this rumor is well founded, syndicates have been formed in Liverpool and elsewhere with a view to taking speculative advantage of the situation. In other quarters skepticism exists as to any such contemplated action by the Government. The fact that cotton prices are normal, considering the conditions through which the trade is passing, is regarded as a clear indication that the Government's secret, whatever it may be, is being well kept.

Meanwhile pending the forthcoming official announcement, it is noteworthy that the agitation which has been conducted by part of the British press in favor of declaring cotton contraband of war has overshot the mark by exaggeration and exuberance, such as had full play at the Queen's Hall meeting yesterday. Responsible opinion here holds that the main argument for putting cotton on the contraband list is that such action would dispose of American legal objections to the policy enunciated in Orders in Council. Most of the other arguments, as The Manchester Guardian frankly states, are based on nothing more solid than misapprehension of the facts.

It is expected that when the British Government's plans are ripe the solution arrived at will be found to take into full consideration the claims and interests of neutrals. That was the consummation it was desired to reach by the Orders in Council. In substance, the Orders in Council were believed by the British authorities to be in line with acknowledged belligerent rights; in form their legality has been questioned by America. The new plan of the British Government is designed to meet the letter as well as the spirit of the laws that guarantee the rights of neutrals to pursue their legitimate trade.

Washington Sees Encouragement.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Officials of the Government showed interest tonight in the subject matter of a London dispatch to THE NEW YORK TIMES concerning the British Government's plans to formulate a new program designed to meet the letter as well as the spirit of the laws that guarantee the rights of neutrals to pursue their legitimate trade. It was said, however, that the American Government had no information to indicate that this program would be. The statements contained in the London dispatch are regarded as encouraging, as they conform to the belief that the controversy between Great Britain and the United States over the application of the Orders in Council will result soon in modifications favorable to the contentions of this Government.

It is believed here that while Great Britain may not be willing to make public acknowledgment that the Orders in Council discriminate against some neutral nations and not against others, the causes of complaint of the United States may be removed or modified by informal arrangements between the British Government and American ship owners and shippers whose vessels and cargoes have been seized or detained. There is expectation also that the two Governments may arrange to submit to arbitration the matter of whether the basic principles of the Orders in Council are in accordance with international law. It has not been the expectation here that Great Britain would formally modify the Orders in Council so as to show concessions to the American contentions, but if such concessions are included in the forthcoming announcement there will be an excellent prospect of some satisfactory settlement of the present differences between the two nations.

DEFENDS ANTI-COTTON MOVE.

Contraband Plea Not for Trade Reasons, Says Manchester Paper.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The Manchester Guardian denies the implication that the meeting held in London last night to urge the Government to declare cotton contraband was tainted with commercialism, in that the cotton interests would benefit by such a declaration.

"If Manchester men have a policy, it is not for trade or for sectional reasons, but on broadly national grounds," this paper says. "Our own views on the matter are these: cotton is more necessary for purposes of war than any other article of commerce, and it passes our comprehension how it ever came to be put on the free list."

The Guardian deprecates the suggestion that England should buy the American crop, if cotton should be declared contraband, arguing that in case loss must be sustained the American growers should be the chief sufferers. When cotton was contraband during the civil war, it adds, no one bought a supply to relieve the famine in Manchester.

BRITISH DUTIES ON WHEAT?

One of Reported Recommendations of Food Supplies Committee.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Friday, Sept. 13.—The Daily Mail says the report of the Food Supplies Committee appointed to consider the best means of increasing the supply of home-grown good is now being considered by the Cabinet. It adds:

"The committee have recommended certain steps which involve a Government guarantee to farmers of the prices of wheat, and are understood also to entail duties on imported wheat in order to protect British farmers.

"The committee also found that owing to enlistments and other reasons British makers cannot supply sufficient flows for all, and that it is desirable to plow, and it is believed that they have recommended the purchase by the Government of a large quantity of agricultural machinery in the United States, which may be brought to the assistance of British farmers.

"Legislation based on the report will be brought before the House of Commons almost immediately after the reassembling of Parliament."

ITALIANS HAMMERING AUSTRIAN DEFENSES

Hold Against Counterattacks Nearly All Positions Won in Bayonet Fighting.

ROME, Aug. 12.—While the Italian artillery continues to pound the Austrian defenses all along the line, little advance has been made during the last few days, though most of the positions won by desperate bayonet attacks have been consolidated.

The following statement was issued today by Army Headquarters under date of Aug. 11:

In Cadore, where our artillery continues to operate against powerful defensive works in the upper valleys, the enemy tried by frequent but vain attacks to throw us back from some of our recently conquered positions. Thus on Aug. 9 our troops repulsed an attack in the Sexten Valley against Fonte del Rimbianco and an advance of the enemy in force from Freikofel.

In Carnia are reported intense action by our artillery and small advances by our infantry. The enemy tried unsuccessfully to place movable wire entanglements before our trenches on Monte Medatte.

Near Plava yesterday at nightfall our troops successfully repulsed a double attack by the enemy, who was supported by strong artillery.

On the Carso plateau, after having on the night of the 10th repulsed attacks in the zone of Sei Busi, we delivered a counterattack in the morning, obtaining sensible advantages in some parts of the front. Our infantry charged with such dash that two companies succeeded in capturing at the point of the bayonet strongly fortified heights situated well inside the enemy's lines.

This position was not retained, on account of the powerful concentrated artillery fire and vigorous counterattacks of the enemy. The enemy's counterattacks, however, broke against the resistance of our forces posted in other conquered positions in the rear.

In the Monfalcone section Austrian artillery renewed its bombardment, but this time without result.

VIENNA, Aug. 12, (via London).—The War Office tonight issued the following bulletin concerning the operations on the Italian front:

On the Littoral front last night, an important hostile attack against the pointed part of the plateau of Doberdo and two attacks near Zagora, which were preceded during the day by artillery preparations, were all repulsed with heavy Italian losses.

Before the bridgehead of Gorizia calm prevails.

On the other fronts artillery battles and skirmishes continue.

ITALY IS SHORT OF GRAIN.

Will Buy 1,320,000 Tons to Feed Nation Until Next Harvest.

ROME, Aug. 12.—The latest official reports regarding the harvest show that Italy needs 12,000,000 metric quintals more of grain for her consumption until next year. A metric quintal is approximately 220 pounds.

Most of this grain, it is understood, will be purchased in America.

4,000 Reservists from Pittsburgh.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 12.—Four thousand reservists from the Pittsburgh district have applied to the Italian Vice Consulate for transportation to Italy. Joseph Natalie, the Vice Consul, declined to enter into details today, saying that because of the neutrality of the United States he had no desire to create the impression that active recruiting was in progress here.

ALLIES SEEK CONTROL OF SWISS IMPORTS

Also Would Prevent the Export of War Materials to Germany and Austria.

GENEVA, (via Paris,) Aug. 12.— The Journal says that negotiations between Swiss authorities and representatives of the Entente Allies to establish a bureau to control imports of this country are nearing conclusion. Such a bureau would perform the functions exercised by various foreign agents now working independently.

The chief obstacle to the conclusion of an agreement lies in the demands of Austria and Germany that in return for their products exported to Switzerland, they be allowed to import from this country certain articles originating in Allied countries. This is opposed by the representatives of the Allies, who take the ground that as Austria and Germany export only manufactured articles and no food supplies or materials in any way useful to the Allies, there would be no opportunity for the Allies to abuse this arrangement. The exports of the Allied nations to Switzerland, on the other hand, consist largely of articles available for use in war, and the point is made that close scrutiny of this trade by the agents of the Allies is essential.

While asking no compensating exports from Switzerland, the representatives of the Allies insist that Austria and Germany export to Switzerland only products necessary for manufacturing.

METEOR LAID MANY MINES.

German Vessel Said to Have Cruised to the Orkney Islands.

BERLIN, Aug. 12, (By Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The exploits of the German auxiliary cruiser Meteor, which was blown up by her commander to escape British warships after she had sunk the British auxiliary cruiser Ramsey, are described by the Overseas News Agency as follows:

"According to private reports, the Meteor, a converted merchant steamer, succeeded in breaking through the lines of British patrol ships and traveled to the Orkney Islands, 550 miles from her base. She laid a large number of mines and destroyed British merchant ships.

"Finally she encountered the British cruiser Ramsey, which she sank after a splendid manoeuvre. The Captain of the Meteor, whose crew consisted of about 25 men, saved and captured 43 men from the Ramsey, and it is probable that more than 60 others were drowned.

"British battle cruisers, notified by wireless, pursued the Meteor. After the Meteor had burned the Danish merchantman Jason off Horn's Reef on the Danish coast, the little German craft, facing four British cruisers, stopped a Norwegian steamer, rescued the 43 captured British contraband crew, and also put the Danish sailors on board. This boat escaped from her pursuers and reached port safely with the captured Englishmen. The Meteor was sunk by exploiding her mines."

Submarine's Men Destroy Russian Postal Matter on the Iris.

BERGEN, Norway, Aug. 12.—The Norwegian mail steamer Iris, when an hour out from this port, was held up by a German submarine and boarded by an officer and seamen from the underwater craft.

According to passengers on board the Iris, the parcel post matter destined for Russia which the steamer carried was thrown overboard. The mail for Scandinavian points was not disturbed.

ADRIATIC AT LIVERPOOL.

Makes Record Eastward Run with Big Cargo of War Supplies.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—The White Star Line steamship Adriatic, which sailed from New York on Aug. 4 with a big cargo of war supplies, arrived at Liverpool this afternoon.

To the surprise of the agents of the White Star Line, a cable message was received yesterday from the head office in Liverpool saying that the Adriatic had arrived there at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. This is a record eastward run for the Adriatic and the first time she has landed her passengers in Liverpool on a Thursday since the beginning of the war.

The icebergs are now south of the Atlantic steamship lanes, and it is probable that Captain Bertie F. Hayes, the commander of the Adriatic, went up north over the old short course and managed to get off the southwest coast of Ireland about midnight Wednesday, and then drove at top speed until he reached the Bar Lightship in the Mersey, about twelve miles from the Liverpool landing stage.

Although the agents of the line did not know the Adriatic was to pass through the danger zone on Wednesday night, it was said in shipping circles yesterday that the Germans in Hoboken were aware of the fact, and also knew that the submarines were on the lookout for her. That is why the newspaper offices were called by telephone in the afternoon to know if the Adriatic had been torpedoed.

GALVESTON, Aug. 12.—The only ship to leave this port today for the war zone was the British steamer Nestorian for Liverpool, with 8,000 bales of cotton valued at $377,842, 528 sacks of cottonseed cake valued at $50,000, 40,000 bushels of wheat valued at $50,000, a miscellaneous cargo valued at $5,000, and 4,000 tons phosphate valued at $24,000.

HATRED FANNED IN RUSSIA

Triple Entente as a Defensive and Offensive Alliance — Disclosure Made a Feature by German Paper.

From a Staff Correspondent.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 12.—The Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung prints as a special supplement another installment of letters and reports of the Belgian Ministers in Berlin, London, and Paris to the Belgian Minister of Foreign Affairs from the seized Brussels archives which the Germans consider the most sensational reading matter of the world war.

The new installment consists of twenty-six letters, dated from Nov. 7, 1910, to Dec. 9, 1911, covering the secret diplomatic history of the period of the Agadir incident and the Morocco question.

Discussing the Potsdam meeting of the Kaiser and the Czar, Baron Greindl, the Belgian Minister in Berlin, on Nov. 7 said:

"Among the Russian people, who believe they have been cheated out of the fruits of victory by Germany, intense hate has been developed for their western neighbor, which has been heightened by the envy caused by the rapid development of German power. Without Prince von Bülow's declaration of Austro-Hungary's and Germany's solidarity and without Count Portale's warning in Petersburg, Russia would not suddenly have discontinued its agitation among the small Slavic States, particularly in Belgrade."

On March 3, discussing M. Delcassé's appointment as Minister of Marine, Baron Greindl writes:

"Delcassé's return to power is not taken too tragically, since the foreign portfolio won't be intrusted to him. Also he has no longer King Edward at his side, whose co-laborer he considered himself and whose tool he was."

Baron Greindl points out that if the object of the Triple Entente were merely to preserve European peace French public opinion would have no ground for blaming M. Pinchon for the results of the Potsdam meeting. "No change has taken place in the grouping of the powers," he writes. "One ought to hail joyfully any raprochement which would improve German-Russian relations, but in Paris and London they desire just the opposite, namely, that relations be bad. The French press finds daily some ground to reproach Germany. This tendency recently has increased in intensity and looks as if one had called M. Delcassé to the Cabinet to appease the present state of public opinion."

Opinions from Paris.

Baron Guillaume, the Belgian Minister at Paris, writes on March 4, discussing M. Delcassé:

"One will have to be most prudent here toward Germany, which I certainly don't believe harbors warlike intentions or arrières pensées, but which will certainly hold itself politically on the defensive. I learn that in Germany along the French border an organized propaganda is being conducted to cause desertions from the German Army into the French Foreign Legion."

Baron Greindl writes on March 20, commenting on Sir Edward Grey's speech on the naval budget:

"The moment is certainly favorable for an attempt to improve German-English relations. I certainly would wish it with all my heart, while thereby Belgium's safety would greatly be increased."

Baron Greindl writes on April 21: "One must have lost all illusions here over the value of the Algeciras agreement, which France signed with the firm intention of never keeping."

Baron Guillaume, from Paris, on April 29, writes: "England, which pushed France into the Moroccan muddle, contemplates its work with complaisance." Baron Guillaume writes on July 28 on the seriousness of the Moroccan question: "I have a great trust in the Kaiser's peaceful sentiments. In general, I have less confidence in the peaceable intentions of Great Britain, which, not with displeasure, looks on while others are devouring one another. As I sized it up from the first, the danger point of the situation lies in London. The French will give way on every point to preserve peace, but not so the English."

Reports English War Moves.

Count Lalaing, the Belgian Minister in London, writes on Nov. 18:

"The political situation was serious enough a few weeks ago to move the English Government to unusual precautionary measures. From an entirely trustworthy source I was informed that the active army officers were suddenly called back from leaves; horses were bought for the cavalry, and the North Sea fleet for a time placed on a war footing."

Count Lalaing reports on Nov. 31: "Lord Courtney, a friend of Germany, has attacked the Government policy because it is aimed at the isolation of Germany. This truth one seldom hears in the English Parliament. These uncomfortable truths were not at all to the taste of the House of Lords."

"With or without written or oral pledges everybody in England or France regards the Entente Cordiale as a defensive and offensive alliance against Germany. This is exactly the character which the late King Edward desired to give to the entente. It is not based on the positive grounds of the defense of common interests, but on the negative foundation of hate against the German Empire. The entente has awakened the sleeping revanche thought to new life. From the entente, too, arises the condition of unrest and ill-will in which Europe has found itself for the last seven years. For the present one must accept as a fact that in London one has discussed the project of coming to the aid of France in a war with Germany with a landing corps of 150,000 men."

The Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung's revelations, which fill sixteen columns in print, will merely whet the Germans' appetite for the diplomatic letters of the period immediately preceding the outbreak of the war. On all sides one hears praise of the Government for making them public at this time, even though to the German mind Germany's cause does not need this documentary justification.

CALLS FRENCH ARMY READY FOR ANYTHING

PARIS, Aug. 12.—Albert Thomas, Under Secretary of War in charge of munitions, tells the Petit Parisien that France's efforts to produce munitions are different in method but equal in results to those of Great Britain, which he recently viewed. The newspaper quotes him as follows:

"We have an army which at the present moment is armed so as to withstand any shock, an army which, on the other hand, is capable of making a strong offensive. Its morale is good; that is to say the army is prepared to remain as it is if necessary.

"Every day our strength grows, both in England and in France. Notwithstanding the formidable resources at the disposal of Germany, it is not possible that the resources of the Allies will not assure them, when the time is ripe, complete victory.

"What we have, what England has and will have—all the resources that she can create—will assure us supremacy. I am convinced of this because I know. Every day I repeat to my friends my conviction that we shall be victorious."

345 BRITISH WORKS DECLARED 'CONTROLLED'

Statement by Lloyd George— Profits of Employers Limited Under Munitions Act.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—David Lloyd George, the Minister of Munitions, announces that 345 establishments have been declared "controlled establishments" under the Munitions of War act.

As a result of this control the profits of employers are limited. Any excess over such a limit becomes payable to the national exchequer.

"By this provision," says Mr. Lloyd George, "Parliament has assured that sacrifices made by workmen are made for the nation as a whole and not for the advantage of individuals. On the other hand, during the period of the war any rules or shop customs which may have the effect of limiting the output of munitions are suspended in controlled establishments."

GET BIG POWDER CONTRACT.

Du Pont Company Said to Have a 70,000,000-Pound Order.

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Aug. 12.—The Dupont Powder Company has just received an order—the largest in the history of the company—for 65,000,000 and 70,000,000 pounds of powder for the Allies, according to reliable but unconfirmed reports in circulation here today.

While the order comes from the Allies through the usual channels, it is understood that the greater portion of the powder is ultimately intended for use by Russia. Representatives of the Czar's army recently visited the plant. Italian representatives also have been here.

The work of staking out the buildings on the fourth addition to the Dupont plant at Carney's Point was begun this week. The addition will be larger than any of the other three plants now in operation. When the war began the company had only one plant, the others having been added in quick time as orders increased.

The capacity of the Carney's Point factories when the fourth addition is completed will be about 1,000,000 pounds of powder a day.

Four Hundred Electrical Workers Walk Out—Others May Follow.

HOPEWELL, Va., Aug. 12.—Four hundred electrical workers at the Du-pont Powder Plant here walked out today. It was stated that they demanded a wage increase and also objected to the employment of non-union men.

It is said tonight that the carpenters, bricklayers, and steamfitters may go out tomorrow.

A representative of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers is enroute here from Wilmington, Del., to look after the interests of the union.

The entire electric line from the Appomattox River to the power plant is being guarded by Dupont police to prevent damage by strikers.

$1,000,000 SHRAPNEL ORDER

Given to the Hall Switch and Signal Company of New Jersey.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 12.—Officials of the Hall Switch and Signal Company of Garwood announced today that a $1,000,000 order for the manufacture of shrapnel for the Allies had been accepted.

Although the company has been engaged in manufacturing war munitions for the past six months, this will be the largest contract yet offered to a local concern. The order calls for the manufacture of the entire shrapnel with the exceptions of the fuse and the charge. The former work of the local plant has consisted in the production of shrapnel parts.

The company also announced today that the plant would immediately resume work on a full-time basis, and that men who had been laid off in the past year would be taken back to their positions.

The Farnese Relief Fund.

A fund for the relief of the women of Caprarola and other Italian hill towns around Rome whose husbands or fathers have gone to the front has been started in this country by Miss Edith Deacon, well known in Boston society and but recently returned from Italy. Miss Deacon was in Paris at the beginning of the war, and since that time she has been connected in one way or another with relief work. Her family holds the historic Palazzo-Farnese, Caprarola, under a fifty-year lease, and as soon as Italy joined the war Miss Deacon started local relief, which the Italian Government could not finance. Contributions should be sent to George C. Lee of Lee, Higginson & Co., 44 State Street, Boston.

BOOK FOR GERMANS 'UNMASKS' ENGLAND

Berlin Publication Takes 461 Pages to Marshal British Sins Against Fatherland.

A "SONG OF HATE" IN PROSE

An "England Book" has been published by the Tägliche Rundschau of Berlin, setting forth in 461 pages all the alleged sins of England against Germany—a sort of prose "Song of Hate." After an introduction by Gustav Manz, pointing out the artistic irony of this "unmasking of England" on the hundredth anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, when she stood shoulder to shoulder with Germany, the indictment is framed in eight chapters, the first of which is entitled, "Business; or, the Business of War, Pillage and Robbery, Dumdum and Silver Bullets."

This first chapter is subdivided into a historical survey of England's "business of robbery," going back 200 years, written by Vice Admiral Kirchhoff; a treatise on England's "Shopkeeper War" and her "economic brigandage against the German economic life," by Professor Dr. W. Dibelius, together with many instances of her alleged dread of Germans, her losing out in business, and her consequent hatred of all things German; a division dealing with England's "little tricks," such as her courting of French favor and alleged "giving of alms" to France in order to relieve France's own economic distress and strengthen her against Germany. The first chapter also tells of England's alleged money prizes—"silver bullets"—for the destruction of the first German submarine and the first Zeppelin, and alleged "prizes for hired assassins" in Africa.

The second chapter deals with "The English Gentleman" and is devoted solely to showing, by alleged English treatment of Germans and by contrasting treatment of Englishmen by Germans, that the species "English gentleman" is extinct.

The third chapter, entitled "Arrogance and Hypocrisy," quotes English judgments about England and about Germany, including quotations from "the wire-pullers, Churchill, Grey, Asquith, Lloyd George and companions"; reports from "the jingo press, Times, Daily Mail and consorts"; utterances by "the pious and the scholarly—remarkable friends," and, finally, statements by "infuriated heroes of the pen," including Kipling and Conan Doyle.

Chapter IV., entitled "The Voice of Reason," sets forth the Englishmen's views of themselves and of the world, beginning with a slur of the English out of the mouth of their own Shakespeare in an essay by Hermann Schelenz, together with English warnings of approaching English degeneration on land and sea, and condemnations of the English by quotations from Bernard Shaw and equally representative Englishmen since the beginning of the war. The chapter concludes with a treatise on English praise of the German spirit and German bravery in the course of the war.

In the fifth chapter the book presents "A Mirror of Foreign Lands," in which England may, if she looks, see herself estimated to her own disadvantage in the judgments of non-Englishmen, ranging from Napoleon and French observers of today to disgusted "neutrals" and "friends" in America, Switzerland, Holland and Scandinavian lands.

The following chapter, "The Enemy in the House," recites alleged English injustice toward the Boers and the Irish and the resulting resentment among those races.

"What We Think of Them" is the title of the next chapter, in which the book sets forth the view of England entertained by Germany and the Germans before and since the beginning of the war, including judgments by Goethe, Schleiermacher, Theodor Fontane, Bismarck, Treitschke, Adolf von Harnack, Ernst Haeckel and Rudolf Eucken. Many of the denunciations have appeared from time to time in the German press since the beginning of the war.

The last chapter deals with "Jest, Satire, Irony and Deeper Significance," and contains a rich assortment of both humor and bitterness cropping out in England and in Germany since the start of the war. One part of the chapter is devoted to portraying "the English delusion of persecution," classified as spionitis hallucinatoria, by Professor Dibellius. Much is made here of "English impudence toward the Kaiser," and there is a charitable suggestion of possible "softening of the brain." "Something of Spleen" in the Anglo-German relations is treated by Dr. Otto Kuntzemüller, Erich Schlaikjer, Dr. A. von Wilke, Ferdinand Künzelmann, and others. The book closes with a section about "Humorous Miscellanies," in which are included passages about English writers on the ending of the war, Lord Kuizon's "Twelve Commandments" about the war, Heligoland as an English gift to Germany, English advertisements appealing for recruits, England's effort to create military music and England as portrayed in French jests.

canceled purchases that show such profits and give them away. Possibly it is that the Dardanelles is to be opened. But we have no information. ISHII FOREIGN MINISTER.

Change in Japanese Cabinet Deemed Favorable to United States.

TOKIO, Aug. 12.—Baron Kikujiro Ishii, Ambassador to France, has accepted the foreign portfolio in the new Cabinet of Premier Okuma.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Baron Ishii's assumption of the office of Minister of Foreign Affairs of Japan, in the opinion of the officials here, will have an important and probably favorable influence upon the relations between the United States and Japan, particularly in case of a revival of the negotiations regarding the alien and ownership legislation of the State of California. When those important exchanges were suspended, following the lodgment of a note by the Japanese Foreign Office, practically recording dissent from the argument made by the State Department here that the California legislation was not in violation of Japan's treaty rights, Baron Ishii, then Director of the Commerce Bureau of the Japanese Foreign Office, visited the Pacific Coast of the United States to investigate the effect of the California law upon Japanese trade and the welfare of the Japanese residents in California. His investigation was thorough, and from the fact that no effort has been made to reopen the negotiations, it is inferred by officials here that he was inclined to take a favorable view of the attitude of the Western people.

WARNS GERMAN WOMEN.

Suffragist Tells Them to Fight for the Franchise.

BERLIN, Aug. 1; (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—A woman Socialist discusses in the Vorwaerts the view held by many of her sex in Germany that the war will bring German women nearer the goal of political equality. She says:

"We warn the people of our party not to cherish too many hopes, and to remember that every privilege which has any value and brings us forward must be won. The war has perhaps brought us nearer to enfranchisement, in that the opponents of woman suffrage have been deprived of many of their most serviceable arguments, and, above all, because the least interested woman must clearly see how urgently women citizens need political influence, which they can exercise only through the vote. The bare fact that a war of such tremendous effect, such widespread dimensions, and such painful losses in every belligerent country could have come to pass must create in women—who are most deeply affected—a resolve to co-operate in the prevention of future wars.

"After the struggle to bring about a readjustment of political power will recommence. Women will take part in it more than hitherto, because the war has taught them how much the State stands in need of their responsible co-operation.

"Above all things, we must now follow and study attentively political events and economic and social measures, for this knowledge of what is occurring in public life gives us the right and the power to express our views and present our demands. Many of our party comrades have been killed and our ranks thinned. We women must, therefore, see to it that new partisans, sincere and unbending advocates of democracy and socialism, come to us. It must be our task to strengthen and consolidate the party, for nothing but the strengthening of democracy in Germany and the permeation of our whole political life with democratic ideas will bring us a lasting peace and woman suffrage."

ORBOLPH SAYS HE IS GERMAN

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Aug. 12.—August Orbolph, held here today for arraignment on a charge of having made drawings of military reservations and lighthouses along the coast, says he is a German, according to jail officers. He denied, they said, reports that he was of Austrian birth and had received remittances from relatives in Austria.

Orbolph was arrested by Federal officers as he was boarding a train for the East last night. He said he was traveling for pleasure, that he had no regular occupation, and denied, the officers said, having made any drawings.

He came to Florida from Chicago a year ago, and is alleged to have registered at hotels here four times during the last year, using a different name each time. Orbolph said he came to the United States two years ago.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—No information has come to the Department of Justice in regard to the arrest of August Orbolph on a charge of making drawings of United States coast defenses in Florida. It was stated at the department that the man must have been arrested on the initiative of local Federal officials in Florida, and that the department had no information whatever of the case except such as had come in press dispatches.

ACCUSES FRENCH SURGEONS

German Prisoner Swears They Refused to Dress Enemies' Wounds.

BERLIN, Aug. 12, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The Overseas News Agency reports that the North German Gazette publishes an affidavit sworn to by Wilhelm Oelbemttel, a reservist who was wounded on Sept. 8. His right arm was amputated on the next day. Three days later the German field hospital in which he was a patient was captured by the French, and he, together with twelve other seriously wounded men and surgeons and nurses, was made prisoner.

"The affidavit," says the report, "states that the German soldiers were treated most shamefully by French surgeons, who refused to dress their wounds, beat and spat at them, and allowed their wounds to suppurate. This treatment continued for weeks, the affidavit adds, although such cruelty on the part of the French surgeons was an incitement to retaliatory methods."

EARTHSHOCKS IN AUSTRIA.

Very Severe in Laibach — Extend Through Italy.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 12, (via London.)—A dispatch to the Frankfurter Zeitung from Laibach, Austria, under date of Aug. 11, says that extraordinarily severe earthshocks, the strongest of any recorded since the establishment of the observatory there, were registered at frequent intervals yesterday. The most violent shock occurred at 10:14 o'clock in the forenoon.

Information concerning the main zone of disturbances is lacking, but the secondary zone embraces all of Southern Italy, where undulatory shocks occurred.

KINGS DEMOCRATS INSIST ON AUTONOMY

Adopt "Harmony Committee's" Report with Reproof of Murphy Taken Out.

McCOOEY IS IN CONTROL

Dominance of Tammany Hall in State Will Be Opposed—Steering Committee for Campaign.

John H. McCooey, Democratic leader of Kings County, ran the steam roller over the recalcitrants in the Brooklyn organization last night and started the party on the road to harmony for the Fall campaign. It happened at a meeting of the County Committee to consider the report the "harmony committee" made to the Executive Committee last Friday.

The "harmony committee" consisted of five members, headed by James D. Bell, Chairman of the County Committee, and it was organized to consider means of establishing harmony in the party this Fall and to "remove the causes of complaint against the party management."

This committee made two recommendations which were considered drastic by some Brooklyn Democrats because they took a hard slap at Tammany Leader Charles F. Murphy and Tammany's dominance in Brooklyn politics. One recommendation was that the local organization should resent any interference from Tammany Hall or from any other source in the local affairs of the borough, and the other stated that the local organization was opposed to and would endeavor to prevent the choice of a State party leader from any of the counties in Greater New York.

At the meeting of the Executive Committee on Tuesday there was an animated discussion over these two resolutions, and it resulted in an alignment of the Tammany and anti-Tammany forces. Leader McCooey was on the scene, and after strenuous work kept the Tammany forces in line, and the adoption of the resolutions then was defeated. The Executive Committee held another meeting yesterday, and Leader McCooey was able to have the two obnoxious recommendations amended and the blow to Murphy perceptibly softened. One resolution as amended read:

"Resolved, That the Democratic County Committee of Kings County and its various committees and officers declare for the most absolute autonomy or home rule in regulating its party affairs, and will not tolerate any interference therein from any source whatever, and that that position will for the future be maintained."

The phrase "from Tammany Hall or from any other source whatever" was carefully deleted.

The second resolution was amended to read:

"Resolved, That in State party affairs the Democratic organization of Kings County is opposed to and will oppose the domination of Tammany Hall or of any one county or of any individual in the State councils, and will use all its influence and power in preventing such domination."

In the original resolution was this phrase: "And is opposed to and will endeavor to prevent the choice of a State party leader from any of the counties in Greater New York."

McCooey thought the two amended phrases pointed too closely at Murphy, and the majority apparently sided with him. The only opposition to the resolutions as amended at the County Committee meeting last night came from James E. Finegan of the Thirteenth Assembly District. He also opposed a resolution calling for the appointing of an advisory committee of twenty-five to arrange for the Fall campaign, but it was adopted.

The anti-Murphyites, while admitting a partial defeat in the turning down of the resolutions, were satisfied that the local organization had been put squarely enough on record as opposing interference from across the bridge. All agreed that the prospect for harmony was better now than ever before.

ARREST RUNAWAY GIRLS.

Two from Baltimore Were Stage Struck—No Trace of Miss Guidone.

The search for Elvira Delores Guidone, 16 years old, daughter of a Hartford physician, who is believed to have run away to go on the stage or join a moving picture company, was unsuccessful yesterday. During the day two runaway girls from Baltimore, who wanted to become movie actresses here, were turned over to the Children's Society.

Miss Guidone, who disappeared from a New York Central train bound for this city on Monday, met a man and woman who looked like actors, and left the Grand Central Station with them, according to A. H. Williams, the negro porter on the train.

Dr. Guidone had asked the porter at Hartford to look after the girl and see that she got off the train at the 125th Street station. Williams said yesterday that, as the train was nearing the 125th Street station, he told the girl that she would soon be at the station, but she answered that she was going to the Grand Central. There Williams said that he attended to her baggage and saw her meet the elderly man and woman. John Guidone, the girl's brother, said yesterday that the girl had been stage struck, and was anxious for experience behind the footlights in any capacity.

Two young girls came running and out of breath to Policeman Cowan of the Traffic Squad at Canal Street and the Bowery yesterday morning and told him that they had been insulted by a man at Chatham Square. Cowan could not find the man, and when he questioned the girls they told him that they had run away from Baltimore. They had a list of New York moving-picture concerns, and they said that they had intended to apply for positions with them, but had lost the clippings on the way. They said they were Bessie Lissy, 15 years old, of 827 North Chapel Street, and Lillian Koska of 924 Durham Street. They were arraigned in the Children's Court before Justice Ryan, who sent them to the Children's Society to await the arrival of their parents.

NEW STREET SAFETY PLANS.

Committee Asks Additional Laws and Enforcement of Old Ones.

As a move against street accidents the Automobile Technical Committee of the Safety First Society recommended to the Board of Aldermen yesterday ordinances to eliminate dazzling lights from motor cars; to require parallel parking at the curb for all delivery vehicles; the use of mirrorscopes on all motor vehicles; to inclose car-drive chains, and to make it a misdemeanor to "hitch-on" or trespass upon a motor truck or other vehicle.

The Police Department is requested to enforce more strictly the ordinance prohibiting any vehicle from approaching within eight feet of a standing trolley car, and to compel proper lighting of all vehicles.

Included in the recommendations referred to the society attorney, William Bondy, for presentation to the Aldermen, is a suggestion for relieving street congestion by constructing runways in buildings for loading and unloading vehicles.

In approving the plan of Street Cleaning Commissioner Fetherston for flushing pavements at night, the committee offered to co-operate toward getting an adequate appropriation for the work, and advised that permits for street sprinkling be discontinued.

Another liquid asset —Call Loans

IN order to be assured of immediately available funds, to meet the daily fluctuations in deposits, many Trust Companies and Banks make Call Loans.

The borrower—usually a member of the New York Stock Exchange—deposits, as collateral security, stocks and bonds which are listed on the Exchange. The current market value of these securities must at all times exceed the amount loaned by 20%.

These loans must be and are paid the day they are "called."

A NEW BOOK
By the author of "In the Vanguard"

THE MIGHTY AND THE LOWLY

By KATRINA TRASK

As "In the Vanguard" was a stirring plea for universal peace, so "The Mighty and the Lowly" is a plea for social reform through a right understanding of the teaching of Jesus.

Writing with her accustomed vigor and charm, Mrs. Trask combats the idea that Christ was set against any particular class—rich or poor.

The theme is built around actual events in the life of Jesus, and the reader will find his interest stirred by the dramatic power of the book as well as by its argument.

DARTIGUENAVE NEW PRESIDENT OF HAITI

Elected by the National Assembly—Gets 94 Out of 116 Votes Cast.

MORE AMERICANS LANDED

New Government Not to be Recognized Until It Shows It Can Maintain Peace.

PORT AU PRINCE, Aug. 12.—General Dartiguenave was today elected by the National Assembly President of the Haitian Republic, in succession to the late President Guillaume, who was recently shot by revolutionists here.

General Dartiguenave received a majority of 72 out of the 116 votes cast. He received 94, while Luxembourg Cauvin had 14, Emmanuel Thezan 4, Dr. Rosalvo Bobo 3, and 1 was blank.

In preparation for possible disorders further American forces were landed today from the warships in the harbor. The men brought with them field pieces and machine guns, and together with the forces already on shore they patroled the streets of the city. In several sections of the city they brought together sacks of sand to serve as breastworks in case of street fighting.

The people of the city, however, remained quiet, and the election took place without disorder.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Recognition by the United States of the Government in Haiti to be set up by President Dartiguenave, will not be considered until the new executive has shown his ability to guarantee the maintenance of peace, the security of life and property, and the adjustment of outstanding foreign indebtedness. In the meantime the American naval forces will remain in control of the situation.

Secretary Lansing explained today that the administration of Haitian customs by naval officers was a temporary arrangement to prevent the revenues from falling into irresponsible hands, and that the State Department had made no provision for establishing a permanent system of American control or supervision of Haiti's customs.

Such a system would have to be authorized in a treaty, and it is probable that steps in that direction will be taken as soon as a Haitian Government has been recognized.

WRECK ON PENNSYLVANIA.

A Score of Passengers Hurt, but None Mortally, It Is Believed.

TITUSVILLE, Penn., Aug. 12.—Train 65 on the Pennsylvania Railroad, known as the Pittsburgh and Buffalo Flier, jumped the track half a mile west of this city tonight.

A score or more persons are injured, the most seriously being:

Howard Mossersmith, Pittsburgh, knee cap fractured.

Mrs. H. G. Creighton, Pittsburgh, back and left leg injured.

After running 200 feet on the ties, the locomotive plunged into a freight car on a siding, followed by the combination car. The train buckled back of the smoker, throwing the day coach and the diner at right angles.

ROBBERS KILL NEW YORKER.

Vincent Winklemeyer Slain in a Box Car in Nebraska.

HOLDREDGE, Neb., Aug. 12.—Vincent Winklemeyer of New York City, an electrical engineer working in the harvest fields for health, according to papers found on his body, was shot and killed early today in a box car between here and Funk, Neb., when he resisted the attempts of two men to rob him.

E. R. Lee of Lincoln, Neb., and Fred E. Culom of Kansas City, Mo., were wounded in the fight with the robbers, who escaped.

FOUR BATHERS DIE; FOUR OTHERS SAVED

Girl Drowned Trying to Escape from Rock Where Tide Had Marooned Her.

CRAMP CLAIMS SWIMMER

A girl and a man were drowned and three boys and a girl were rescued in near-by waters yesterday.

Josephine O'Reilly, 15 years old, daughter of Joseph O'Reilly of 60 Drake Avenue, New Rochelle, was one of the victims. With her chum, Florence Buderman, a year younger, she had gone bathing at Hudson Park, in New Rochelle. The girls waded to a rock a few rods from shore. The tide was coming in, but neither noticed it till they jumped from the rock to wade back to shore. The water was over their heads and neither girl could swim.

When she came to the surface Florence screamed for help and half a dozen life guards swam out to her. None noticed Josephine, and as Florence was unconscious when they got her to the beach every one was busy for the next few minutes. Dr. H. H. Williams and Dr. Fitzwilliam Dalrymple used a pulmotor on her, and after fifteen minutes resuscitated her, but she had gone to her dressing room and was nearly clothed before she remembered her chum. Then her cries brought the life guards again and they dived for Josephine. They got her body.

Lawrence A. Frise, 18 years old, of 138 Pennfield Street, Brooklyn, was drowned last night in Shall Creek, at Broad Channel, Queens. He and two companions went out in a small boat, and Frise fell overboard. The other boys recovered the body and then notified Coroner Ebert, who ordered the body taken to a bungalow which Frise and some other boys had hired for the season.

A boy supposed to be Julius Jondra, a Boy Scout of Brooklyn, was drowned in the Milstone River at Griggstown, N. J., yesterday when a canoe in which he was riding was swamped by the swash of a motorboat. Harold Butler of Highland Park tried in vain to save the lad.

Clifford Lehr, a member of the Erie Yacht Club, lost his life off West Twenty-fifth Street in Gravesend Bay. Cramps seized him, and although Edward Sweeney, Peter Dennis, and Joseph Burns, members of the same club, swam to his assistance, he was dead before they got to him.

Policeman Henry Malley of Astoria had a day off yesterday and went crabbing in Flushing Bay. He was intent on his sport when he heard yells for help and saw a crowd of youngsters splashing toward the shore 200 feet away, while one of their number floundered in the water, screaming.

Malley leaped overboard and got the boy after diving for him, for the youngster had sunk. The policeman got him ashore and gave him first aid, while he ordered some one to telephone to St. John's Hospital in Long Island City for a pulmotor. The boy was barely breathing when the ambulance surgeon got to him, but he was finally resuscitated and taken to the hospital, where it was said he would recover. He was Frank Wolf, 13 years old, of Grove Street, Maspeth.

In Metuchen, N. J., Walter Eppinger, 7 years old, son of Mrs. Catherine Eppinger, with Jacob Tennebaum, aged 7, and Thomas Bearman, aged 6, was playing on Willett's Dock, in the South River, when Tennebaum and Bearman fell in. The water is ten feet deep. The lads clasped arms and were going down when Eppinger jumped into the water, caught the foot of one and swam with them to safety.

NEW PARK FOR HUNTINGTON.

August Heckscher to Make Prime Estate a Recreation Centre.

August Heckscher of 576 Fifth Avenue, whose Summer home is at Huntington, Long Island, has arranged for the transformation of the Ezra Prime estate, on Main Street, that village, which he has been giving rent free for several years for the use of Fresh Air children, into a public park. A short time ago Mr. Heckscher gave about five acres of land near the Prime estate and west of the old First Presbyterian Church of Huntington, for the use of the Huntington Y. M. C. A. community work as an athletic field.

The Prime house, one of the largest of the old houses in Huntington, is to be remodeled to resemble a Swiss chalet. The grounds, which cover about ten acres, are to be beautified by the planting of many foliage plants, shrubs and trees, and the lake is to be deepened and bridged. It is to be restocked with trout.

WILSON TO IGNORE CARRANZA NOTE

within this fundamental idea the Washington conference obeys a lofty inspiration of Pan-American solidarity, and instead of finding any cause for alarm, the Mexican people should see in it a proof of the friendly consideration that her fate evokes in us, and calls forth our wishes for her pacification and development. I assure you of my distinguished consideration.

JOSE LUIS MURATURE,
Minister for Foreign Affairs.

A dispatch from the Carranza Minister of Foreign Relations says this reply "has caused great satisfaction here."

Villa Suggests Armistice.

The Government has learned that Villa is willing to agree to an armistice with Carranza and to conform to the suggestion for a get-together conference contained in the appeal of the United States and the Latin-American nations about to be forwarded to him and other factional leaders.

Judged by his communications to the United States, Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala and by various statements made by him and his agents, it seems to be established that Carranza will reject the appeal of the Pan-American conferees if he deigns to answer it at all. What the next step will be after it is definitely known that Carranza will not heed the appeal, is not disclosed, but a very clear understanding is obtained that the United States will then deal with such other factions as endeavor to set up a provisional government in Mexico and will recognize that Government and give it "active moral support" in other ways.

In such a course the United States will not be joined by some, perhaps none, of the six Latin-American countries who participated in the Washington and New York conferences.

Shortly after his return to Washington from Cornish, N. H., today, President Wilson had a conference with Secretary Daniels, at which Mr. Daniels gave information as to the distribution of warships in southern waters which would be available for quick service in the event of trouble in Mexico. The anti-foreign demonstrations at Vera Cruz seem to have ended, but the Navy Department declines to say whether the battleships Louisiana and New Hampshire, ordered from Newport on account of the belief that the lives of Americans and other foreigners were in danger, will continue to Vera Cruz. The department gives the impression, however, that these vessels will take station at a base to be designated soon and will there await orders.

Senhor Cardoso, the Brazilian Minister to Mexico, has sailed from Vera Cruz for New Orleans on the United States gunboat Sacramento. The gunboats Machias and Wheeling, at Tampico, and the gunboat Marietta, at Progreso, have been ordered to Vera Cruz.

CARRANZA FORBIDS PEACE CONFERENCE

Recalls Offer to Confer With Enemies, Charging That Villa Faction Blew Up Trains.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Correspondence made public late tonight by the Villa Agency in Washington shows that after Villa's representatives here had accepted a suggestion of Carranza's Washington attorney that Carranza agents would be willing to confer, with a view to peace, with representatives of the other elements engaged in the civil war in Mexico, Carranza himself forbade his Washington representatives to confer with the Villistas and called on the latter to submit to the Carrenzista, or Constitutional, Government.

Carranza gave as a reason for this attitude that the "reactionaries" had blown up railroad trains, causing the death of women and children, and he could not deal with an enemy which indulged in such acts of crime and destruction. This communication from Carranza seems to confirm the impression of the State Department that he was not willing to discuss peace terms with the Villistas. In his telegraphic instructions to his agency here, Carranza suggested that the Villistas should make direct submission to him.

On last Saturday Charles A. Douglas, counsel in Washington for the Carranza Government, delivered to Secretary Lansing a brief on the subject of Carranza's position and purposes, in the course of which he said that Carranza's representatives here, Eliseo Arredondo and Luis Cabrera, would be willing to confer with the representatives of any element of the Mexican people with a view to reaching an agreement that would further the common interest, the re-establishment of peace, and the welfare of the republic.

The Villa agents here, E. C. Llorente and Manuel Bonilla, decided to act on Mr. Douglas's proposal, and Mr. Llorente on last Monday sent this letter to Mr. Arredondo:

Aug. 9, 1915.

Mr. Eliseo Arredondo,
Confidential Agent of the Constitutional Government,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir—By news emanating from the Department of State and published by the local press, I am informed, with real satisfaction, that you and Mr. Luis Cabrera, in the name of the Constitutionalist Government of Mr. Carranza, are willing to confer with the representatives of any element of the Mexican people with a view to reaching an agreement that would further the common interest, the re-establishment of peace, and the welfare of the republic.

If the above statements represent the true attitude of the Constitutionalist Government, I am pleased to inform you that Mr. Manuel Bonilla and myself, in behalf of General Villa and the Convention Government, are disposed to confer with you, and Mr. Cabrera, at such place and time as may be mutually agreed upon, in order to discuss, like good Mexican citizens, matters that so much concern the national integrity.

Since the success of this matter depends on the absolutely confidential nature of its proceedings, I believe it proper for me to say to you that Mr. Bonilla, as well as myself, will up to the point when we have reached the end sought and mutually agree upon for publication of the results, maintain the strictest secrecy toward both the public and the press.

Awaiting your reply, I remain,
Your obedient servant,
E. C. LLORENTE.

Mr. Arredondo answered as follows:

Confidential Agency of the Constitutionalist Government,
Washington, D. C., Aug. 10, 1915.

Enrique C. Llorente, Washington, D. C.:

Dear Sir: I have received your letter of the 9th inst., the contents of which I have transmitted by telegraph to the First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, asking him for instructions concerning the matter to which you referred. As soon as I receive them I shall inform you.

Your obedient servant,
E. ARREDONDO.

After consulting the First Chief, Mr. Arredondo sent this reply:

Confidential Agency of the Constitutionalist Government,
Washington, D. C., Aug. 12, 1915.

Enrique C. Llorente, Washington, D. C.:

"Dear Sir:—The First Chief of the Constitutionalist Army, Venustiano Carranza, instructs me to inform you that I must not accept the conference which you proposed to me in your letter of the 9th inst., in the name of General Villa and the Convention, because directly after the outrage committed on the 12th ultimo, in the neighborhood of Apizaco, by the dynamiting of an undefended passenger train, in which perished women and children, the Reactionaries have just blown up another train near the station of San Marcos, between the cities of Jalapa and Puebla, causing the death of fifty unarmed passengers, and other innocent persons and all the soldiers who were guarding them.

Therefore, he does not deem it advisable to the interests of the Constitutionalist cause and to the objects of its program, which is that of establishing and consolidating a government based on the principles of order and security for persons and property, and, generally, on the respect for all guarantees, which is an indispensable requisite and a fundamental condition of all governments, to enter into compromises with the enemy, who, instead of pursuing a noble end, recurs to acts of crime and destruction, which reveal an eloquent protest against humanity and civilization.

And, lastly, it is to the First Chief to whom those who are directly disposed to submit to the Constitutionalist Government, should directly present their propositions.

I remain,
Your obedient servant,
E. ARREDONDO.

Mr. Llorente replied as follows:

Washington, Aug. 12, 1915.

Mr. E. Arredondo, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I acknowledge receipt of your communication of today.

The answer which you transmitted to me, in obedience to the orders of your chief, puts an end, in my opinion, to our correspondence; but I shall not close this note without telling you that, inasmuch as the national interests are at stake, I sincerely regret the procedure of Mr. Carranza, whose lack of justification is made more noticeable by reason of finding his refusal on the pretexts cited by him, and which are entirely apart from the question. I also deplore the error committed by Mr. Carranza in interpreting our propositions concerning the settlement of the national question as an offer of submission by the Convention Government to his military dictatorship.

I believe that the charges made by Mr. Carranza in his reply are unjust, or at least premature; but supposing that they are true, they are not sufficient grounds for his refusal, for these are the same lamentable acts, committed by either one party or the other, from which the country should be spared by reaching an agreement that would bring about the restoration of peace and constitutional order.

I am today communicating the text of the correspondence which has taken place between you to my Government for its information and guidance.

Your obedient servant,
E. C. LLORENTE.

FOUR MEXICANS DEAD IN TEXAS FIGHTING

Washington Looks to State to Put Down Disorders of Local Origin.

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Aug. 12.—The killing today of three Mexicans near Mercedes, Hidalgo County, Texas, and a fourth one tonight and the capture of twenty-one saddle horses belonging to the bandits in the same vicinity lead to the belief that at least one of the bands of Mexican raiders has been scattered.

Details of today's fighting, in which three Mexicans were killed, were not available, but the fourth man was killed tonight after being found asleep by a searching party and attempting to draw a weapon, when he was awakened.

Reports last night that several hundred armed Mexicans were preparing to enter Texas from Mexico at a point ten miles east of Brownsville failed of materialization and were declared today to have had no foundation.

With the exception of the fight near Mercedes the situation in Cameron, Starr, and Hidalgo Counties apparently was quiet today.

LAREDO, Tex., Aug. 12.—Eight Americans, en route from Monterey to Brownsville, arrived here tonight. They said this route was chosen because of rumors in Monterey that a strong anti-American sentiment existed at Matamoros, opposite Brownsville, and they were advised by Mexican friends to come through Laredo.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The Administration is still in the dark as to the underlying causes of the sudden outbreak of disorders along the Texas frontier. The general impression is that while some of the bandits are Mexicans who have slipped across the Rio Grande, some at least of the law-breakers are American citizens, though probably of Mexican extraction.

The situation is further complicated by the distinct jurisdiction of the State and Federal authorities. There is no difficulty where bandits are encountered on the border, in the act of crossing the river in one or the other direction. Such movements involve the right of the Washington Government to defend the country against invasion or to preserve American neutrality. But where the disturbances occur, as many of them have, many miles in the interior, the War Department is convinced that it is without authority to come to the assistance of the alarmed villagers and country people, unless Governor Ferguson of Texas officially asks the President to take charge of a situation that is beyond the power of the State to handle.

The Geovernment has received by telegraph the text of a handbill distributed in connection with the raid of Mexicans at Mercedes, Texas. This handbill reads as follows:

"'Mexicans today will accomplish a sacred debt. The revolution has acquired in a few days gigantic proportions. We unite as brothers to expedite these fortunes of ours. In the solemn moment we will vindicate our rights and justice for all time. May the light shine upon us in all our undertakings and may it crown our forces in all manners. To contemplate this movement, initiated in Texas, which is of such consequence as to bring about the peace and justice we long for."

SEES WAR WITH MEXICO.

Senator Martine Says We Made Mistake in Withdrawing from Vera Cruz.

Special to The New York Times.

METUCHEN, N. J., Aug. 12.—"The United States will be at war with the demoralized factions claiming to be the rulers of Mexico within a few weeks," United States Senator James E. Martine said to a Times correspondent today.

"I don't want to criticise, but we made a very grave mistake when we sent our boys of the army and navy to Vera Cruz and brought them back without accomplishing anything. We should have finished the job, so long as we started it, or we should not have started it. If we had done our duty, thousands of lives and millions of dollars' worth of property damages might have been saved. We do not covet anything Mexican. We are not looking for more territory. What we do want, however, is to make it a safe place and a comfortable place to live in for Mexico's own people. We want to stop the bloodshed, murder, anarchy and terrorism that has been running rampant these many months."

PRAISES PAN-AMERICAN PLAN.

John Barrett Sees Hope for Peace in Mexico.

John Barrett, Director General of the Pan-American Union, who has been in New York co-operating informally with Secretary Lansing and the Latin-American envoys in their efforts to find some solution of the Mexican question, was asked last night before returning to Washington for his opinion of the situation. He said:

"While the delicacy of my position as an international officer prevents me from making any official statement, I can say informally, as one deeply interested in the cause of practical Pan-Americanism and in the welfare of Mexico as a member of the Pan-American Union, that I believe the prospects for permanent peace in Mexico are better today than at any other time since the revolution begun. This action of President Wilson and Secretary Lansing in obtaining Pan-American co-operation in the settlement of the problem is the most advanced step in real Pan-Americanism which has been taken in recent years, and has as its chief aim the protection of the sovereignty and integrity of Mexico while bringing about peace. The Latin-American governments can hardly fail to appreciate that fact, and the others will, I believe, fall into line behind the six powers represented at this conference, in their representations for peace.

"When Mr. Carranza really understands the motives and inspiration of this identical action of the American governments, I feel confident that he will listen to their recommendations and will realize that his cabled appeal to them against their action was based on a misapprehension of the fundamental spirit and purpose of the conference."

CRITICISM IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Groups in Brazil and Argentina for Intervention in Mexico.

RIO JANEIRO, Aug. 12.—The efforts of the Pan-American republics to settle the Mexican problem are being followed here with keen interest. The National Chamber approved a motion asking the Brazilian Foreign Office for information as soon as possible regarding the state of negotiations. The newspapers continue to emphasize that no attack is contemplated upon the sovereignty of Mexico.

The semi-official Gazeta do Noticias finds fault with those who, pledging themselves in the beginning against formal action, later come to support the leanings of the United States toward "imperialism."

"In truth," this paper says, "South America is not in sympathy with intervention in the internal affairs of Mexico. But the solution already reached by the conference at Washington seems to be to present a conciliation candidate for the Presidency of the republic. The only difficulty will be to obtain from the rival faction acceptance of a candidate who is presented if not forced upon them by America."

The newspapers announce that the government will be interpellated in the Chamber of Deputies next Monday on the subject of the intervention of Argentina in the Mexican situation.

BUENOS AIRES, Aug. 12.—The Latin-American Association of Buenos Aires today passed a resolution regretting "the ambitions of certain party leaders in some Latin-American republics" who seem to be interested in the idea of intervention in Mexico.

"The present general situation is unfortunate," the resolution says, "and is serving as a pretext for intervention which cannot be accepted."

The debarking of foreign troops in Haiti is criticised, and the association declares it would view with disfavor intervention in Mexico.

THE RAINBOW TRAIL

ZANE GREY'S NEW NOVEL OF ADVENTURE

Hitting the trail and taking the reader along with him, through the country of adventurous romance, is the best thing Zane Grey does. And he's done it again most emphatically. For here is a new story, double-barrelled as Mark Twain would say, because it is a remarkable tale by itself for any one to read, whether or not he ever heard of Z. G. before; and, also, for any one who read "Riders of the Purple Sage" here is the out.ome o! :ome o the stirring incidents in that widely read novel.

MITCHEL WANTS NO LEAVE

Unlikely to Return for Estimate Board Meeting—Praise for Gen. Wood's Speech.

Special to The New York Times.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Aug. 12.—It was work, nothing but work, and the very hardest kind of work in the United States military instruction camp today. Equitation was added to the regular schedule of instruction. The recruits also were instructed in the rudiments of field artillery science. Signaling, which will involve the operation of wireless telegraphy, wigwagging, and the stringing of field telephone and telegraph wires, will be taken up tomorrow. Instruction in engineering is also about to begin and by the end of next week the bankers, lawyers, doctors, and others who are here from all parts of the country learning how to be soldiers will know not only how to build a bridge, but also how to demolish it in record-breaking time.

Strenuous as was the work of yesterday it was not to be compared with that of today. The drill masters got their men in hand as soon as breakfast was over and from that time until late in the afternoon, with an hour off for dinner, there was not a moment when the civilian regiment was not at work. The recruits drilled on the camp plain in squad, platoon and company formation, they marched, slow time, quick time, and double time all over the Federal property, including the parade grounds and athletic fields in Plattsburg proper.

"It was just one drill after another," said Nelson O'Shaughnessy, former Charge d'Affaires in the City of Mexico, who for a month will be just plain Private O'Shaughnessy, U. S. A.

"Muldoon has nothing on this place when it comes to work," said Mayor Mitchel this morning, after three hours in the field.

The men are a game lot. Thus far just one has had to fall out as a result of the hard work. In that instance the man was ill and had been trying to keep the fact from his commanding officers, but he had recovered today and was among those who at the double-quick returned from Plattsburg barracks late this afternoon.

Cavalry Squadron Organized.

The provisional squadron of cavalry was organized today and the four troops, which average about 100 men each, this afternoon scouted for about two hours over the roads and fields to the west of the camp, the fields where later on everybody will ply the pick and shovel in trench-digging practice. In this squadron of cavalry which is commanded by Captain Lincoln C. Andrews, U. S. A., are all the polo players and steeplechase riders in camp. Among the troopers are Mayor Mitchel, Hamilton Fish, Jr., Philip Roosevelt, W. J. Clothier of Philadelphia, the Chew brothers, and R. H. Little. These men by being cavalrymen, however, do not cease to be infantrymen. Just the reverse is the case, for whatever the recruit may take up as a specialty must come second to the infantry work.

When Private Mitchel of New York returned to his company street for a breathing spell today he was told by one of the correspondents that the Board of Estimate, at a meeting in New York, had let it be known that he would be needed at a meeting to be held on Tuesday next.

"Will you go?" the Mayor was asked.

"I'll cross that bridge when I come to it, even if I have to turn engineer and build it myself," the dust-begrimed Mayor replied.

The Mayor's comrades, however, believe that unless the meeting is to be of extreme importance he will not apply for a furlough, for if he returns to New York it will be on a short furlough.

The Mayor, as was every one else in camp, was greatly impressed by what General Wood said last night in his speech, in which he dwelt on the lack of preparedness in this country. The Mayor said that he indorsed every word that General Wood uttered.

"I talked that subject over with General Wood before this camp started," said the Mayor, "and my views are in absolute accord with his. I believe that every citizen should have the benefit of military training, and I believe that it should be made compulsory by the employment of a system similar to that in force in Switzerland."

Dr. Alfred Reginald Allen of the Faculty of the University of Pennsylvania, who is a tentmate of the Mayor, was another who indorsed the utterances of General Wood.

"General Wood," said Doctor Allen, who, by the way, is a corporal, "has taken up this matter of proper and wise military training for our men with the University heads of the country, and I sincerely hope for good results. But there will be a lot of cheap pullbacks in some institutions who will fight on the ground that it constitutes what they call a tendency toward militarism. I believe it is the duty of every real American to take advantage of opportunities to better himself in a military way. I want to see the States take this question up and if necessary curtail appropriations unless the military feature is given some showing in the schedules of instruction."

Charles Elliot Warren, President of the Lincoln National Bank of New York, who was made an acting Sergeant of Company F, said that he too indorsed not only what General Wood had said, but what ex-Ambassador Robert Bacon, another enlisted man here, had said on the subject of preparedness. Mr. Warren said that any employe of the Lincoln National Bank would receive full pay, and his vacation would not be affected, if he desired to attend a camp like this on the shore of Lake Champlain.

General Wood said tonight that the members of the business men's regiment would learn in four weeks as much as the raw army recruit did in five months.

"The men are the very best material the country has," General Wood said. "But with this same material, under conditions that would exist preliminary to organizing a volunteer army for war, it would be impossible to give them one-third what we can here."

Policeman Wins Commission.

To a New York policeman goes the honor of being the first man in camp to win a commission as a Second Lieutenant in the civilian regiment. This man is Lieutenant Charles E. Schofield, head of the New York Police Department training school. He was assigned to Company E. Lieutenant Charles E. McKonney, also of the New York Police Department, won the next highest place awarded to a civilian in this company. He was made the ranking Sergeant of the company.

Willard D. Straight of J. P. Morgan & Co. was made an acting Sergeant of Company D.

Other appointments will be gazetted tomorrow. Among those who, it is said, will receive appointments is Patrick Graham, who twenty-six years ago was a trooper in the famous Fifth United States Cavalry. Mr. Graham is now a Battalion Chief of the New York Fire Department.

While walking along the shore front during a lull in the drilling this afternoon one of the regular soldiers found a pocketbook containing $88. He learned that a member of Company A had lost the pocketbook, and he turned it over to Captain Kelly of that company.

When Captain Kelly was asked who lost the money he answered, jokingly:

"Oh, some poor devil of a private."

Captain P. E. Darby, Medical Corps, U. S. A., the Surgeon in Chief of the camp, lectured to the command tonight. He emphasized the importance of sanitation and told the men how best to care for themselves in camp and on the march.

"Infantrymen," said Captain Darby, "are no better than their feet. Take the best care of your feet and wear the army type of shoes."

Alcohol, Captain Darby said, except as a medicine, had no place in the armies of the present day.

"Alcohol," he said, "only does us harm, and requires no discussion beyond that."

Captain Darby's references to alcohol recall the fact that a "soft drink bar" has been established in the camp, where milk and sarsaparilla may be obtained. To meet the prejudices of a few of those present a foot-rest has been placed in front of the bar.

Captain Darby announced tonight that on the next Three Saturdays the men would be inoculated for typhoid fever. This was merely a precautionary measure, he said.

It rained here tonight, and the tented city had a thousand flickering candles. Rain or shine, the work will go on tomorrow.

It was said today that Secretary Garrison had decided to visit the camp in the last period of instruction. That will be when the recruits are intrenching and working under assumed war conditions.

CHICAGO WANTS A CAMP.

Seeks Military Instruction for Men of Middle West.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—The War Department will be asked to establish an army training camp here similar to the one at Plattsburg. Representative Martin B. Madden will leave for Washington next week to press the matter at the War Department.

The attendance of Chicagoans at Plattsburg, Mr. Madden said today, was an indication that a camp near this city would draw a large number of recruits.

"There are hundreds of men here," he said, "glad to get such instruction as the camp gives if only the school were easier of access. I believe that similar schools should be opened in various parts of the country."

GARRISON PRAISES WOMEN.

Approves Plan to Open hTeir Homes for Hospitals in War Time.

The Special Relief Society, made up of women who are carrying on a campaign for preparedness, making it their special object to lay a foundation for hospital and relief work in case of war, sent a letter to Secretary of War Garrison telling him of the work and offering a list of Summer homes of society women suitable for emergency relief work. Mr. Garrison has replied, saying that he would be glad to have the list, and that he was pleased with the interest taken by the society women in the subject of preparedness.

The letter, which was written by Mrs. William Alexander, President of the society, is as follows:

We have noted with concern the present condition of "unpreparedness" in the United States as outlined by your speeches and by the reports of the various defense leagues, and we feel that women should do their part in preparing for any emergency.

We are at present endeavoring to arouse women's organizations to the need of securing necessary Congressional action for adequate national defense, and we have planned to carry on our work for preparedness in other fields as well.

We have, for example, made arrangements to act as a clearing house for a large number of women's organizations throughout the country, so that their services will be at the disposal of the Government whenever needed, whether now or at some indefinite time.

We already have a list of Summer homes of society women suitable for emergency hospitals, and we are constantly adding to this list. As soon as we have our list completed we shall take pleasure in calling it to your attention. In the meantime, if we can be of further service along the line of preparedness please feel free to call upon us.

Secretary Garrison replied:

I am very much pleased, indeed, to note the interest you are taking in this most important and vital subject. As you undoubtedly know, the department is at the present time working on a program or policy of national defense, which we hope to have ready to present to Congress at its next session. This matter will be gone into quite thoroughly, and all phases of the subject considered. I will be very glad to have the list you speak of when it is ready, and appreciate very much the endeavors of your society in connection with this matter.

The offices of the Special Relief Society are at 597 Fifth Avenue.

GARRISON ADVISES ARMY OF DEFENSE

Secretary of War Says 500,000 Citizens with Military Training Are Sufficient.

POINTS TO PAST EXPERIENCE

Compares Enormous Wastage of Unprepared Troops with Work of Regulars in Mexican War.

Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison, in an article in The Independent of this week on "Reasonable Preparation," says that men who have studied the subject with care think a well-trained body of 400,000 to 500,000 citizen soldiers, immediately available, together with our permanent force in regular and militia establishments, will give us reasonable guarantee against hostile invasion of our territory.

The main part of the article is aimed at those who oppose any increase in the military preparedness of the country. One of the most striking passages is the reply to those who object to further military preparation on the ground that the United States should set an example to the rest of the world. It reads:

An all-sufficient answer to those who voice such sentiments is present before our eyes today. This nation has surely set the example desired for the 139 years of its existence. A less militaristic nation has scarcely, if ever, existed on the face of the earth. At all times when not actually engaged in warfare, the military precautions taken by this country have been absolutely negligible. What is happening upon the Continent of Europe does not seem to have been a happy outcome of our example any more than does what has just happened in the Far East. If our example is to have no more effect than is exhibited upon the opposite side of the two oceans, then it seems to be the height of foolishness to leave ourselves helpless because of the supposed benefit of our example.

Cites China's Experience.

Across the Atlantic the effect of our example has been negligible, unless we are to claim proudly that those nations which almost lost their national existence because of lack of military precautions, did so because of our example, and unless we are to claim proudly that across the Pacific our example was responsible for the condition which led the President of a great republic to say:

"Our rights and privileges in Manchuria have suffered enormously. We are shamed and humiliated, but our own weakness invited insult. Let all people unite and work harmoniously for the supreme object of saving the country."

Mr. Garrison asks whether this country has, in the light of all that should be considered, taken proper military precautions. He continues:

To those whose judgment is determined by preconceived convictions, the answer is of course, a simple one and reasoning is futile. If one is convinced that man is never justified in the use of force to defend or protect himself or otherwise when circumstances would seem to require it, then no argument or reasoning or other consideration will prevail. Likewise to those who feel justified in trusting to luck or chance, reason and facts are useless. But to the great mass of men who look upon this matter from the standpoint of reason, common sense and duty, there is a very live, real question, which calls for their best efforts to solve properly.

It is interesting to observe that even those who shrink from taking military precautions constantly refer to the defensive possibilities possessed by the country in its undeveloped, untrained personnel. In other words they recognize that in the world, as it exists today, force may become necessary to preserve the most sacred and essential elements of life, but they prefer not to prepare for this possibility, and assume or state that when the emergency arises, we can develop the resources to meet it.

Preparation Is Economy.

I do not feel that this is an intelligent way to deal with this great question or that it will appeal to a reasoning mind. So long as force is used in the world, those against whom it may be used must reckon upon the possibility, and if they are wise men and intelligent men and courageous men they will prepare themselves therefor. There must be a clear decision between no preparation and proper preparation. Words have such an unfortunate way of accumulating meanings foreign to their essence that I prefer the words no precaution and reasonable precaution. To many people the use of the word preparation conveys the idea of getting ready to do something which one wishes to do, whereas the word precaution more nearly describes the state of mind of those who are getting ready to ward off or deal properly with what may come, but against their will and not because of it. Intelligent, clear-thinking minds conclude that reasonable precaution should be taken.

Putting the subject on a financial and material basis, Mr. Garrison says that the reasons for precaution are just as cogent. He explains:

We have always maintained the minimum of military preparation, with the result that whenever we have engaged in war we have suffered the maximum of loss in life and money. In payment of bounties and pensions and other necessary results of improvidence we have met with the inevitable results of improvidence. A tithe of the armies, trained and ready for military service, would have made these enormous expenditures unnecessary.

Large Army Not Needed.

Mr. Garrison does not advocate a great increase in the regular army, whose chief purpose is to suppress internal disorders and to deal with questions like that along the Mexican border. He argues:

It is too little realized how much the avoidance of trouble along our southern border has been due to the perfect discipline and highly proficient training of the men of the regular army.

A small permanent force, whose size can be easily determined, is enough for this work, according to Mr. Garrison, but he continues:

But it is a more difficult matter to try to determine in advance what additional preparation a free State must make to perform its supreme function of repelling a hostile invader of its territory. It is true that in this case, too, we have had experience, but it has been under such widely divergent conditions that much study is required in order to draw safe conclusions for meeting the conditions of the future. One thing, however, is certain. The experience of the past has demonstrated to any reasoning mind the absolute necessity of proper preparation, whatever may be our individual conclusions as to what is reasonable. We have tried the minimum degree of preparation and our history is full of its unhappy lessons.

In our first war we enrolled 400,000 untrained men, Mr. Garrison says, but while the country had to endure the cost of maintaining them and the consequent loss of useful production, it was seldom able to muster more than about 30,000 men to met the invader in all parts of our territory. A far smaller, well-trained and reliable force under Washington, he says, would undoubtedly have won independence with much less waste and loss of life and money.

In the war of 1812, Mr. Garrison continues, we mustered more than 500,000 untrained men. This method of raising an army, with its reckless extravagance in men, was necessary to meet an enemy whose largest force was about 16,000 men. A thoroughly trained and reliable force, one-twentieth of what we actually had enrolled, should have decided the war in its early months and prevented the loss that followed.

Small Force Conquered Mexico.

The early part of the Mexican war was carried out by 2,100 trained regulars. The second part was accomplished by a force which never exceeded 13,400 men, while the Mexican capital was captured and the war ended with a trained force of fewer than 6,000. Nevertheless, the total number of men enrolled for the war was more than 104,000.

In the civil war, the North enrolled nearly 3,000,000. In spite of re-enlistments, Mr. Garrison says, this number is enormous in comparison with the number actually engaged in the campaign of any one year. If any conclusion is to be drawn from this, he says, it is that at the beginning a well-trained force, insignificant in numbers in comparison with the ultimate total, might have accomplished the same result in far less time with corresponding less loss of all kinds. He continues:

In our latest war we enrolled 275,000 men, of whom the total number actually employed for any useful purpose during the war did not exceed 60,000 men. The remainder furnished the death and disease roll in camps where troops lived as a useless burden on the Government.

After coming to the conclusion that a trained body of 400,000 to 500,000 citizen soldiers, which can be quickly mobilized and completely equipped, would be enough in case of an invasion, provided that the navy and coast defenses were properly maintained, Mr. Garrison continues:

Hundreds of young men are eagerly coming to our student camps of military instruction. They are there learning no undemocratic or militaristic ideas; they are taught nothing inconsistent with the manly virtues of free citizens of the Republic, but simply how to render, in the most effective way, the last full measure of devotion which free citizens may give to preserve freedom for those who come after them. We must find a way to impart proper military instruction to a relatively small number of our young men to provide this citizen force of between four hundred and five hundred thousand.

Mr. Garrison says he is hopeful that reasonable suggestions to this end will meet with the practically unanimous approval of the people of the country.

TO AID NATIONAL DEFENSE.

National Surety Company Helps Its Men to Military Training.

Joel Rathbone, Second Vice President of the National Surety Company, has issued a notice suggesting that the young men among the company's employes who have not taken their vacation should consider spending it at the military training camp at Plattsburg, N. Y. He declares it will be "a valuable experience, and will combine excellent physical training with a rest from customary labors."

The company will extend the usual two weeks' vacation period for the time of enrollment and will advance for a reasonable time the deposit of $30 required on arrival to cover camp expenses.

Company has invested $15,000,000 in the securities of electric railways and $6,000,000 in anthracite coal lands. We have referred to the Erie's bond issue of $32,000,000 in 1901, representing its investment in the Pennsylvania Coal Comapny, and the bond issue of the Lehigh Valley Railroad in 1905, representing its investment of $17,000,000 in the property of Cox Brothers & Co. We have referred to the fact that several of these carriers are guarantors of the bonds of the Temple Iron Company. The Central Railroad Company of New Jersey is guarantor of $16,000,000 bonds issued by the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company and the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company is guarantor of $1,500,000 bonds issued by the Lehigh Valley Coal Company. Giving consideration to these matters and to the investments made by these carriers in the stocks and bonds of the coal companies and the unsecured loans and advances they have etxended to the coal companies, it is apparent that the capital borrowed by these carriers is not only the capital required for their transportation needs, but also the capital required to mine and market 80 per cent. of the 70,000,000 tons of anthracite coal produced annually.

Practices Called Inherently Unlawful.

"After a careful review of the record we are impressed with the inherent unlawfulness of the rates and practices established by these carriers, which clearly are the outgrowth of past conditions, wherein the carriers were producers, shippers, transporters, and vendors of the comomdity. If the rates they established for transportation were excessive, it resulted in no hardship to their mining and selling operations, because the excessive profits from the transportation service offset the absence of profits in their mining and selling operations and high rates eliminated the competing shipper from the markets.

"If the record in this case were barren of evidence as to income, revenues, and low operating costs resulting from the transportation of this commodity, the mandatory language of the act to regulate commerce would require removal of the unlawful discrimination, preferences, and advantages which have for many years been extended by these carriers to their allied and controlled coal companies and which operate to the prejudice of the individual shippers of this commodity.

"The conduct of these carriers, extending over a long period of years, in granting to their allied coal companies concessions from, and offsets against, their established tariff rates, presents very strong evidence that the rates on anthracite coal, which these carriers established, are excessive. These coal companies ship 90 per cent. of the total production, and if a substantial reduction is made in the tariff rates its full effect will fall upon but 20 per cent. of the tonnage shipped. If the great purpose of the act to regulate commerce is to be carried out, we must require that such tariff rates on this commodity shall be established as can be maintained on the shipments of all shippers."

The Principal Reductions.

Following are the important reductions ordered:

Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, to Hoboken, Paterson, Newark, Boonton and Washington, N. J., prepared sizes, from $1.60 per ton to $1.45, $1.35, $1.40, $1.20 and 95 cents to those points, respectively; other sizes from $1.45 to $1.35, $1.22, $1.30, $1.09 and 86 cents. To Binghamton, Waverly and Elmira, N. Y., prepared, cut $1.50 to 90 cents, $1.15 and $1.25; other sizes, from $1.50 to 82 cents, $1.05 and $1.14, respectively. To Corning and Syracuse, N. Y., prepared, from $1.90 to $1.35 and $1.40; smaller sizes, cut from $1.65 to $1.17 and $1.22.

East Lancaster and Utica, prepared, $2 to $1.90 and $1.50; other sizes, $1.75 to $1.68 and $1.35.

Lehigh Valley—to Jersey City and Newark, prepared, from $1.60 to $1.45 A. D., $1.40; smaller sizes, $1.45 and $1.40 to $1.35 A. D., $1.30. To Ithaca, prepared, $1.65 to $1.45; smaller, $1.50 to $1.32. To Phillipsburg, N. J., from Wyoming region, prepared, from $1.45 to 95 cents. From Lehigh and Schuylkill regions, prepared, from $1.30 to 85 cents; smaller sizes, Wyoming, prepared, from $1.15 to 75 cents; Lehigh and Schuylkill, prepared, from $1 to 85 cents. To Rochester, N. Y., prepared, $1.90 to $1.85; smaller, $1.05 to $1.61.

Erie to Jersey City, Paterson, Newark, N. J., Middletown and Port Jervis, N. Y., prepared, from $1.50 to $1.45, $1.35, $1.40, $1.05 and 90 cents, smaller sizes from $1.35 to $1.35, $1.22, $1.30, and 95 and 82 cents. To Binghamton, N. Y., prepared, from $1.65 to 90 cents; smaller, $1.50 to 82 cents. To Elmira, prepared, $1.65 to $1.25; smaller, $1.50 to $1.14. To Rochester, prepared, from $2 to $1.85; smaller, $1.75 to $1.51.

Central of New Jersey—To Jersey City and Newark, prepared, $1.60 to $1.45 and $1.40; smaller, from $1.45 to $1.40 to $1.38 and $1.30. To Elizabeth and Somerville, N. J., prepared, $1.55 each to $1.40 and $1.20; smaller, from $1.40 to $1.30 and $1.09.

Phillipsburg from Wyoming region, prepared, from $1.45 to 95 cents; from Lehigh region, prepared, from $1.30 to 85 cents; smaller, from $1.15 and $1.00, respectively, to 75 and 68 cents.

Delaware & Hudson.—To Windsor, N. Y., prepared, $1.65 to 85 cents; smaller, $1.40 to 72 cents. To Albany, Troy and Mechanicsville, N. Y., prepared, from $1.93 to $1.60; smaller, from $1.60 to $1.31.

Rates are similarly cut on shipments from the collieries of the various Anthracite roads consigned free on board vessels or for reshipment by water. From the Central of New Jersey producing points to the Elizabethport and Port Johnston, N. J., piers, the commission cut the rate from $1.55 a ton on prepared coal to $1.40, and from $1.40 to $1.30 on pea and smaller sizes. To Communipaw pier and Port Liberty, N. J., prepared, from $1.60 to $1.45, and on smaller sizes by 10 cents a ton. Similar reductions were ordered on the various lines to Weehawken, Perty Amboy, Undercliff, and South Amboy, N. J.

Commissioner Harlan dissented from the views of his brother Commissioners on the ground that the reduction of coal rates was rendered unequal by reason of the previous decision in the 5 per cent. case, authorizing the railroads in the territory concerned to increase rates.

May Lower Price of Coal.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 12.—The decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in reducing the freight rates of anthracite is expected to have the effect of placing the independent coal producers on the same footing as the companies controlled by the hard coal carrying railroads, and is also expected to ultimately reduce the price of coal to consumers. The independent coal companies produce less than 25 per cent. of the anthracite mined.

The decision is the second adverse action in the matter of freight rates on coal announced against the hard coal carrying roads within the last year. Last December the Pennsylvania Public Service Comission ordered the railroads to reduce their rates 40 cents a ton to Philadelphia and vicinity. This decision was appealed.

MAYOR AS SOLDIER STARTS JOKESMITHS

Controller Suggests Habeas Corpus Writ at Estimate Board Meeting.

'NATION'S WELFARE' FIRST

Benjamin C. Marsh Admits Mr. Mitchel's Need of Training in Handling Firearms.

Mayor Mitchel and Vice Chairman Curran of the Board of Aldermen came in for some criticism yesterday because they went to Plattsburg to learn to be soldiers. At the meeting of the Board of Estimate President Mathewson of the Bronx moved that the board meet next week, instead of two weeks hence, because of the many important matters that required attention.

Controller Prendergast, who is often sarcastic at the board meetings, said:

"I am sure, Mr. Mathewson, that your view is narrow—almost provincial. You should subordinate the city's interests to the national good. Pause and consider how the nation's welfare is bound up in the trench-digging and baggage-slinging of these two good and true men."

"But I am serious about this, Mr. Controller," insisted Mr. Mathewson. "I think we owe it to the city to have a meeting every week."

"If you are serious you shouldn't smile," gently reproved President Pounds of Brooklyn.

"The Acting Mayor has just made a suggestion to me which I think should be made an amendment to your resolution," resumed the Controller with a smile. "We must provide to deliver the body of one of our truants."

"I accept the amendment and press my motion," said Mr. Mathewson. It was pressed and carried, with President Pounds alone voting in the negative.

Benjamin C. Marsh, who has written many letters on taxation, wrote an open letter to the Mayor yesterday in which these paragraphs occur:

"We didn't elect our Mayor to be a soldier.

"I admit that you need training in handling firearms—as Senator Reynolds can testify—but as one of many voters who deeply regret having voted for you for Mayor, I submit that your attention is needed in New York City, and should not be distracted in Roosevelt-ian style.

"We are killing off about 27,000 people a year from preventable diseases, chiefly due to bad housing and working conditions and poverty.

"The unemployment problem, in dealing with which your Committee on Unemployment made such a brilliant fiasco last winter, is still with us—almost untouched.

"During the time it is reported you are to spend in camp, we shall be wasting tens of thousands of dollars interest on land the city has condemned but is not using.

"No one objects to your having a vacation, but I respectfully submit that it could be more profitably spent studying a manual of economics rather than a manual of arms. If we are to militarize our city government, however, let's be thorough, and adopt a uniform for all members of the Board of Estimate. You ought to have some military aids, and please let Controller Prendergast be drum major.

"Maybe when you get us militarized, you and the rest of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment will trust the voters to decide our economic problems by referendum while you get ready for war."

GARVIN MEN SPURN INVITATION TO WORK

Striking Machinists Hoot and Jeer About Plant at Hour Set for Resumption.

SING EIGHT-HOUR-DAY SONG

Metal Trades Attorney Says More Than 100 Men Have Gone Back on Employer's Terms.

More than 300 striking metal workers, who had marched to the plant yesterday, rejected the invitation of the Garvin Machine Company to return to work, and thus the International Association of Machinists won a point over the National Metal Trades Association that may have a broad effect on the national campaign of the metal workers for an eight-hour day.

The Garvin plant at Spring and Varick Streets had been closed since Aug. 2, when the machinists struck for eight hours, and 700 men have been idle.

More than 300 strikers marched at noon to the Garvin factory from their headquarters, 181 Varick Street, where they had been urged by J. J. Keppler, Vice President of the machinists' union, to stand firm. At Spring and Varick Streets they were joined by as many more, including some women, who were urging them not to go to work.

The 12:30 whistle sounded the formal invitation to come back, and the big doors, swung open in accord with a notice posted five days ago that the plant would resume at noon yesterday. From the crowd went up, as if by prearranged signal a shout of "Eight hours!"

Hoots and cat-calls merged in the chorus of the song the striking machinists sang about the Remington plants in Bridgeport. It was set to the tune of "The Old Gray Bonnet," and ran:

Put this in your bonnet
With the eight hours on it,
And don't mind what the bosses say;
And when the fight is over
We'll all be in clover,
For we'll work eight hours a day.

Officials of the union then advised the men to go away from the Garvin plant and leave them to manage the strike. The pickets were removed except Business Agent Bramley. They will be replaced this morning, for the union officials expect strike-breakers, as they have expected them since Monday.

Shortly after noon officials of the Garvin Company were asked for a statement and referred inquiries to Henry C. Hunter, counsel of the Metal Trades Association. From his office at 30 Church Street he issued this announcement:

The machinists at the plant of the Garvin Machine Company began to return to work today under the same conditions that prevailed on Aug. 2, the day on which they struck. They requested through the International Association of Machinists a reduction of working hours from nine to eight. The Garvin Company refused this request because its competitors are working nine hours a day, and in some manufacturing centres ten hours, under less fixed charges. The machinists appreciated these conditions and 110 returned to work, in addition to foremen and sub-foremen. Other machinists will be taken back each day. Special care is being taken to keep open the positions for the men who have been in the employ of the Garvin Company for many years.

Following this statement Vice President Keppler of the machinists was asked for comment.

"They have a few bootblacks and waiters at work in the plant," he said, "but they have no machinists. Not one of our 200 or more machinists went back to work, and our men will not go back until they get the eight-hour day. Mr. Garvin will fill none of his war contracts until they do go back."

It was said by union officials that 200 of the 700 Garvin men have obtained work elsewhere.

"If the company does not give in soon, few of its men will be left," declared Business Agent Bramley. "They won't get their best men back now."

Union officials announced to the men yesterday afternoon that the American Machine and Foundry Company in Brooklyn had thrown up contracts it had taken from the Garvin Company at the beginning of the strike through fear of having its own plant tied up by the machinists. The leaders said the night shift by which the Garvin work was being done had been discontinued.

The last time the machinists fought the Metal Trades Association, in 1911, they were beaten. The Metal Trades Association, which has in its membership a majority of the machine shops in the New York district, and the purpose of which is "united action on the part of employers in handling unjust collective demands of organized labor," is backing the Garvin plant.

The greatest disappointment to the employers' association yesterday was the failure of the 500 Garvin strikers who are not machinists to return to work. It was confidently expected that these men would be on hand and that the gaps among the machinists could be filled.

LOCOMOBILE STRIKE AVERTED.

Company Grants Eight-Hour Day and Withdraws Profit-Sharing.

Special to The New York Times.

BRIDGEPORT, Aug. 12.—Fifteen hundred employes of the Locomobile Company of America, at a mass meeting in Eagles' Hall tonight, accepted a settlement with the company, and will not go on strike. The company granted the demands made by the employes, with some exceptions. The company acceded to the eight-hour day, and will withdraw its profit-sharing scheme when the eight-hour day goes into effect, Aug. 30.

There were eleven demands made on the company by the employees. First, the eight-hour day. Agreed to.

Second, all hours over eight a day, or forty-eight a week, to be considered overtime and to be paid for at time and a half. The company did not agree to this, but will pay time and a half over ten hours a day. The men say that they will adjust that difference by refusing to work over eight hours a day.

Third—Night hands not to work more than forty-eight hours a week. Agreed to.

Fourth—Bonus of 15 per cent. for night work. Agreed to.

Fifth—Wages for forty-eight hours' piece work to be the same as fifty-five hours. Agreed to.

Sixth—No discrimination against men who worked for the shorter hours. The company stated that it had no feeling in the matter.

Demands 7, 8, and 9 were on the hiring of men who were discharged as agitators. The company replied that the men would have to make application in the usual way, and their applications would be considered.

The company refused to allow the raising of a grievance committee and insisted upon an open shop. The meeting agreed not to quibble over that.

The last demand was for the withdrawal of the profit-sharing plan. Agreed to.

William H. Johnston, resident of the International Association of Machinists, was present at the mass meeting. He congratulated the men on their victory and predicted that it would be general in the city and throughout New England in a short time.

President Johnston will leave tomorrow for New York. He said he had authorised, over the long-distance telephone tonight, strikes tomorrow at the plants of the Spicer Company in Plainfield, N. J.; the Sturtevant Blower Company in Hyde Park, Mass., and the Becker Milling Company, also in Hyde Park.

An agreement has been reached between Carl Sleman, receiver for the E. P. K. Pressed Metal Company here, and the men who went out on strike last Monday, whereby the men are to receive the eight-hour day.

There is no change in the situation at the plant of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, where seventy machinists walked out Wednesday afternoon after their demands for an increase in wages had been denied.

At a meeting of the Central Labor Union this afternoon steps were taken toward inducing the Common Council to impeach Mayor Wilson, who is also Lieutenant Governor of the State, for his action in having three labor agitators arrested when they attempted to address the workmen at the Locomobile factory.

FOSS REJECTS ARBITRATION.

Becker Plant Strike Result of Intimidation, ex-Governor Says.

BOSTON, Aug. 12.—Ex-Governor Foss tonight declined the offer of the State Board of Conciliation and Arbitration, which tendered its services toward settling the strike of employes of the Becker Milling Machine Company. In a letter to the board Mr. Foss, as President of the company, said:

"A large proportion of the employes who have left their places have been induced to do so by intimidation, and between the employes and their employer no controversy exists which requires the intervention of a third party. What the circumstances demand, rather, is the discontinuance of the activities of certain forces that have come between the parties."

ANSONIA MACHINISTS STRIKE.

Employes at Farrell Plant Demand the Nine-Hour Day.

ANSONIA, Conn., Aug. 12. — The threatened strike of machinists at the Farrell Foundry and Machine Company's plant here materialized late today, when 120 workmen threw down their tools. The men demand a nine-hour day, with a half-day on Saturdays, besides other concessions. The strikers declined to make any statement. The company issued a statement, in part as follows:

"In view of the fact that our competitors, both in the West and the East and particularly in the West, are working substantially on our present schedule, the company does not see how it can change the present schedule of hours. The company has voluntarily reduced the schedule from 55 to 54 hours per week, paying the same for 54 as they formerly paid for 55 hours, and in addition has granted substantial wage advances to its employes.

"The company is not opposed to a shorter work day and stands ready to make a still further reduction in hours when it becomes general among those concerns doing the same line of work, but can make no further concessions at the present time."

The company employs 900 hands, and the machinists assert that the strike eventually will spread to the whole plant. It is said that only five per cent. of the work now being done is for the manufacture of machinery for the making of war munitions.

STRIKE AT WOONSOCKET.

Taft-Pierce Toolmakers Want Shorter Day and Larger Pay.

WOONSOCKET, R. I., Aug. 12.—Three hundred employes of the Taft-Pierce Manufacturing Company, most of them machinists, struck today for shorter hours and a 25 per cent. increase in wages. The strikers numbered a third of the force. The company manufactures machines and tools.

The demands of the strikers were laid before R. W. Reid, manager of the plant, in the absence in Europe of General Manager Frederick S. Blackall. Mr. Reid told the strike committee that for any agreements they must await the return of Mr. Blackall. He is expected Sunday. The plant was closed for the rest of the week.

HITS AMBULANCE SURGEON.

Father of Injured Girl Did Not Want Her Taken to Hospital.

Helen Foley, 20 years old, who had been suffering for hours from an ulcerated tooth, walked out of the window of her room on the third floor at 338 West Eighteenth Street and fell three stories to the sidewalk, breaking her left leg and sustaining serious internal injuries.

When Dr. Johnson arriveyd from New York Hospital the girl's father, a saloonkeeper, would not permit the injured girl to be removed. Dr. Johnson said that Foley attacked him and knocked him downstairs. Foley was taken to the West Twentieth Street Station and his daughter was later removed to St. Vincent's Hospital. Dr. Johnson withdrew the charge of assault which he had made against Foley, who was released after Magistrate Cobb in Jefferson Market Court had denounced his act.

McLOUGHLIN AND DAWSON SEABRIGHT TENNIS VICTORS

CALIFORNIANS WIN SEABRIGHT DOUBLES

SEABRIGHT, N. J., Aug. 12.—The West again triumphed over the East in tennis today. Maurice E. McLoughlin, who made tennis famous, and his latest Western discovery, Ward Dawson, took three straight sets from the New York team, Leonard Beekman and Lyle E. Mahan, in the final doubles match for the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club cups on the club's courts here. It was only at rare intervals that the local players got very near making it uncomfortable for the invaders.

Both McLoughlin and Dawson seemed to be taking things rather easy during the first and second sets. Their opponents braced up in the third set, however, and made it a deuce score before their hopes were finally ended. The heavy pounding and scientific placing of the big fellow, Mahan, was one of the features of the match. But Mahan, 6 feet 3 in height and by no means a shadow, couldn't move fast enough to get in these stiff blows often, and most of the time the Westerners seemed to be just practicing up for later conquests. The point score:

FIRST SET.

McLoughlin and Dawson	5	4	3	7	4	4	4	2	5	6	8—6
Beekman and Mahan	3	2	5	5	0	6	1	4	3	2	9—3

SECOND SET.

McLoughlin & Dawson	8	4	7	6	3	4	3	4	4	5	8—6
Beekman and Mahan	10	2	5	8	5	1	5	2	0	3	6—4

THIRD SET.

McLoughlin & Dawson	1	4	1	4	4	4	3	3	2	4	2	4—8
Beekman & Mahan	4	2	4	2	0	1	5	5	4	1	4	1—6

But though it was the end of the doubles series, the singles, which had reached their semi-finals stage today, attracted more attention. And it was the singles that brought out some of the classiest tennis playing that has been seen here. As a result, McLoughlin will be pitted against Karl H. Behr—again the West against the East—in the singles finals for the Achelis Challenge Cup tomorrow. The winner will play R. Norris Williams, the national champion and holder of the Achelis Cup, on Saturday, bringing this tournament, one of the American classics, to an end.

Today's big sensation was the playing of Nathaniel W. Niles of Boston, who is considered by many as New England's foremost tennis player. He gave McLoughlin, ranked as the world's champion, a hard run.

McLoughlin began his game with Niles with confidence sticking out all over his playing. He started to serve with that "awful bore, these preliminary games," air, and during this first game nothing happened to alarm him very much. He made four points, and admired the landscape while the studious-looking fellow across the way was permitted to make two. Then the studious-looking fellow commenced to serve, and he had not got more than a couple of balls across the net before the spectators commenced to sit up and take notice. So did McLoughlin. The balls zipped across the net and right into the marked-off rectangle any way. Moreover, they showed signs of a proclivity to zip where McLoughlin was absent.

Mac got most or them back, but they had been so well placed that he didn't seem able to guide them to the vulnerable spots opposite. The game reached deuce, and the grand stand commenced to wonder what this Boston man had up his sleeve. Mac commenced to limber up with each stroke, but every time he made a point the Boston man followed suit. It reached deuce three more times; then the Boston man got the advantage and—the spectators gasped—won the game.

R. Norris Williams, 2nd, the present holder of the Achelis Cup and the national champion, had come to the courts to look on. He suddenly perked up and shifted his attention from the Californian to Niles. Williams will have to play the winner of the tournament on Saturday.

Another surprise came in the third game. Niles scored the first two points and Mac commenced to look worried. Then Mac succeeded in placing one a few inches beyond Niles's racquet, and Niles knocked the next one out, but only an inch or so, making it 30 all. Mac brought his 42-centimeter serve into play. Niles sent the ball back with the speed of a bullet, and the surprised Mac made a powerful swing at it. The ball landed amidships in the net and the Californian was behind again. A couple of points later in the same game the Westerner knocked one into Monmouth County—the report that it reached Sandy Hook was not confirmed—and a murmur of comment began the rounds of the grand stand that the Californian was about to lose. McLoughlin won this game after it had reached deuce five times.

Niles still had a lot of things he hadn't shown. He served an ace in the fourth game and McLoughlin fanned at it ineffectively. Niles chased Mac from side to side on his court. By pretty placing after making McLoughlin break the short sprint records to the opposite side of the court, Niles kept the spectators gasping while he won point after point. Deuce was reached six times. Then Niles won the game and the score was 2 all.

In this neck-and-neck fashion the race for the first set and the potent psychological effect each player knew its outcome would have gone on. Each won his serve until the ninth game. Comments were going the rounds that McLoughlin was having his hardest fight for a long while. Volleys featured every game, and Niles infringed frequently on the Californian's copyright of the title "Comet."

With the score in games four all, Niles proved a deliberate iconoclast. It was unbelievable that, at such a critical moment, anybody would think of winning McLoughlin's own serve. Niles made the first point on that tricky let ball. Mac had the best intentions on the second serve, and his return would have been a wonder—if it hadn't landed in the net. Niles took a long breath and slammed back a serve that sizzled; and Mac punished the net again. That serve again—Mac avoided the net this time carefully—when Niles sent the ball whizzing back to him. It went way out of bounds, and Niles had added insult to injury by making it a love game.

But Niles lost his own serve on the game that would have given him the set, and it was five all. On the faces of the spectators could be seen that Polo Ground expression in the ninth inning with the home team one behind, three on base, &c., &c. It went to six all; then McLoughlin's advantage—then something happened to Niles's playing. He knocked one out an inch, the next two considerably further. Stage fright or something—he afterward told a friend that suddenly he realized an awful thing, that he was up against the best tennis player in the world—Niles made only one point in this, the most critical game.

The second set was not so important. Niles won a couple of games, but the spectators felt that he was doomed, and such feelings are contagious. Deuce sets were rare, and McLoughlin, in top form, was too much for Niles.

The "Teddy Bear" match between T. R. Pell and Karl H. Behr was interesting, but came out as anticipated, Behr winning, 6—1, 6—3. Behr played in excellent style. So did Pell, who made effective use of the back-hand strokes for which he is famous. At the end of the games Pell prophesied that Mr. McLoughlin would have quite a job on his hands when he plays Mr. Behr of New York tomorrow in the final.

Point score of the McLoughlin-Niles match. First set:

Maine Tennis Reaches Finals.

Special to The New York Times.

BAR HARBOR, Me., Aug. 12.—The semi-finals of the men's doubles for the State tennis championship at Bar Harbor today left Edgar Scott and J. Brooke of Philadelphia to play Richard Harte of Philadelphia and J. R. Carpenter of New York in the finals. But one match was played, Louis B. McCagg, Jr., and John J. Emery of New York defaulting to Harte and Carpenter. Scott and Brooke defeated J. T. Bowen and Allister McCormick, the singles champion and runner-up, in straight sets, 7—5, 6—3.

No Smoking at Tennis Matches.

Because of the recommendations of Fire Commissioner Adamson, notices as to the strict enforcement of a "no smoking" rule were enclosed with the tickets to subscribers for the National Lawn Tennis Championship tournament. Several thousand of the tickets were mailed yesterday for the matches which will begin Monday, Aug. 30, on the turf courts of the West Side Tennis Club, at Forest Hills, L. I. The tickets are marked for ten days of competitive matches as Robert D. Wrenn, referee of the tournament, expects to complete the meeting within that time.

Mrs. Loew and Craig Biddle Win.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 12.—The final round of mixed tennis doubles was played this morning at the Casino by Mrs. W. Goadby Loew and Craig Biddle, who defeated Mrs. Harold Minot and Oliver Perrin by the score of 7—5, 6—3, 6—4. The final round in mixed doubles for cups given by Clarence W. Dolan will be played Saturday between Mrs. Barger-Wallach and Craig Biddle and Mrs. J. Gordon Douglas and William T. Burden.

FAST TENNIS AT WOODMERE.

Miss Handy and Mrs. Pouch Defeat Miss Cassel and Mrs. Weaver.

In one of the best contested matches of the tournament Miss Edith Handy and Mrs. William H. Pouch eliminated Miss Clare Cassel and Mrs. S. F. Weaver in the semi-final round of the Long Island women's doubles tennis championship yesterday on the courts of the Woodmere Club at Woodmere, Long Island. The contest was marked by stirring rallies and fast racquet work, but the superior speed and steadiness of Miss Handy and Mrs. Pouch enabled them to capture a three-set match at 6—4, 4—6, 6—3. Only one other match was played, in which Mrs. H. Carlsbach and Miss Eva Garson won from Miss Unger and Miss Hirsch at 7—5, 3—6, 6—3.

Before the first set was well under way it was seen that the match would be a lively one. The winning combination developed a fine mixture of the baseline driving game, as opposed to a fairly well sustained net attack. In addition Miss Handy and Mrs. Pouch showed more versatility in attack and seldom failed to find the openings. It was not a brilliant contest, as the opposing pairs conducted their campaigns along the lines of consistent steadiness rather than flights of the spectacular. From a tennis standpoint it was an interesting display, and brought out the resources of all four players, who are among the best fifteen in the country. Miss Handy and Mrs. Pouch captured the first set at 6—4, but dropped the second at 4—6. The splendid defense of Miss Cassel and Mrs. Weaver weakened and their opponents were not troubled in the third set.

With favorable weather it is expected that the semi-final rounds of both singles and doubles will be completed this afternoon, which will enable the club to stage both finals—and end the tournament tomorrow. The summary:

Long Island Championship, Women's Doubles.
—Second Round—Mrs. H. Carlsbach and Miss Eva Garson defeated Miss Unger and Miss Hirsch, 7—5, 3—6, 6—3.
Semi-Final Round—Miss Edith Handy and Mrs. William H. Pouch defeated Miss Clare Cassel and Mrs. S. F. Weaver, 6—4, 4—6, 6—3.

PAWLING A CANDIDATE.

Philadelphian Again Seeks Presidency of Amateur Athletic Union.

Since announcement was made recently that William Humphreys of the Olympic Club, San Francisco, had become a popular choice for president of the Amateur Athletic Union, friends of George F. Pawling of the Middle Atlantic Association suggested the election of the Eastern man. For a number of years Mr. Pawling, who has five terms, has been a candidate for the highest position the governing body of amateur athletics has to offer, but each year his candidacy has been turned down by the delegates to the annual A. A. U. conventions. When Alfred J. Lill of Boston, the retiring President, was first elected two years ago, Mr. Pawling was his opponent, and it was thought that he would receive precedence over all other candidates at the election this year.

It is the custom of the Amateur Union to give its chief executive a two-year term. Last year Pawling was the choice for the first vice presidency, but he resigned in favor of John Elliot, President of the Pacific Association, under whose jurisdiction the national championships of the Amateur Athletic Union were contested this year. In the reports from San Francisco it was said that Mr. Humphreys had the support of all the delegates who attended the track and field championships, but Pawling's friends are counting on the Central Association, the South Atlantic Association, the Southern Association, and the Middle Atlantic Association to support his candidacy.

Western Tennis Postponed Again.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Another postponement in the national tennis doubles preliminaries was announced today, owing to rain and water-soaked courts.

INVADER SAILS TO VICTORY.

Gilbert Douglas's New Racing Yacht Takes Queen of the Bay Cup.

Special to The New York Times.

SAYVILLE, L. I., Aug. 12.—The new racing yacht Invader, built this year by Gilbert Douglas of Bellport Bay to win the Queen of the Bay Cup, accomplished her object off here today, in the second regatta of the annual cruise of the Great South Bay Yacht Racing Association. The race was held under the auspices of the South Side Yacht Club. It was contested in a snappy, wholesail breeze from the southeast over a course made up of a broad reach in the port tack, a beat, and a close reach home. All the yachts sailed the course twice and made excellent time under almost perfect racing conditions.

Invader sailed in the Q class, capturing the prize in that division with ease. The new boat also was the winner of the Spuadron run from Babylon to this port, which was held this morning. There was a cup offered for motor boats in the port to port race. Owing to the absence of measurements, the winner was not announced.

The race this afternoon saw the first reappearance of the famous lulip one-design class in several years. Three of the yachts raced, the winner being Bobs, the property of Allan Pinkerton. The winner in the other divisions were: Alva in class P; Dolphin, among the Moriches Cats; Miladi, in the Bellport Bay one-design class; Adelaide, among the Bellport Bay Cats; Wenonah, among the Unqua one-design craft; Margaret, among the class V Cats; Taffy, in class F; Osprey, in Point o'Woods one-design class.

H. L. Walker High in Archery.

Elmer of Wayne, Penn., the present holder of the championship, was second, with 618. In the women's double national round, Miss Cynthia Weston of Bryn Mawr, Penn., was again out in front with the highest score.

MAMAUX SHUTS OUT GIANTS WITH THREE HITS—YANKEES DEFEATED BY CLEVELAND—TURF

PIRATES STRAIGHTEN BIG JEFF'S CURVES

Matty, Cheered by Pittsburgh Fans, Takes Mound When the Game Is Lost.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 12.—Al Mamaux, the Pirates' pitching sensation, baffled the Giants again today as he has on other occasions this year. The McGraw forces were shutout, 4 to 0. The young phenomenon was at his best and fanned the first three Giants who faced him. He permitted only three hits, two of these being made by Hans Lobert, who is a former neighbor of the young pitcher.

Jeff Tesreau started the Giants off badly and was in trouble several times before Mathewson relieved him in the sixth inning. This was Matty's birthday, but Big Six was unable to pull out a victory after so much damage had been done to Big Jeff. Mathewson usually wins his birthday games and the last time he lost an anniversary contest was in 1912 to the Cardinals. Matty is 36 years old.

Lobert was the only Giant to get beyond first base and he reached third in the eighth inning when he tore off a single to center. Brainerd was tossed out by Mamaux and after Meyers had gone out to Collins, Babbington, batting in place of Mathewson, crashed a liner to left which sent Lobert to third. If Wagner hadn't checked the ball in its flight, Lobert would have counted.

Tesreau was in distress five minutes after the game began. He tried to stop a bounder off Costello's bat, but simply deflected the flight of the ball and made a hit of it. A double play, however, relieved Jeff considerably.

In the second inning the big fellow was pounded, the Pirates getting four hits and scoring two runs. Hinchman hit for a single and Wagner rapped to left for a double, Hinchman winding up at third. Viox caused a lull by hitting to Brainerd, and in the race to the first bag the Giant beat the Pirate by a step. On the out Hinchman crossed the plate and Wagner got to third. Baird singled to right, scoring Wagner. Gibson followed with a single to left, sending Baird to second. A moment later Baird was caught napping at second by Tesreau, who threw to Fletcher.

Nobody expected to see Big Jeff in action in the third inning, but he was there, and not a Pirate got to first base. In the fifth, however, he was again hit hard. Baird, the first man, doubled to left. Burns touched the ball, but Snodgrass threw the disorganizer out. Gibson sent a fly to Merkle and Baird went to third. Mamaux also hit a long one to Merkle and Baird scored.

When the Pirates took their turn at bat in the sixth inning Mathewson went to the mound. The reception he got must have pleased the veteran New York pitcher. It was not unanimous, but the cheering when the first glimpse was caught of him and lasted until he pitched the first ball to Collins. Three hits were made off Matty and they came in succession in the seventh inning. Baird, with one out, singled, went to third on a hit by Gibson, and scored on a safety by Mamaux. It began to look bad for "Matty," but Costello flied to Snodgrass and Brainerd made a hair-raising catch of Collins's liner, which was on its way over the first baseman's head. Brainerd jumped into the air and stopped the ball with his gloved hand. When he came to earth the ball hopped away, but he stuck out his bare hand and grabbed it. The score:

Cubs Get Busy in Thirteenth.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 12.—Chicago opened its series here with a see-saw contest, which it took from St. Louis in the thirteenth inning, 6 to 3. St. Louis scored in the first inning. The visitors forged ahead in its eighth on Schulte's homer to the right field bleachers, and Bescher later repeated S Schulte's performance, tying the score for St. Louis in a series of singles in the thirteenth brought in Murray. Fisher and Schulte with the winning runs. Victor Saier, who has been nursing injuries for three weeks, returned to the game as a regular today and helped Chicago to a victory by making fifteen put-outs at the first sack. Score:

OARSMEN AT SPRINGFIELD.

One Hundred Practice on River for National Regatta Today.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 12.—The sport of rowing brought 100 of the best oarsmen in this country and Canada to this city today for the Forty-third National Regatta of the Amateur Association of the United States. Fourteen events will be rowed on the Connecticut River four miles below the city during the next two days, with seven races each day.

The race for the championship in single sculls on the final day, when Robert G. Dibble of the Don Rowing Club of Toronto will defend his title, won last year at Philadelphia, and the performances of the Duluth oarsmen who have come east thirty strong in the hope of excepting the river, will be of special interest.

The races will begin at 3 o'clock each afternoon, with a half hour interval between the starts. Intermediate races for single and double sculls and four-oared shells, a junior race for eights and senior races for double sculls, four-oared shells and single scull dashes will be held tomorrow. The other senior events and championships will be rowed on Saturday.

All the visiting oarsmen were on the river today, although bothered some by a stiff breeze upstream during the afternoon.

Decatur Players for Browns.

DECATUR, Ill., Aug. 12.—With the disbandment of the Decatur Three I League team today, due to inability of the management to weather an unsuccessful season, Pitchers McCabe and Kirmayer and Catcher O'Brien were ordered to report to the St. Louis Americans, the three men having been sold. All of the other players have been offered berths on either Three I or Central League teams.

The players have eight days' pay due them, and members of the team today wired Secretary Farrell of the National Association to ascertain if they could hold the league or the former owners of the team for their salaries.

Umpire Forfeits Game to Lewiston.

FITCHBURG, Mass., Aug. 12.—Upon receipt of a telegram from President Murnane of the New England League, officially suspending pitcher Pennington of the local team, Umpire Aubrey stopped the game with Lewiston today in the sixth inning, when Fitchburg had a lead of 6 to 0 and declared it forfeited to the visitors 9 to 0. The league officials claimed that Pennington had been ordered to report to the Lawrence team, which had loaned him to Fitchburg.

Red Sox Send Pennock to Minors.

BOSTON, Aug. 12.—The release of Herbert Pennock, the Boston American pitcher, formerly of the Athletics, to the Providence Club of the International League was announced by President Lannin of the Red Sox tonight. Pennock had not pitched a full game since Boston bought him, two months ago. As President of the Providence Club, Mr. Lannin announced the sale of Pitcher Ralph Comstock to the Cincinnati Nationals.

YANKEES' PITCHING JUST SUITS INDIANS

Warhop and Shawkey Driven to Bench—New York Rally Comes Too Late.

By the time the Yankees decided to get started against the Clevelands at the Polo Grounds yesterday, Cleveland already had all the runs they needed for one afternoon. The Yanks lost, 6 to 4. That's pretty good for the Yankees, when you take into consideration that they didn't start real play until the seventh inning and continued it only through the eighth. Sometimes they can play the eighth inning just as well as any club in the league.

A batting rally which drove Walker out of the box gave Donovan's men a look-in in the eighth, but they nonchalantly tossed away a good chance to raise a little havoc in the ninth. On the bases the Yankees were not what you could exactly call smart. They get plenty of runners on the paths, but then they have a weird habit of thinking with a reverse English.

In the ninth inning Birdie Cree made a futile dash for the plate and was out by about half a block. Alexander was on first base in the seventh inning, but went aimlessly past second when Ray Caldwell noisted a foul near first base. Alexander was doubled up, which spoiled a promising rally.

Donovan rehearsed a lot of pitchers, but none of them suited, so the boss went in himself and got everybody all excited by striking out two men in a row.

Joe Jackson, the Dixie mauler, added a touch of emotion to the proceedings by banging a home run into the right-field stands, which produced two runs. Wille doubled in the first inning and took third on Evans's sacrifice. He scored on Chapman's sacrifice fly. In the third, with two out, Chapman singled, and went home when Jackson sent his homer into the upper tier of the right-field grandstand.

Jack Warhop got into so much trouble in the fourth that he had to be rudely dislodged in favor of Bob Shawkey, who wasn't much better than his predecessor. Smith singled in this round and stole second. Wambsganss struck out and Egan popped to Peckinpaugh. Walker singled through the box, scoring Smith, and Wille was safe when Doc Cook made a mess of his fly. Doc can keep out of the way of a fly ball longer than any player on the circuit. Evans tapped a single to left and scored Walker. Chapman walked, filling the bases. That was the end of Warhop, and then Shawkey faced Joe Jackson with the bases loaded. Jackson sent a stinger right at Fritz Maisel, who threw him out at first base. Kirke walked in the fifth, went to third on Smith's single, Smith taking second on High's fumble. Walker's single sent Kirke home.

The Yankees could do nothing against Walker until the seventh, when Cook drew a pass and counted on Hartzell's double. Bevons walked and Alexander forced him at second. Caldwell, batting for Shawkey, hoisted a foul to Kirke, and Alexander was doubled before he could get back to first base.

In the eighth a flock of hits drove Walker out of the box. High doubled and Peck fouled to Egan. Maisel singled and scored High. Pipp singled and Chapman's wild toss to first base advanced the runners a sack each. Maisel scored on Cook's out at first base. Hartzell got a pass and Boone's smash sent Pipp home. Caldwell succeeded Walker and Alexander fanned. The score:

Nicholls Goes to Great Neck.

Gilbert Nicholls, the metropolitan open golf champion, will soon become the professional for the Great Neck Golf Club at a salary said to be greater than that of any other professional. Negotiations have been going on for several weeks between the club governors and the title holder, who always has aspired to a green in the metropolitan district and never has had one.

It is understood that Nicholls will have plenty of time to continue his brilliant playing and, as usual, will take part in the country's leading competitions. There is talk of Wilfred Reid, who recently resigned as the Seaview "pro," succeeding Nicholls in the position at Wilmington, Del.

Nicholls will go to Glen Oak, near Chicago, late this week to prepare for the Western open championship there on Wednesday and Thursday in the hope of annexing another title ere he comes here.

Play Tennis on Roller Skates.

Indoor tennis on roller skates is the latest sport that has arrived for a trial in New York. It received its first test last night at the Brighton Beach Roller Rink, where two matches—one a single and the other a double—were contested. Tennis was never meant to be played on skates, but so adept at skating were the contestants in these odd matches that the games were made fairly interesting and some good shots were executed. Only one set was played in each match. A regulation indoor tennis court was used, and in the opening match Lee Woodruff, a local professional roller skater, triumphed over Myron A. Finke, manager of the Brighton Rink, by the score of 6 to 4. In the mixed doubles Finke, teamed with Miss Claire Elroy, defeated Woodruff, who was paired with Miss Zoe Elroy. The score in this exhibition was 6 to 4. Ball-bearing skates were used by all four players.

Schwab Beats Par Golf.

Charles M. Schwab and E. A. Grace played at Spring Lake the other day against George H. Bowly and Frederick W. Gerken, who acted as host. The first-named pair won the match by 1 up. Schwab was particularly helpful on the short ninth hole, par 3, where he recorded a 2.

VICTORY FOR BROOKFEDS.

Capture Twelve-Inning Game from Kansas City by 3 to 2.

The Brookfeds won another game from Kansas City yesterday afternoon at Washington Park in a battle that went twelve innings to a decision of 3 to 2. It was one of Brooklyn's unusual moments and the men played well. They were graduated from the class of the disinterested into an animated team and there were many interesting incidents for the 1,000 people who witnessed the struggle.

President Gilmore was there, too, and said the Feds were not looking for any astonishing results because of the cut rate baseball. Conversely there must have been a big surprise for the Fed President because of the showing in Newark the first day of the innovation.

In yesterday's game it was timely hitting that won for the Magee men. Until the sixth they were behind, in fact had not scored a run, and then the willows began to find a solution for Mains's curves. There were three doubles which accounted for two runs, enough to bring the score to a tie. After that disastrous session Mains held his opponents safely until the game progressed to the last half of the twelfth inning. Fred Smith opened hostilities with a three-bagger that hummed along the left field foul line. Land and Bradley, the latter batting for Marion, failed to help the runner, but Anderson cut loose a sharp rap that was too hot for Perring to handle and Smith came to the plate with the winning tally. Mann's Hitting Wins for Chifeds.

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 12.—Leslie Mann's hitting kept Newark from taking first place in the Federal League race today. In the seventh his single tied the score and in the ninth he tripled and counted on a squeeze play, when Hanford, batting for Hauser, bunted safely. Hauser, the former St. Louis National outfielder, made his first appearance for the Whales at shortstop and seemed to have lost none of his old skill in the field. He walked once. The score:

Burk Hearing Goes Over.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 12.—The temporary injunction restraining the Pittsburgh Federal League Baseball Club from either employing or playing Sanford Burk, the pitcher who jumped from the Indianapolis American Association Club, was continued late today by Judge Ambrose B. Reid in the Court of Common Pleas, until a final hearing is held in the case. No date for the hearing has been announced, but it was said the case would not be resumed until October. The temporary injunction was granted upon a petition filed by counsel for the Indiana team. Indianapolis officials of the Indianapolis Club said later that he had received offers for a settlement of the case, but these had been ignored and the case would be fought to a finish.

RESOLUTE'S SEASON ENDS.

Cup Defender Wins 18 of 20 Races with Vanitie This Year.

Special to The New York Times.

BRISTOL, R. I., Aug. 12.—The racing sloop Resolute, in tow of a tug and accompanied by her tender, the schooner yacht Queen, arrived this evening from Marblehead, where she finished a series of races with Vanitie the New York Yacht Club cruise. Resolute is to be laid up for the season, Manager Robert W. Emmons stating that the sloop's record of eighteen races to her credit over Vanitie out of twenty starts, was enough to place her out of commission. It is said at the Herreshoffs that Resolute is tentatively selected to race against Lipton's Shamrock, but Mr. Emmons said he has not heard a word about a selection. Resolute won in two seasons twenty-seven races out of thirty-four starts.

Motordrome Races Postponed.

Rain caused the postponement of the match race between Arthur Chapple, the world's champion, and Fred Luther, the Western title holder, at the Brighton Beach motordrome last night. The remainder of the program was called off also. Luther will make his motordrome debut as a competitor tomorrow night, when, with Chapple, he will start from scratch in a twenty-mile handicap race, the longest event of its kind ever staged in the East. Chapple and Luther will give handicaps of two miles to their five opponents, who will be George Sperl of Brooklyn, Bill Brown of Newark, George Hamilton of

PROGRESS IN RATE REGULATION.

The opinions in the Western rate case show that the Interstate Commerce Commission is divided upon the principles of regulation much as the Supreme Court was upon the anti-trust law. In one of the earliest cases Justice WHITE propounded the rule of reason principle, which the court repeatedly rejected. After a decade of the court's insistence upon the rule of unreason, Mr. WHITE, then Chief Justice, had the satisfaction of declaring as the opinion of the court the rule which now is unassailable law. In like manner, in the Western rate case, the minority propounds the rule of reason in rate regulation, and the majority is left floundering amid errors of idealism. All theoretical reformers are convinced that rates should be based upon valuation. That is the main point of the majority decision, although it admits that it does not know what the values are and although it propounds several rates of return upon several valuations.

It is well that the commission did not commit itself to any one valuation or any one rate, for the opinion then would be untenable. The valuation per mile of forty-one railways cannot be similar except by chance, and the commission is limited to a single rate. It is not possible to fix a rate for an individual railway without upsetting the business of all other railways. There is no thoroughfare for reasonable rate regulation along that line. It is as unreasonable and as certain to be upset by facts and events as the early anti-trust decisions. Also, altogether apart from the reasonableness of rates is efficiency of operation. The inefficiently managed railway pays a penalty apart from any that the commission can impose, and severer. For the commission to fix any rate with reference to misconduct of railway managers is to punish other railways and shippers rather than the offender. Reasonableness of rates is one thing and is the commission's business. Reasonableness of profits is another thing and is not the commission's business. The commission learned that profits were beyond its regulation when it succumbed to the proof that the railways were suffering beyond other industrial enterprises, and that money could not be attracted into them. In that respect the majority of the commission is confronted with facts inconsistent with its theories.

The meat of the decision is in the views of the minority, as in the anti-trust litigation. Commissioner DANIELS bluntly charges the minority with dodging its responsibility in acting upon previous decisions. This is the fourth general rate case. The commission felt compelled in the third case to alter the decisions in the first two cases. In the fourth case the record and proof were stronger than in any of the others, yet the allowance of advanced rates was grudging and inadequate. He said "the general issue "simply is not met, and in passing "upon particular rates proposed to be "increased a novel doctrine is for the "first time evoked, to disallow increased rates save where the specific "evidence relating thereto makes a "refusal manifestly impossible." And again:

> If we are to acknowledge in general what we are compelled to admit in detail, just and reasonable increased rates should be permitted, not grudgingly, but with such fair measure of allowance as will indicate that the transportation industry is entitled, in the interest of the public, to earnings sufficient to provide a service commensurate with public needs.

Commissioner HARLAN struck a different and equally timely note. In his opinion, the commission took too much trouble over the rate contests. Results should be reached more promptly. He said: "The sincere efforts of "carriers toward a fair and nondiscriminatory rate adjustment often "fail because of the necessity of submitting to the rates and practices "initiated by weaker and more circuitous lines in their pursuit of traffic." In other words, railway competition is too severe, and the commission is embarrassed by the necessity either of fixing a rate which should wipe out the weak roads or of allowing profits to strong roads repugnant to its theories of rate regulation. Nothing is clearer than that the arguments of the minority must prevail, because facts and reason are with it. No matter how strong is the sympathy of the majority for the people, no matter how ideal its theories may be, practical considerations must control rate regulation as they controlled the trust question. Thrice the Supreme Court declared that it had nothing to do with practical considerations and that the last letter of the law should be enforced, whatever the ruin. That is now the position of the majority in deciding that the roads are entitled to increased rates, and yet allowing only about a quarter of them. The majority acted as though it thought that this was the last word to be spoken on the question. On the contrary, the commission forthwith will be faced with the necessity of considering action upon an increase of passenger rates, to which it has committed itself in advance. On the whole, the rate regulation question was never in a more hopeful phase. The precise allowance in this particular case is a matter of minor concern.

THE GOLD IMPORT.

No doubt the import of gold and securities was strictly necessary, under present conditions. Yet it is to be regretted in the sense that it postpones the proposal to institute an international clearing house, in which debits and credits should be balanced, and only the difference moved from one country to another. How useless and inefficient was the transfer of a hundred millions gold to Ottawa, only now to start a like movement back again. But our English creditors would not trust us, or accept anything but gold, and now must pay gold themselves, an embarrassment greater for them than for us. How strangely now reads the report of Mr. CORTELYOU when Secretary of the Treasury: "In the present advanced "state of public faith and financial "responsibility there is apparently no "serious objection" to an agreement for the establishment of an international gold certificate, which might be transferred from country to country while the gold lay still, being payable in all countries. The Secretary's argument in favor of the proposal is the reason why it is impossible. Nothing could be more solemn and binding than the treaty which was broken as matter of necessity, and whose breaking has put half the world in arms. The wrecking of faith between man and man, between nation and nation, is such an overwhelming calamity that the removal of a mere financial inconvenience, the death of a piece of financial idealism, is swallowed up in the greater misfortune. It is only a sample of what is occurring in the way of the substitution of distrust for confidence throughout the world.

THE BEGINNINGS OF RESPONSIBLE STATE GOVERNMENT.

The proposed Article V. of the State Constitution, reported to the convention by the Committee on Governor and Other State Officers, of which Mr. F. C. TANNER is Chairman, is a good plan, so far as it goes, for the creation of a responsible, visible, accountable State Government. It is to be regretted that the short ballot, providing for the election of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor only, has been weakened into the shorter ballot, whereby the Attorney General and the Controller continue to be elective officers. There is no faintest penumbra of public reason why the Attorney General, head of the Department of Justice, and the Controller, head of the Department of Audit and Control, should not be appointed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and removable by him at his discretion, just as is provided in the case of the Secretary of State. Why should there be two elective heads of departments, removable only by impeachment or by vote of two-thirds of the Senate upon the Governor's recommendation, giving his reasons?

The Secretary of State, the Treasurer, the State Engineer and Surveyor, they, it seems, have not, save in the eyes of Tammany and Republican patriots of the Brackett and Quigg brand, defenders of the ancient "bulwarks" and "traditions" of office jobbing, the curious, sacred character that, even to the eyes of Mr. TANNER'S committee, still enshrines the Attorney General and the Controller, pared of his power as the latter dignitary would be as head of the Department of Audit and Control. It may be necessary to bow to the philosophy of the half loaf, and compromise is perhaps inevitable in political bodies and among Constitution makers. Let us praise Mr. TANNER and the majority of his committee for so much as they have had the courage to propose. They permit two anomalies, two irresponsibilities, the Department of Justice and the Department of Audit and Control. There they leave that Venezuelan State Government, which, according to Mr. ROOT, has prevailed in New York for forty years; and he might have gone further back.

On the other hand, looking beyond these two relics of the spoils régime, we find a comprehensive, orderly plan for a reorganized, rearranged, coordinated Government. The heads of four departments—Education, Public Utilities, comprising the two Public Service Commissions; Conservation, Civil Service—while appointed by and responsible to the Governor, have in various degrees not only administrative, but regulative, in a sense judicial, or legislative, duties. Purely administrative are the nine civil executive departments—State, which will supervise elections; Taxation and Finance, presided over by the Treasurer, and in which the Board of Taxes and Assessments is swallowed up; Public Works, supervising the canals and highways and embracing the functions now distributed among the State Architect, State Engineer and Surveyor, Superintendent of Public Works, and Superintendent of Public Buildings; Health, Agriculture, Charities and Correction, including under one control hospitals, eleemosynary and penal institutions; Banking, Insurance, Labor and Industry. Nine departments; nine secretaries, so to speak, the Governor's Cabinet, his appointees, removable by him and also by impeachment.

Here is the promise of co-operation, of a steady, intelligent, understood, and carefully matched general executive policy and action, "team work," as Mr. WILSON would say. The blind, haphazard, scatter-brained present want of system looks pitiful enough compared with this well-ordered plan.

To collect in thirteen executive departments 152 existing departments, commissions, and what not should be a great work of simplification, efficiency, and economy. Give the Governor the initiative in budget making; lay on him the responsibility, absolute except as to the two surrenders to hunkerism in the case of two State officers: then the State will have a Government which can be seen, and the blame or the praise of which will rest immediately and inescapably on one man.

THE MEN AT PLATTSBURG.

Many of the men in camp at Plattsburg have performed services of varying kinds to their country, but few of them have performed greater service than they are performing now. It was evident from the first that in taking this means of calling the country's attention to the need of preparedness and the duty of the citizen, they were doing a good work; but the people have now to commend them also for the way they are doing it. All the accounts agree that they are going at their work seriously and with enthusiasm, and are doing their daily tasks as thoroughly and conscientiously as if it meant dollars in their pockets or political office.

It is a needed lesson, in this era of false sentiment, counterfeit humanitarianism, and disguised disloyalty. As soon as possible men should get out of their heads the idea that it is for them to decide whether they will serve their country or not. "This talk of a volunteer army is all foolishness," said General WOOD to the Plattsburg campers. "There is "no such thing as volunteer service. Every citizen owes an obligatory service to his country." He was talking facts and he was talking law; he was not talking theories or figures of speech. There are too many people saying, with a grand air of patronizing their country, "I would "enlist in such-and-such a cause, but "not in such a one." They will do whatever their country tells them to do if the need arises, whether they like it or not. The people who are singing "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier" are quite mistaken; they did just that, if need comes.

In this time of erroneous conceptions and the assumption of a tolerant and superior air toward the Government, it is well that there should be an emphatic demonstration of the other side; that the nation should see these business and professional men spending their time in learning how to serve their country if it needs them, and going at the work not as a pastime, but in dead earnest. One way of teaching facts is by pictures, and here are two pictures to learn from. One is the picture of the country ranged by loquacious pacifists, announcing on what terms they will serve it, and whether they will serve it at all, and the other is the picture of the men at Plattsburg, saying nothing, but serving it.

THE HUMORIST'S VOGUE.

Max Adeler—his real name was CHARLES HEBER CLARK—is dead, and among the comments is one to the effect that the humorists of his time were "slapstick artists," and that "today their style of fun seems strangely out of date." Out of date, yes, for fashions in humor change; but was it slapstick? Was it coarser and broader? At any rate, they did not astonish and puzzle their readers with new slang variants every day, nor did they wear an air of cockney knowingness. Their humor is out of date chiefly because it was frequently painstaking and its architecture was Gothic.

The humorists of that day contributed either a string of jokes, after the fashion of BAILEY, The Danbury News Man, or a weekly page of sketches. Those who took the latter course created characters whose adventures or philosophy were eagerly watched for, and whose personalities became definite in the minds of readers. Just now it is not recalled that any of these characters was broad or coarse or deserving of the slapstick epithet except Peck's Bad Boy. Brudder Gardner, the rhetorical and voluble negro elder who thundered weekly at his flock in The Detroit Free Press, was sometimes severe with erring ones, but always immensely conscious of his dignity. Perhaps Mr. Spoopendyke, who was perpetually improving his wife's mind and then finding out that she was in the right all the time, may have been a little too violent—moving-picturish perhaps—but only in the expression of his misplaced indignation; and he was a definite character, made such by STANLEY HUNTLEY of The Brooklyn Eagle, and not a mere clown. ALEX SWEET had a whole cast of characters in Texas Siftings, each sharply marked and outstanding, such as the shrewd colored person, the Rev. Whangdoodle Baxter; Mose Schaumburg, the persuasive slopshop merchant, and Uncle Mose, the personification of negro dignity and alertness. The same was true of OPIE READ'S creations in The Arkansas Traveler. The only writer of today who shares their creative ability and method is PHILANDER JOHNSON of The Washington Star, whose characters—Senator Sorghum, Mr. Chuggins the automobilist, Mr. Dustin Stax the millionaire, and young Mrs. Torkins—are as clearly marked and distinctive as they could be if he had portrayed them in a novel instead of in paragraphs.

A different style was that of ROBERT J. BURDETTE, first of The Burlington Hawkeye and then, on HUNTLEY'S death, of The Brooklyn Eagle. He engaged in long and humorous dissertations, and there was nothing of the slapstick about them; often there was slightly masked philosophy and ethics of a true and high sort; and, despite the change in fashion, we doubt if BURDETTE would be a whit less popular if his work were beginning today than it was when he began it in the seventies. BILL NYE, following the same plan, was broader, but he was richer, too; and there is plenty of NYE'S work which is still funny. There is nothing put of date, for instance, in his story of the farmer who charged him 40 cents for a glass of milk, and when NYE indignantly asked the reason, explained. "Well, I'll tell ye. I need the money." That story added a phrase to American slang, and "I need the money" still endures—proof that the Statute of Limitations has not run against all of NYE'S fun.

He was the last of the old school. The present fashion is for "columns"—a series of flippancies intermixed with personalities and verse, and printed daily instead of weekly. It has its vogue, and will pass like the other fashions. It is keener and has more an air of smartness and briskness than the old kind; but after it has passed, with its local allusions and up-to-the-minute slang, and is one with Nineveh and Tyre, the next generation may find it harder to enjoy than the Nye and Burdette type. Perhaps, too, that generation may find the slapstick figure more nearly applicable to it than to its predecessor.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Highwaying Ethics Violated?

From Fremont, Ohio, comes a tale illustrating the present possibility of inventing new ways of attaining the designed end even in such an ancient and thoroughly standardized trade, or perhaps it should be called art, as that of highway robbery.

A lone automobilist driving along a lonely country road near that town came upon a seemingly disconsolate man and woman seated in a motionless car which, the man said in response to kindly inquiry, was suffering from some ill or disablement too mysterious for him, with his small mechanical knowledge, to cure. Of course the later arrival immediately offered to supply the needed skill as a motor doctor, but no sooner was he out in the road on foot, and far enough from his own car to make flight impossible, than the suppliant for help enforced with a drawn pistol a sternly delivered order to hand over his watch and purse. He obeyed, naturally, and then saw the other car, of much higher power than his own, dash away with a promptness and speed that left no doubt about the imaginary nature of its alleged troubles.

This robber's conduct has been denounced as of record-breaking meanness, and it is sadly predicted that hereafter automobilists may hesitate to offer, or even refuse to give, the accustomed help to brother and sister motorists in distress, for fear the distress may be merely a wile to facilitate theft.

That, probably, is to exaggerate the importance of the episode, but some slight tendency it may have to produce a caution which will be disadvantageous to travelers in real need of aid.

Certainly the trick was a mean one. As a stratagem of war, indeed, it would excite no adverse criticism, all sorts of surprises, ambuscades, and deceptions being held quite compatible with the military sort of honor, but to reward help with robbery will bring some reproach on a highwayman. The customs, if not the ethics, of that vocation are fairly well known to outsiders, and at least its more notable figures, like DICK TURPIN, if their biographies can be trusted, would have scorned a device so much more indicative of guile than of courage.

Perhaps, however, it was not a real or professional highwayman who did this sorry thing. There are a good many politicians out of jobs in that part of the country just now, and resort to honest work is for them a desperate expedient, long to be deferred.

Reporters and Jurors in Accord.

A peculiarity of the indictments found by the Chicago Grand Jury in the Eastland case is that they contain precisely the charges, and no more, that were to be found in the newspapers the morning after the steamer capsized and drowned so many of its passengers. The charges are directed, too, against the very persons to whom the newspapers then called public and editorial attention, as those who were responsible for the disaster.

Such a coincidence of hasty with deliberate judgment is by no means invariable, but it is frequent.

The Eastland case, however, was one unusually simple and clear. Negligence and incompetence were both obvious, and it is hard to see how the penalties for either can be avoided except by proving that the real fault lay with the law itself, in that it divided responsibility among too many different sorts of Inspectors and did not make it inevitable that they either could or would do their work efficiently.

If, as seems to be the fact, big excursion boats are required neither to have nor to prove the possession of a reasonable stability, it is to be expected—can be taken for granted—that some of them will lack it. We all like speed, in ships as in trains, and speed is not secured except at the cost of a certain amount of danger. Afloat, speed involves sacrifice of beam as the alternative of inconveniently or prohibitively expensive increase of engine power. There are, however, compromises with perfect safety that are properly permissible and improperly permitted. The builders of the Eastland went too far and there was nobody to tell them that they could not carry passengers on such a vessel. At any rate, nobody did, and the alterations made to give her added steadiness did not give her enough.

Taxation and its Principles.

As everybody, in one way or another, is a taxpayer, Vice President Hows of the National Tax Association advised the undertaking of a big job when at the annual conference of that body in San Francisco this week he pleaded for the education of all taxpayers in at least the fundamental principles of taxation.

That most of them need such instruction is unquestionably and lamentably true, but realization of the need is also lacking in the great majority, so who is to make them go to school? The numerous books on the subject are scorned by the majority of taxpayers as "dry," and there is something of excuse for neglecting them all in that the would-be teachers, not content with disagreeing as to what is and is not sound taxation, indulge in the interchange of very harsh epithets among themselves, those in each group declaring the members of the others little if any better than the wicked.

The typical and innumerable taxpayer is sure of only one thing—that he hates to pay taxes. He strongly inclines to dodge them when he can, and the thing he likes next best to that is to have the inevitable payment deferred—till next year anyhow and longer if possible. In vain is he told that this increases the ultimate amount exacted. He doesn't care. Hope sings in his heart a song to the effect that he can make "posterity" carry some of the burden, if not all of it, and anything is better to him than a big tax bill this year.

His favorite municipal administration is one that issues bonds, and more bonds, and then bonds, and the one he hates is the one that says to him, "You are posterity!"

A GRAPE JUICE PEOPLE?

The Charge Is German—Fancy General von Hindenburg Taking Pop!

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In regard to the recent statistics that have been published in the papers showing the amount of drinking per capita, may I call attention to one thing which might be worth the while of Americans to notice?

The big nations are big drinkers. Germany has admittedly been doing the best fighting of the war, yet how long ago was it that the Fatherland was contemptuously referred to as a nation of beer guzzlers! The English are our noblest foes. Our hate for one another is that of man against man. And see how the Merry Englanders can drink!

What do the weak, apologetic, peace-loving Americans drink? Pop, soda water, cocacola, and grape juice.

Understand me. I do not advocate drunkenness or anything of the sort. Our German heroes are no drunkards; they are not permitted by the good Government to drink while on the march. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that strong men like strong drink. I do not say that it benefits them; I only say they like it. Weak men, on the other hand, like weak drinks. Can you imagine von Hindenburg drinking a bottle of pop!

The weak American love for peace is but a phase of the same national temperament which includes a love for soft drinks.

The Teutonic Conductor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Under the heading "Unsanitary Transfers," you published a letter from one of your readers, describing the disgusting way in which New York conductors "peel off" transfers.

The German and Austrian conductor slips a rubber band or a small strip of rubber tubing over the end of his lead pencil. By this simple contrivance he is enabled through a short stroke of the hand to release each leaf separately from his block. He also finds time to politely answer questions, to help ladies and children on and off the car, wears a clean tidy uniform, does not chew tobacco, stops and starts his car according to his duty—in short, is just a small example of the sneered at "German Kultur." Too bad that we cannot have a little of it right here.

For Wage-Earning Girls.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is with regret that I see the passing of the "Deep Sea Hotel." Being interested in the housing of the small-wage-earning girl I feel the necessity of the existence of such places where the small-wage-earning girl can find accommodations for little money. Will you kindly make public through your valuable paper that the City Federation Hotel, 462 West Twenty-second Street, will gladly accommodate some of the girls compelled to seek refuge elsewhere? The City Federation Hotel gives the small-wage-earning girl board and lodging for $3.50, $4 or $4.50 per week, and was founded and is run by a Board of Directors chosen from the members of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs.

ALIENI TEMPORIS FLORES.

blossoms of other days."

Let the dead past bury its dead?
No one denies the need of this,
The utter childlike human need;
Nor that dead dreams, dead tears, dead loves,
Should lie perdu
Within the vault of time;
Nor that the snows of other years
Must melt away

But let it be no more than this;
Let us not seize upon the hours
When blood ran tumbling to the lips,
And make of memory a thing of scorn;
Let us not taint the honest wine of old desire
With cheap regret,
The cheapest pain within all mortal range;
Let us not say that where we gave and took,
Full-hearted and full-hoped and daring all,
The world was aught the poorer for our dreams.

Let the dead past bury its dead?
Yes — but in full honor, too!
Not only for the flame that was its breath,
But for the spark
That somewhere smolders in the grave.

USE OF THE ARMS INDUSTRY.

It Puts This Country in a State of Industrial Preparedness.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One phase of the war munition business which has not yet received as much attention throughout the country as its importance deserves is that the building of new and modern plants for the making of war munitions has brought about an entirely new epoch in the iron and steel and machinery interests of the country. Many concerns are now building, out of profits on their war orders, magnificent plants which they would not have felt justified in constructing for many years to come.

This is strikingly illustrated in the great plant which the Baldwin Locomotive Works are building at Eddystone near Philadelphia, to be used for not less than two years for the making of rifles by the Remington people, and which at the end of the contract is to be turned into a locomotive plant which will give this company one of the greatest locomotive works in the world, and which in the ordinary course of business they probably would not have built for a good many years. This is typical of many new plants under construction throughout New England and in some places in the West, and to a smaller extent in the South; though in Baltimore and Virginia some big work is being done, the du Ponts having under construction in Virginia a plant upon which about 12,000 to 15,000 men are working. So long as the war lasts these plants will be busy on filling orders for Europe; when the war is over they will be available, if we should ever need them, for making war materials for this country; and if not needed for that purpose, they will give to the companies owning them plants more modern in construction, equipment, and size than would have been built for a decade or more in the ordinary course of business. Thus while serving the interests of the Allies in providing war munitions, this war order business is safeguarding the interests of our own country, should we need war supplies, and is putting the entire iron and steel business on a higher plane of equipment than we have ever had.

Speculation in war stocks may run wild and conservative bankers and financial authoritives may warn the country against gambling in war securities; but men who are building these plants are not the gamblers in securities, nor will these new works be affected even should there come a collapse in the speculative mania in war stocks. On the contrary, these great concerns will, as a result of the work which they are doing, secure vastly larger plants than would have been feasible for them to build for many years. This is pre-eminently true throughout New England where many of the long established institutions of that section are being equipped with modern machinery, or are enlarging their plants or building new ones out of profits from this business. The men who are modernizing their plants or building new ones are among the ablest business men of the country. They are not, as a general thing, taking risks. They are making contracts which show a profit which more than pays for the new works they are building; and thus this expansion of industry is being brought about without the investment of new capital on the part of Eastern and Western concerns, who are taking the lead in this work.

Moreover, the Government officials of this country are necessarily very deeply interested in the building of these new munition works, for they recognize their necessity in safeguarding our own future to an extent that would not have been deemed possible twelve months ago. Without the building of these new works of many kinds and at many places this country would have been hopelessly and helplessly unable to meet any important nation in war. It would have taken a year or more in which to build the plants in which to make the munitions of war for our own defense. In that time we could have been so badly overrun, if at war with any first class power, as to have been made to pay a forfeit for our unpreparedness great enough to tempt the cupidity of some of the nations of the earth. Naturally, therefore, the Government officials are looking with interest to the work which is being done by many of the foremost concerns of the country in building plants specially equipped for making war munitions.

The Teachers' Own Pension Muddle.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reply to the letter of "Teacher" in THE TIMES of this morning, permit me to say that the present deplorable condition of the Teachers' Pension Fund is very largely due to the attitude of the leaders of the teachers themselves.

Two years ago an actuarial investigation of the fund was made by William A. Hutcheson, the actuary of one of the largest insurance companies. In his report to the Board of Education he pointed out the inevitable result of a continuance of the then existing conditions and made certain recommendations which, had they been followed, would have put the fund on a sound actuarial basis and would possibly have entirely avoided the present situation. Unfortunately for the teachers, this expert opinion was regarded as of no value, and their own representatives were among the foremost in denying the accuracy of actuarial calculations. As a result Mr. Hutcheson's report was ignored in all subsequent discussion of the finances of the fund, and Controller Prendergast's statement of last Friday consequently comes as no surprise to those who have intelligently considered the situation. Had "Teacher" and others situated such as she is raised their voices two years ago in a demand that some attention be paid to the expert opinion obtained at considerable expense, it is quite likely that those who from self-interest or other causes obstinately opposed the adoption of any scientific basis for the administration of the fund would have been compelled to change their course. Hyphens That Won't Melt.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Unfortunately for ourselves, America is, in fact, a "melting pot." But because any given element refuses to "melt" is no reason why it should assume itself to be the alley. If anything, it simply shows it to be out of place in the pot. The German ideals are, very evidently, training and subordination. The American ideals are development and individual freedom. The American mind expands; the German merely intensifies. It is quite easy to see why the latter type of mind should have some difficulty in comprehending the former. Nevertheless, they owe it to "the new Fatherland" to give their best efforts to building up America according to its own ideals, not seeking to impress foreign and distasteful ideals upon it. If they, or their fathers, have left their home country to escape lack of freedom, it would seem the only logical and honorable thing to do to adapt themselves to the standards and ideals of their adopted one.

From Miss Chittenden.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I correct a mistake which appeared in your columns last week to the effect that Miss Lucy Price, the anti-suffrage speaker on the Chautauqua Circuit, requested that the straw votes being taken after the suffrage debate be stopped because the "antis" were losing? The following telegram from Miss Price, addressed to me from Malone, N. Y., shows that such was not the case:

> I never requested Redpath Chautauqua Bureau to stop taking straw ballots. Anti-suffrage was winning total vote oftener than losing. At time vote was stopped men's vote was "anti" twelve times out of sixteen. Only time audience was asked to vote on merits of debate instead of personal convictions I won men and women's both. Stopped vote because not increasing interest. They will verify this.

MOTLEY OF ROMANTIC GERMAN WAR IDEAS.

A European Empire, a New Universal Theology, Advent of a World Race, a Liberation of Democracy, a Rebirth of Religion.

By PROFESSOR ERNST TROELTSCH,
Professor of Systematic Theology and Director of the Systematic Division of the Scientific Theological Seminary of the Heidelberg Academy of Sciences and of the Faculty of the University of Berlin.

(Translated from the Frankfurter Zeitung of July 11, 1915.)

With the continuation of the war and the increasing successful self-assertion of the Germans, there grew among us also the need of an idea of our war. Clearer than in any other words is this shown in the following sentences from a letter from the field, of last January:

> There are not merely moments, but often hours and days, in which one no longer knows why one is out here. One sees nothing but his immediate surroundings and hears nothing of all that which is transpiring in the world around. One stands solitary on his post and slowly grows intellectually dull. Then all sorts of thoughts storm in upon the soul: "Why, indeed, this whole war? Is it not almost madness to murder each other? Why should just I have to give up my life? Couldn't we simply make an end of this mad war by mutual agreement? Has this entire conflict, indeed, any sense whatever?" Thus one dangerous thought pursues another.

We in the homeland have not fared very differently. We had need of nourishment for the soul in the shape of an idea of the sense and purpose of the war.

The nearest at hand were religious ideas, as indeed they are expressed by the writer of that letter: trial, cleansing, simplification, introspection, renascence of the Germany which is to rise purified from this war and must, unless it wishes to suffer a dangerous degeneration. A whole literature has stamped these ideas in ever-new versions and forms. Fiery enthusiasts like Johannes Müller and contemplative ones like Paul Eberhardt have given effective expression to them. Beside the Kant-Fichte categorical imperative there flared up in revival the whole religious romanticism in modern forms.

Many Ideas.

Beside these moved the German Imperialists, to whom belong the majority of the German historians, a large number of national economists, the industrial magnates, and many writing officers. They saw all their hitherto teachings confirmed, and celebrated the great moment of the final breaking through of the Germans to the world race. (Weltvolk.) Races and States must grow or go under. The goal of every great and noble people, to become a world power, seemed to have approached very near; it is the sense of the immeasurable sacrifices and sufferings. To be sure, in this teaching there plays no religious tone; Christianity is not denied, but it is warned against every humanitarian and sentimental misunderstanding, a trait which has been exaggerated by our opponents into unmeasured caricatures, and which even among ourselves keeps wide masses aloof from this teaching. Nevertheless, even this teaching is idealistic and romantic enough. For, with Rohrbach, it regards the German world rule as the rule of the German spirit, German culture; it loves to refer to Schiller's "Tag des Deutschen," (Day of the German,) and desires with sword and technical skill to create a clear path for an empire of the soul and of the spirit.

Contrasting views are put forth by the democratic idealism, as Rudolf Goldscheid portrays it to us in the warm-hearted writing entitled "Germany's Greatest Danger." The primary and inherent German idea of liberty must dissolve that alliance of politics and power between the ever-threatening Russian reaction and the misled Western pseudo-democracies, must come to an understanding with the latter, in spite of all present-day conflicts of opinion, as to the connection between internal political freedom and external political order of peace, and must create a European-American community against the dangers of the East. In this ideal there meet democrats, socialists, pacifists. In spite of all Darwinian, historical-evolutionist and sociological foundations, that too is certainly a genuine and very idealistic dream, a wonderland beyond the fearful chaotic prose in which we live and fight, especially beyond the unscrupulous imperialistic self-interest of the English policy, which must not be confused with its mask of democratic freedom.

Still others hope for a new reconstruction of Europe, emanating from the centre, a Continental alliance against Russia and England, of preponderating Germanic germ and with German culture. This is to be an insurance of Germany, and at the same time a rejuvenation of Europe, concluded economically, politically, and intellectually, a successor of the mediaeval empire, a new assembling of its horizon and its forces. In this camp are found the race-philosophers, the Continental political economists, the friends of economic self-government, the advocates of an Oriental policy, the Grossdeutschen, (Greater Germanists), the romantic Catholics, and the friends of the Middle Ages.

The Kaiser Idea.

Related to these "Imperials" is Alfons Paquet, the able geographer and world traveler, the delicate-spirited poet beloved by many, the meditative observer of human affairs in the chamber of the great world-conflicts and of their basic cultural causes. In a small volume which he calls "The Kaiser Idea," (published in Frankfort by Rütten and Löning,) he has developed his idea of the war, a mixture of world-geographical realism, German imperialism, and religious yearning for love and purity in the relations of men as well as of races.

Germany has gotten into an uneven relationship toward the hitherto great powers, which "this war must dissolve through the shattering or the advancement of Germany with a new, a different look in the face of the world." It must step, as a representative or mediator of Europe, at the head of a European league of States beside the powers of the future, America and East Asia, and must seek intellectual community and agreement with both. That must be the work of a great prince, who, standing above the races, is not bound down by their prejudices and mass instincts and nevertheless understands their deepest yearnings. Such an Emperor, recalling Charles the Great, Otto III., Henry VI., Frederick II., Charles V., must be born to us out of storm and stress of the time, together with the complete radically rejuvenated and united Germany. This European Empire is a timeless idea, which will dissolve the era of narrow nationalism and must dissolve it, and which by a general law has its parallel in America's coalescence, and in the empire of China and Japan, as once in the Roman Empire. The imperium must rise again out of the present conflict of races, and it is the destiny of the Germans to prepare the way for it through this great war. The new European Emperor will in a near or remote future be a German Emperor.

The decentralization hitherto of imperialism was caused by the monopolization of the imperial idea by the Papacy. The new empire must be exclusively temporal and must be clear of all conflicts between Church and State. But it is just this worldly imperium which then will the more need its religious complement, even as monarchism always fitly expressed and still expresses the imperium. Thus the idea of the European empire becomes associated with the idea of the European religion. It will, irrespective of monism and energetics, be a strong mystic theism and thereby closely connected with the historic religion of Europe, Christianity. Yes, it must not even dissolve connection with the historic churches, but must value these as its most important and popular organizers. A free and mutually moderating association side by side of various confessions and a complete inner religion of the spiritually free must bring about a spiritual syncretism, the expression of the European religion as the idea of an active living redemption to the Empire of God. Therein the European religion will encounter related developments of other religious realms, and will be able to reach a settlement with them in a world community. Just as the empire has its appointed bearer in the Germans, so, too, will German Christianity, manifold and worked out in all forms and nevertheless ever developed toward spiritual freedom, and perhaps assisted by a neo-idealistic Judaism serving as intermediary between Orient and Occident, will have to form the point of departure of this European religion. That, then, is no imperialism of might and self-interest, but rather an imperialism of the spirit and the idea.

World Theology.

These visions of the future naturally lead the prophet at last to the question of the Christian mission which gained a powerful impetus in the nineteenth century and which has made use of new methods of communication almost more quickly than commerce. It is of highest importance for the future of the world. To be sure, in the near Orient the religion of Islam there prevalent, and itself missionary from that region as a centre, must not be disturbed by attempts at conversion. There the custodians of the future and of mediation are the Christian churches which have been there for a long time and which frequently serve political purposes. They must receive a new inner life and must draw nearer to one another, must especially learn more of German theology and by that very fact evoke countereffects from Islam itself, through which Islam will again become a cultural power as once before.

Catholic, Protestant, free-religious forces must create the religious universalism of the future and find the contact with the noble old wisdom of the East. Germany, as the motherland of the religious movements of modern times, as the homeland of the religious-idealistic philosophy and of a philosophic theology, will be called upon above all to participate in this. A German empire as the head of the European league, and the religious universalism emanating from Europe, will then give the world a new order, a relationship compared to which the present relations are merely the chaos with all the joys and pains of procreation. Everywhere is growing "the effort to clear the chaos that has developed out of common general increase in population and the rise of elements devoid of traditions out of this chaos." Our war is the beginning of this clarification, and back of it stands the idea of the European empire and of the religious Empire of God through which Europe is to find a new relationship to America and Asia.

The Poet Race.

Remarkable imaginations! Much that is profoundly thought out and much that is dilettante, much that is possible and much that is improbable, much that is keen sight and much poetry! Truly, the Germans are still today the race of the poets and thinkers. One of the few keen-sighted English opponents has brought that out carefully, too: one should not permit one's self to be deceived by all militarism and all technical skill, he says, the Germans are incurably poets and thinkers. To be sure, he added, that is precisely their weak point, in that they are unable to see the incongruity between their miserable Continental basis and their dreams; thus, he said, they plunge into misfortune through their dreaming.

Nevertheless, we must not delude ourselves by failing to realize that such romancing is in fact not altogether without danger, and that it needs continual supplementing

STIRRING WAR PLAY BY ROI C. MEGRUE

"Under Fire" an Exciting Melodrama of the Invasion of France.

SPIES, TRENCHES, AND ALL

UNDER FIRE—A new melodrama in three acts by Roi Cooper Megrue, in the Hudson Theatre.

Henry Streetman	Felix Krembs
Sir George Wagstaff	Henry Stephenson
Guy Falconer	Norman Tharp

Louis	S. Sidney Chon

Considerable humor and a wealth of excitement—these elements were cleverly compounded in the making of "Under Fire," the latest work by Roi Cooper Megrue which, prodigally produced, the Selwyns brought to New York last evening and presented at the Hudson Theatre. It is a war play and quite the best product so far presented by those writers for the stage who have given way to the impulse to turn into royalties the war that has been tearing Europe for more than a twelvemonth.

It is such a piece as any playwright, given a keen sense of the theatre and an honest affection for old-fashioned melodrama, might have produced after an attentive reading of the stories coming over the cables and of a few such books as Irvin Cobb's "Paths of Glory." It is all here from the unending stream of soldiers in gray and the glimpse of war by telephone to the sight of a bomb dropped from a German aeroplane on an English trench "somewhere in Northern France." "Under Fire" is war news melodramatized. And it is exceedingly interesting. Not content with having achieved two of the conspicuous successes of the season, Mr. Megrue, most indefatigable of playwrights, has done it again.

Most of the playwrights who have turned their attention to the present war of the nations have decided, seemingly, that only the spy is suffered to be individually dramatic in the great machinery of modern warfare, and so the wings have been full of spies. They abound in "Under Fire," with the story of the play just a struggle between the Secret Service workers of the different Governments. But, Wiggs that he is, his fellows, Mr. Megrue in writing his "Shenandoah" of the Summer of 1914, has elected to make use of the two most dramatic turning points in the history of those momentous months. He has used the entry of England into the war and he has used the turning of the German hosts at the battle of the Marne.

The play begins with the quiet scene of an English circle at tea, all London a-tingle with the suspense of the great uncertainty. It is curiously interesting for an audience, attentive with the knowledge of what has happened since, to listen to the half-idle prophecies of the men and women at tea. It is like turning back the files of the newspapers to that week a year and a fortnight ago. That scene ends with the arrival of the news that the greatest fleet of history has sailed under sealed orders toward the Kiel Canal.

And for the play's finale, you have a battered church not far from Paris converted into an English field hospital. The floor is littered with wounded soldiers—among them, of course, our hero, Mr. Courtnay. The utter depression of that little isolated group, dismal with the prospect of the capture of Paris, is turned into a tired jubilation when there comes the belated news of what had happened on the Marne. As they struggle to their feet and catch up the lilt of "Tipperary," the curtain falls.

Spectacularly, the play reaches its most ambitious moment in the picture of the English trench, the soldiers dimly seen, the stars a-glitter in the skies above. You hear the Scotchman sourly commenting on his luck at poker in the candle-lit card game to the right. You listen to Guy, some time silly ass from Piccadilly, but now as good as the best of them at the front, sitting there in the trenches dreaming of the chorus girls turning into the Strand at home, and of supper at the Savoy. Later he is killed.

A few of the incidents are a bit too agonizing for sound melodrama, and throughout there is a sense of being hurried by a play too crammed with incident, as though "Under Fire" had been written on the rapid-fire principle of giving the audience no time to think. It would seem less stagy at times if it were thinned out a bit. Mr. Megrue makes his attack in a little too close formation.

Then there could be more filling and the filling is so very good. It is chiefly provided by the character of the stray American newspaper correspondent and the playing of this part by that thoroughly engaging comedian—Frank Craven. He is a pert emissary from Park Row, with the proverbial manners of the unlicked cub reporter as playwrights ever see him. But it would be sheer mendacity to say that he is unrecognizable.

And he is enormously amusing. You find him somehow laboring under the impression that the Germans have been all wrong diplomatically "since old George W. Bismarck died." You find him cycling wearily through Belgium asking if any one has seen a war anywhere about; you see him grow sentimental at the sight of a cigar case marked with a Sixth Avenue address; you hear him charming his German guard with the comfort of the realization that that conscientiously suspicious worthy knows no word of American. You see him falling on the neck of a Belgian innkeeper who was once a waiter at The Beaux Arts. It is all very entertaining, and Mr. Craven is delightful, not least so in the serious work he is asked to do in the last act.

Mr. Courtenay has the major rôle, as Captain Redmond of the Irish Guards, and is satisfyingly romantic. He is quite successful with the Irish touch to his speech. Miss Heming is beautiful and adequate. In minor rôles exceedingly good work is done by Robert Fischer, Norman Tharp, E. G. Robinson, and Henry Stephenson. Mr. Stephenson's ease and commanding dignity is a rare joy in the theatre. All in all, it is an admirable cast.

It may be guessed that in writing "Under Fire" Mr. Megrue has not designed it for production in Berlin. His play is about as neutral as "Tipperary," and the dramatic critic of the Staats-Zeitung is not expected to regard it as the greatest work of art ever produced on the American stage.

CHINA IS RIPE FOR GUM.

Americans Could Get 300,000,000 Jaws Chewing, Trade Attache Says.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The immense prospect of profit in China for the enterprising American manufacturer of chewing gum is the subject of a report from the United States Commercial Attache at Shanghai, Julean H. Arnold. According to this report, there are 300,000,000 jaws in China that are innocent of the great American enjoyment. The Chinese are said to be keenly fond of sweets, and it is believed they would not be averse to using gum if they could get it.

In southern China a few millions chew the betel nut and secretly elsewhere there is a fondness for opium. Tobacco is used, but not so generally as here, although now that American cigarettes have been introduced, millions of them are consumed daily. Mr. Arnold thinks chewing gum would be very popular with the Chinese. Once they did not use our condensed milk, but now they have strewn all China with empty milk cans. Until recently they did not use tooth powder, but now tooth powders are advertised all over China and used quite generally.

Mr. Arnold also says that the United States could do a big business in making playing cards for the Chinese. They already like them, and in Shanghai they have practically abandoned their own "sparrow cards" to use our kind. He says that we ought to put Chinese numerals and figures on the cards and use Chinese characters for King, Queen, and Jack. Above all, the cards, to sell well, should be very showy, with amusing and sensational pictures on the backs. Several residents of Shanghai have offered, through Mr. Arnold, to give advice as to the designing of cards for the Chinese, and any one interested can obtain from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce all needed information.

UPHOLDS JEWISH FATHER.

Magistrate Joins in Condemnation of Sabbath Cigarettes.

If a son of an Orthodox Jewish father smokes cigarettes on the Sabbath he commits a sin deserving of severe punishment, according to Eli Pochansky, 60 years old, who appeared before Magistrate Corrigan in the Tombs Court yesterday on a charge of assaulting members of his family who did not conform to his views.

Last Saturday the eldest son, Samuel, entered his home, at Cherry and Grand Streets, with a cigarette in his mouth. His father ordered him to remove the cigarette. The son laughed and deliberately blew smoke into his father's beard. Horrified by such desecration, the old man fled into his bedroom and locked the door. Samuel pursued and continued to torment his father by blowing smoke through the keyhole.

This so enraged Mr. Pochansky that he rushed out and struck his son. And because his wife and daughter defended the young man's conduct Mr. Pochansky struck them also. From this occurrence originated the charge of assault which brought Mr. Pochansky into court yesterday.

Magistrate Corrigan, on hearing Mr. Pochansky's views on Sabbath cigarette smoking, decided not to entertain the charge and dismissed the defendant.

FREES LUNATICS TO FIGHT.

Governor Pardons Three Italian Reservists in Matteawan.

Special to The New York Times.

BEACON, N. Y., Aug. 12.—Governor Whitman sent to Dr. Kieb, Superintendent of the Matteawan State Hospital, today pardons for three inmates—Italians who want to return to their native land to take up arms with the Allies. They are Frank Jerricho, committed from Kings County for vagrancy; Vesley Goinick, who violated the Sullivan law in New York, and Pietro Barbiere, committed from Onondaga County for assault.

Jerricho applied to Justice Joseph Morschauser, in Poughkeepsie, for a writ of habeas corpus. He insisted in court that he was insane and Dr. Kieb's testimony bore him out. He said he wanted to go home to enter the army. The court reserved decision until District Attorney Cropsey of Kings, who prosecuted him, could be consulted.

Twice Mr. Cropsey told Dr. Kieb in person that he would not take any action that would release the men. The Superintendent, who has saved the State many thousands of dollars by his weeding-out process of aliens in the hospital, finally applied to the Governor, with the result that the papers arrived from Albany today.

The hospital now has a population of 847, showing crowding. Men are daily committed to Matteawan from New York and Brooklyn who have been sent to the city prisons for short terms and have become insane soon after imprisonment.

MRS. C. CORBIN SEEKS FLAW IN HER DECREE

Now Wants to Have Set Aside Divorce She Won from Rich Man's Son in 1908.

HE HAS MARRIED AGAIN

Inherited $75,000 Additional by Doing So, and His First Wife Got Nothing.

If Mrs. Lillian Blakesley Corbin succeeds in finding a flaw in the divorce decree she obtained from Charles F. Corbin in June, 1908, a legal tangle will ensue which will cause both financial and domestic embarrassment to several people. According to a dispatch to THE TIMES from New Britain, Conn., she has engaged counsel to test the validity of the decree.

Charles F. Corbin, son of Philip Corbin, the millionaire founder of the American Hardware Corporation, married Mrs. Lillian Ursula Blakesley in 1882 in New Britain, Conn. It is said that the marriage was frowned on by the Corbin family, for they were social leaders and Mrs. Blakesley was not at all prominent. The couple lived together for twenty years, and two children, Philip, Jr., and Minnie, later Mrs. George Kohn of Hartford, were born.

Then, some twelve or fourteen years ago, Mr. Corbin's father sent him to a sanatorium at Cottage City because of intemperance. Mrs. Corbin went with her two children to live at the home of her father-in-law at New Britain. When her son was grown and her daughter married she decided to sue for divorce, and it is believed that Philip Corbin encouraged her to do so. The divorce was granted on grounds of intemperance and desertion, and Mrs. Corbin got permission to resume her former name, Mrs. Blakesley, but she has continued to call herself Mrs. Corbin.

After his wife got her divorce, Charles Corbin left the sanatorium and went to work in the office of his father's hardware factory. He became almost a recluse in his manner of living. His father was certain to the day of his own death, in 1910, that Charles would some day take a proper interest in the responsibilities of life.

The millionaire's will provided that Charles should inherit $75,000, and in case he married again he was to receive $75,000 more from the estate. At first Mr. Corbin said that the financial reward was not sufficient to make him take the chances of matrimony again, but later he changed his mind and in 1912 married Mrs. Mona Drew Babbitt at Mansfield, Mass., thereby getting the additional $75,000 provided for in his father's will.

Mrs. Corbin inherited nothing by her father-in-law's will, and for a time it was rumored that she would contest it. In 1909 she was engaged to marry James E. Sanford of Warwick, N. Y., but the wedding did not take place.

Benedict W. Holden, a lawyer of Hartford and New York, said yesterday that Mrs. Corbin thought the decree faulty. He said that she had consulted him regarding her case. Mr. Holden said that it was his belief that Mrs. Corbin was led to consult counsel on the advice of a judge of a superior court in Connecticut.

Mrs. Corbin was seen last night at her apartments at 39 East Thirty-first Street, in this city, but she declined to make any statement as to her case. It was all in the hands of her lawyers, she said, Arthur Perkins of Hartford and Charles M. Russell of New York. Neither Mr. Perkins nor Mr. Russell could be reached last night.

POLK SUED FOR DIVORCE.

Wife of Baltimore Descendant of President Charges Desertion.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 12.—Although the suit was filed two weeks ago, it did not become generally known until today that Mrs. Irene Brainard Polk was seeking a divorce from David Peal Polk on the ground of desertion.

Peal Polk is a descendant of President Polk, while his wife was a belle of Chevy Chase, a fashionable suburb of Washington. They were secretly married in February, 1912, but lived together only four months, Mrs. Polk returning to her mother's home in Chevy Chase.

Mr. Polk has already filed an answer in which he requires proof of the alleged desertion.

Mr. Polk's sister Lucille was a survivor of the Titanic wreck with her then husband, William E. Carter, and two children. Subsequently Mrs. Carter obtained a divorce, and on Aug. 16 of last year she was married in London to George Brooke, a society man of Philadelphia.

BOY TO SEE BELOVED SHIPS.

Little Incurable Gets Marine Glasses to View Bay from Hospital Roof.

Little Jimmie Smith, who always smiles though he's an incurable in the Kings County Hospital, Brooklyn, is to have his one big desire—to make out the ships that pass in and out of New York Bay—satisfied. The gift is a marine glass, and next Sunday, if it is fair weather, from the roof of the hospital Jimmie will sweep the bay like a seafaring man and tell the other patients all about the ships.

Jimmie is 14 and has tuberculosis of the spine. He has been a hospital patient for nearly six years, and his chief joy is a view of the bay from the hospital room. If Jimmie had not been stricken he would have been a sailorman, for he loves to talk of the sails and the mysteries of the seas. In his fancy he pictures the far travels of the ships.

It was through the thoughtfulness of Mrs. Eva L. Flutterer of 186 Peshine Avenue, Newark, that Jimmie received the marine glass. Mrs. Flutterer was introduced to him by Miss Mabel L. Smith of 50 Hubbard Place, Brooklyn, who first met him two years ago in the Methodist Episcopal Hospital.

One day recently Miss Smith happened to speak of her little friend while visiting Mrs. Flutterer, and the latter expressed a desire to visit him. When they met in the Brooklyn hospital recently the first thing Jimmy spoke about was the ships. A happy thought came to Mrs. Flutterer. She did not tell the boy, but purchased the binoculars and sent them to the hospital, and on Sunday, if the weather man is good, Jimmie will use the glass for the first time.

EXPLOSION IN ARMS PLANT.

Two Killed in Pittsburgh Factory of Westinghouse Company.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 12.—Two men were killed and six injured, one probably fatally, late today by an explosion at the plant of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, near Turtle Creek. The explosion occurred when the men attempted to place shells, which it is alleged are being made for use in the European war, into an annealing furnace.

The dead are Daniel McGivern, aged 65, and Samuel Jenick, aged 35. Steven Bukelic, aged 40, is not expected to live.

Prisoners Not West Point Cadets.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Aug. 12.—Edward Coffee and Kenneth Park, who were arrested and fined in a New York police court on Tuesday for assault, are not cadets at the United States Military Academy, as they told the Magistrate. It is considered more than likely that both were soldiers in one of the detachments of regulars stationed at this post who were enjoying a short leave in the city. It was soldiers' payday here Monday.

AUTO RAMS A WAGON, A FENCE AND A HOUSE

Lands in Parlor After Waking Sleeping Chauffeur and Breaking Brooklyn Woman's Leg.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRING LAKE, N. J., Aug. 12.—Mrs. Lindly Murray of 6 Clark Street, Brooklyn, suffered a broken leg and her grandson, Charles Cowperwaith, 16 years old, of Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, narrowly escaped serious injuries today, when an auto in which they were riding demolished a truck wagon, crashed through a picket fence, mounted the front steps of the home of William Reynolds, near this place, and came to a stop after breaking into the front parlor.

The chauffeur, Richard McKenna, was said to have fallen asleep at the wheel. He was dazed after the accident and could not account for the collision. The auto was traveling toward Asbury Park at the time of the accident. Mrs. Murray, who is 55 years old, was engaged in conversation with her grandson and was first aware of their danger when the machine ran into the wagon, whose fruits and vegetables flew in all directions.

Mrs. Murray was thrown to the floor of the car as it crashed through the fence, and was picked up unconscious after the auto had been brought to a stop. She was taken to her Summer home at Point Pleasant.

Charles Cowperwaith, a son-in-law of Mrs. Murray, who lives in the Chestnut Hills section of Philadelphia, went to the scene of the accident and made a settlement for all the damages done by the car.

State Motor Vehicle Inspector Le Roy Wyckoff of Manasquan was on the ground a few minutes after the accident and made an investigation. The chauffeur alleged thta the steering gear had broken, but it was intact when Wyckoff inspected it.

FIRE ALARM ON FERRYBOAT.

Blaze Was in a Wornout Hulk in an Adjoining Slip.

When the municipal ferryboat Nassau drew into her slip at Thirty-ninth Street, Brooklyn, at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon a cry of fire was heard. The passengers were alarmed until they learned that the fire was seen curling from the hull of the wornout ferry which lies in the unused slip next to the pier at Thirty-ninth Street.

As soon as the boat landed the crew ran over to the burning boat, calling to the men who were at work on the pier. Daniel McPeak, the Superintendent of the dock, saw two boys who he thought were casting fuel on the flames. He seized one, but the other jumped overboard and escaped.

McPeak turned his prisoner over to Policeman Schaeffer. At the police station the prisoner said he was John Bellish of 705 Sackett Street, Brooklyn. He was arraigned before Magistrate Nash of the Long Island City Police Court, Brooklyn, and held in $1,000 bail for examination Saturday.

An hour later the police got a call from Pier 7, at Forty-second Street, saying that a swimmer was trying to climb up the slippery piles. When they arrived the swimmer had disappeared. The police think he was the companion of Bellish.

DOG HOLDS A PRISONER.

Fugitive Gave Policeman the Slip, but Terrier Halted Him.

A small fox terrier dog, owned by William W. Gillen, a lawyer, of Jamaica, yesterday captured an alleged automobile thief, who had made a break for liberty as a policeman was taking him into the Jamaica Police Station. The dog held his man prisoner until the policeman, who had been left far behind in a three blocks' run, arrived and seized him.

Mr. Gillen is spending a vacation in Canada, and left his dog to board at the home of Mrs. William Ruland, 37 North Washington Street. Yesterday afternoon a young man climbed over a fence into the Ruland yard, ran across it, and started to climb another fence to get out. The dog saw him and closed his teeth on the intruder's trousers. Policeman Charles Praetorius came along puffing and handcuffed the youth, who had run away from his custody.

Praetorius got word to look out for a touring car which had been stolen from Rockaway Beach. He saw a car with the given number and arrested the driver, who said he was Lawrence Simmons, 22, a chauffeur, of 164 East Fifty-third Street, Manhattan. Simmons made a dash for liberty, but the dog got him. The touring car was claimed by Frank Appleby of 48 Waverly Avenue, Rockaway Beach.

ARRESTED AS SHOPLIFTERS.

Well-Dressed Man and Woman Alleged to Have Stolen Shrtwaist.

On complaint of Marie Grasswill, a detective in Macy's, a well-dressed man and woman, who said they were brother and sister, were arraigned before Magistrate Appleton in the Men's Night Court last night charged with stealing a shirtwaist valued at $10. They said they were May Clayton, 28 years old, and Timothy Wright, 22, both of 252 West Thirty-ninth Street.

Miss Grasswill testified that she saw the woman take the shirtwaist from a counter, hide it under her skirt, and hand it to Wright in Broadway, concealed in a raincoat.

"I'm entirely to blame," the woman declared. "I took it and he had nothing to do with it. Please let him go and hold me," she begged the Magistrate.

Both were held in $1,000 bail for Special Sessions.

BOY FALLS FROM BRIDGE.

Son of Century Advertising Manager May Die of His Hurts.

MINEOLA, L. I., Aug. 12.—Donald M. Parker, 9 years of age, son of John M. Parker, advertising manager of the Century Publishing Company, was hurried to the Nassau Hospital late this afternoon, suffering from injuries which may prove fatal, after he had fallen twenty feet from the Long Island Railroad bridge over Nassau Boulevard, at Merillon Avenue.

The boy alighted on the concrete roadway, badly injuring his back and head, and Dr. Hill, who attended him at the hospital, was unable to stop the hemorrhages which resulted.

Young Parker, with Bryan and Bouge Hunt, brothers, climbed the railroad bridge this afternoon. An express train came along, and Parker became frightened and lost his grip on the coping.

Senator Lewis for an Early Session.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Senator J. Hamilton Lewis today said he had "high hopes" that Congress would meet as early as October to make sure that the business in hand could be put out of the way before national convention time next year. "There are many things to warrant an early session," said Senator Lewis. "I expect that there will be peace in Europe by next May, and we can adjourn to look after the conventions, if there is an early session."

WALDORF TO BOLDT FOR 10 YEARS MORE

New Lease Calls for $800,000 Annual Rent and Improvements to Cost $800,000.

MORE STORES TO BE PUT IN

World's Biggest Roof Garden, with Skating Rink, Planned—Turkish Room to Go.

Several important changes are about to be made in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel as a result of a renewal of the lease to George C. Boldt, as announced yesterday. Mr. Boldt's present lease expires on April 30, 1918 and papers have just been signed for a ten-years' renewal, which will give Mr. Boldt control of the hotel until April 30, 1928.

The property is held in two ownerships, the Thirty-third Street, or Waldorf section, being held in trust for Waldorf Astor by the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company as the result of an arrangement made by William Waldorf Astor about two years ago. The Thirty-fourth Street, or Astoria, part is owned by Vincent Astor. The assessed valuation of the combined properties is $12,125,000, and it was stated by Nicholas Biddle, who represented Vincent Astor in the present transaction that the annual rent would aggregate about $800,000, making the Waldorf-Astoria one of the largest leasehold properties in the world.

Mr. Boldt said yesterday that the Astor interests had agreed to spend about $800,000 in alterations. One of the most important will be the elimination of the popular Turkish room on the Thirty-third Street side, which will be torn out and remodelled into shops and brokers' offices. All of the Thirty-third Street side down to Astor Court will be made into small stores. With this exception the ground floor will remain unchanged.

The roof garden will be entirely rebuilt and enlarged, the plans calling for a dining room 46½ by 70 feet, overlooking the Astor Court side of the hotel. Complete kitchen facilities will be installed. Another large part of the roof will be devoted to roller skating in Summer and ice skating in Winter. Several dancing rooms will also be added. When complete, it is expected to be the largest roof garden in the world.

The negotiations for the renewal of the lease were carried on directly by Mr. Boldt, with Thomas Biddle representing Vincent Astor, and Charles A. Peabody representing Waldorf Astor and the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company. Several changes will be made in the guest rooms and various improvements added.

UNIFORM LAWS DISCUSSED.

Annual Conference of State Commissions in Session in Utah.

The twenty-fifth annual Conference of State Commissions on Uniform Laws, an organization made up of commissions from every State to make uniform in the several States those laws whose influence extends beyond State boundaries, is now in session in Salt Lake City. The movement creating this machinery for establishing uniform laws was started in 1888 in this State by Albert E. Henschel, a lawyer of this city, who drafted the law for the first State commission to obtain uniformity of legislation.

The laws proposed are first drawn up by an expert, then subjected to expert legal criticism, then considered by the whole body of commissioners. The proposed act is then submitted to every State. Laws regarding warehousing and negotiable instruments which have an interstate character have been recommended by previous conferences and are now substantially uniform throughout the country.

"The general public has little conception," Mr. Henschel said yesterday, "of what has been accomplished in a quarter of a century by the painstaking labors of these commissioners, who receive no pay and many of whom do not even receive traveling expenses.

"We all know that there is a sharp divisional line separating Federal from State jurisdiction, but there are various State functions which affect immeasurably the welfare of areas beyond their boundary lines.

"Among these subjects are marriage and divorce, the form of notarial certificate, wills, deeds, descent of real and personal property, insolvency, partnership, sales and many others which common sense tells us should be uniform to avoid friction.

"Uniform laws make for unity of habit, thought and practise. It is a welding process which tends effectively to make us one people."

PILGRIMAGE TO STONE HOME

Suffragists Give Dinner at Essex County Country Club.

ORANGE, N. J., Aug. 12.—Suffragists from half a dozen States today attended a pilgrimage to the house on Hurlbut Street, this city, where in 1858 Lucy Stone made her celebrated protest against taxation without representation, which led to the sale of her property even to the cradle of her child.

A dinner was held tonight at the Essex County Country Club in West Orange, with Mrs. Gordon Grand, President of the Equal Suffrage League of the Oranges, presiding and Mrs. Edward F. Feickert, President of the New Jersey Woman's Suffrage Association, acting as toastmistress. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw spoke on "Woman Suffrage—Looking Backward and Forward." Mrs. Henry Garrison Villard of New York gave personal recollections of Lucy Stone. Other speakers were Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt of the International Woman Suffrage Alliance; former Judge Thomas A. Davis, former State Senator Everett B. Colby, Mrs. Colby, Mrs. Raymond Brown of New York, Mrs. Frank J. Roessing of Pennsylvania, Miss Mary Garrett of New York, Miss Hannah Patterson of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Richard Fitzgerald, President of the Massachusetts Political Equality Union.

A bronze tablet commemorating the fight "for the emancipation of women" by the pioneer will be unveiled tomorrow by her daughter, Miss Alice Stone Blackwell of Boston.

350,000 Flies Swatted to Death.

Special to The New York Times.

PEAPACK-GLADSTONE, N. J., Aug. 12.—With nearly a month passed since the beginning of the fly-killing contest here, 350,000 flies have been swatted. The children have been driving the pests from this township at the rate of 14,000 a day. Dumont Huyler of Gladstone has captured 68,200; Dorothy Johnson is the second with 47,700; Grace Dariydimple next with 37,600; Marjory McCarren fourth with 25,040; and Susette McCarren with 12,960. The contest closes Nov. 1, and the managers expect that 1,000,000 flies will have been destroyed by then.

SHEIKH HERE TO LECTURE.

Sayid Gilani Will Tell of Mohammedanism in the Philippines.

The Sheikh-Ul-Islam Sayid M-Wajih Gilani, Imperial Ottoman Religious Commissioner for the Philippines, arrived yesterday from Manila via Cadiz on the Spanish steamer Manuel Calvo to spend several months in this country lecturing upon religious and civil topics dealing with the Philippines, which he believes will interest Americans. He is accompanied by a secretary, who acts as interpreter, and a Moro boy, who is his valet.

The Sheikh is the head of the Mohammedan religion in the Far East, and says he is a direct descendant of the Prophet. During the voyage from Manila to New York he ate his meals apart from the other passengers, and all his food was prepared by Nabou, his servant. The Sheikh wore the green turban around his fez, which showed that he had made the pilgrimage to Mecca, and was entitled to be addressed Hadji in addition to his other titles.

There were twenty-one Arabs from the Sahara Desert on the Manuel Calvo, who are going to take part in The Garden of Allah in September, but they did not dare to address the Sheikh-Ul-Islam on the ship.

"I have come to tell the American people that there are half a million Mohammedans in the Philippines," said Sayid Gilani, as he is styled by those not of his faith, "and they will become citizens of whom the United States will not be ashamed."

The Sheikh was put to considerable annoyance and delay in landing because the Immigration Inspectors would not allow his servant Nabou to land with him on account of his being under 16. The boy had to go to Ellis Island with his master, and was released under a bond that he would not become a public charge.

ESTABROOK RAPS WILSON.

Tells St. Paul Business Men That President's Policies Are All Wrong.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 12.—Henry Dodge Estabrook of New York addressed a meeting of St. Paul business men today on "Truth, Business, and Politics," deprecating what he called the anti-business policies of the Wilson Administration and asserting that this legislation was based on the assumption that the average American business man was a scoundrel.

"President Wilson not only sees no evil in the Sherman act, but he has done all that a political dentist could do to add teeth to its insatiable jaw," he said.

The speaker took up the revenue measures of the Wilson Administration, stating that none could stand the acid test. He said, in part:

"The Republicans have always turned over a full Treasury to the Democrats; the Democrats have never been happy until they have got rid of it, and the country has never been happy until it has got rid of them.

"It has been said that the Republican Party for the last few years has been trying to stand pat on one leg and progress with the other—a sort of fusion of the tango and minuet that results only in confusion. In principle we are all progressives. But your political speechmaker, your simon-pure article, your progressives with a big 'P'—want a change just to see what will come of it.

"Today the man who flouts our Constitution as a monument to the greed, rapacity, and even fraud of our forefathers and a handicap to the progress of the people, calls himself a progressive. I call him a fool. Today, if a man refuses to join in lambasting our Supreme Court, (that unique and precious feature of our autonomy,) he is called a reactionary. I call that man a patriot whose services in behalf of ordered liberty were never more needed than at this very hour."

I. T. U. SELECTS BALTIMORE.

Place of 1916 Convention—Action on Two Important Proposals.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 12.—Baltimore was selected today as the 1916 convention city of the International Typographical Union. Two important propositions were disposed of. The first, imposing the rule of priority in employing and discharging men, was ordered submitted to a referendum. The other, providing for a six-day week, was adopted, 150 to 70. Both propositions were put forward by the administration.

G. Grow of the International Association of Machinists, a member of the Schmidt-Caplan Defense Committee, made a brief plea for the financial and moral support of the delegates in the coming trial. He referred to the men who are awaiting trial on the charge of being accessory to the dynamiting of the Los Angeles Times Building as "prisoners of war," and declared that they were being "persecuted not prosecuted."

Mrs. A. G. Vanderbilt's Car Halted.

The car in which Mrs. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, whose husband was lost on the Lusitania, was speeding to her country home, at Shadybrook, Mass., was stopped on Wednesday night by a policeman on the Boston Post Road, and the chauffeur, George Verrando, got a summons for speeding. In the West Farms Court the policeman testified yesterday that the Vanderbilt car had been making forty-two miles an hour. Verrando admitted breaking the speed limit, and Magistrate Breen fined him $25.

WAGE HOT FIGHT FOR SOCIAL LAWS

Barnes, Assailing Humanitarian Legislation, Stirs Opposition in Albany Convention.

URGES EQUALITY IN STATE

Fears Present Tendencies and Warns Against Creation of a Proletariat.

WICKERSHAM TAKES ISSUE

Declares Proposal Would Make State Powerless in Great Emergencies —Schurman Warns Delegates.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 12.—The proposal presented by William Barnes, which would make it impossible for the Legislature in future to enact laws of a humanitarian nature involving the expenditure of public funds for the benefit of any class, such as the workmen's compensation law, the widow's pension law, a minimum wage act, and like measures, was the subject of a remarkable debate before the Constitutional Convention today. The debate continued until late in the evening.

Mr. Barnes and ex-Judge Alphonso T. Clearwater of Kingston advocated the adoption of the proposal. Ex-Attorney General Wickersham, President Schurman of Cornell University, ex-Mayor Seth Low of New York, Herbert Parsons, Senator Robert F. Wagner, ex-Speaker Alfred E. Smith, and others opposed the measure. Here is the Barnes proposal:

> The Legislature shall not pass any bill granting hereafter to any class of individuals any privilege or immunity not granted equally to all members of the State.
>
> Providing for authorization the expenditure of any public money to be paid to any person, except for materials furnished or services rendered upon employment by the State or a civil division thereof or in recognition for such service.
>
> Establishing a minimum wage for service to be paid to any employe by a private employer.

Mr. Barnes urged that legislation of the character in question involved a radical and unwarranted departure from the ideals and principles underlying American government and that such measures should be submitted to the voters on a referendum as amendments to the Constitution.

Ex-Judge Clearwater, supporting Mr. Barnes, said that unless the Barnes proposal or something like it was written into the Constitution, the State soon would reach the stage where a proletariat, in the Roman sense, would be created to become a troublesome element of society. He alluded to the prophesies of de Toqueville, Montesquieu, Macaulay and Bryce who long ago declared that early American ideals would vanish. The time had come, he said, when their predictions were coming true.

"When they ventured to predict what would happen, they were regarded as prophets in the wilderness," said Judge Clearwater. "The voice of William Barnes today may be only a voice in the wilderness, but I, who may sit in another Constitutional Convention in this very chamber when I am gone, when that time comes will regret if something like this is not now put into the organic law of the State."

Mr. Wickersham, in opposing the proposal, said that it would cripple Government. Dr. Schurman said that the Barnes proposal had its genesis in a dogmatic theory of Government, not in governmental experience, and added that nothing was more dangerous than to abandon experience for dogma in the work that the delegates had undertaken.

Mr. Barnes prefaced his remarks by saying that his proposal had been offered for the purpose of placing in the Constitution "a clear expression, now wanting, of the ideal of equality."

"The hour has come," he said, "when a proposal upholding the ideal of equality, which must be the ideal of any democratic State, does not necessarily find favor. Whereas for many years this American ideal was universally accepted, and progress toward its establishment in law and in the minds of all was being made, at the present time it is assailed as false, and in substitution for it it is proposed to establish a State that shall exist not as the necessary agent or servant of the people within its boundaries, but as a power in itself to order the lives of the people in such a manner as it will—meaning, in the first instance, perhaps what the majority wills, but in the second instance surely what one person wills upon the majority.

Cites Case of Prussia.

"There may be delegates in the convention who fail to perceive that the legislation against which this proposal is aimed is conceived in the desertion of the American ideal and in the establishment of what may properly be termed at the present moment the Prussian principle. Such, however, is the fact.

"A State must inevitably conform to one aspiration or to another. The concept of a democratic State, where equality is the basis of all law, is in direct antagonism to the concept of the autocratic State, where every one is made subject to what is declared to be the collective interest. From the latter tyranny there is no escape, except through revolution.

"The time is peculiarly opportune for discussion of this entire matter. Whereas it is difficult to engage the attention of people to abstractions, at this particular moment the European war has transferred the subject from the field of abstraction to the domain of concrete application.

"On the German side in this conflict stands the Germanic State as now established, without disguise and with precise definition, denying utterly the American theory of equality. On the side of the Allies there is a conglomerate amalgamation of all kinds of ideals, united only in opposition to Germany as a war power. The splendid efficiency of the German war operations brings into bold relief the theory that the State should be all in all and that the individual exists only as part of the machine.

Fears Growth of Tyranny.

Mr. Barnes referred to paternalism as affecting the working classes in Germany, a policy inaugurated under Bismarck to keep the workers from making trouble, and to the Progressive Party program, which Colonel Roosevelt had pronounced a "check to socialism and an antidote to anarchy." Mr. Barnes said that under the Bismarck policies socialism had had a marvelous growth in the German Empire. He added that the enactment of "State socialistic legislation," far from being a check to socialism in this country, would foster it.

"If this be true, and all evidence tends to prove that it is," Mr. Barnes continued, "and as State socialistic legislation increases inevitably the growth of socialistic methods of thinking, the certain destination involved in this kind of legislation will not be the attainment of the socialistic ideas but the tyrannous autocratic state not democratic in a single form, but established in the name of democracy.

"How far we have departed in America from devotion to the ideal of equality, which is our declared aspiration, is demonstrated by the fact that those who would be benefited by the legislation which this amendment prohibits have not advocated the passage of this prohibition.

"I cannot believe that the American workingman—and this includes the foreign-born citizen who has made America his land by choice—desires to be reduced to a proletarian. In Rome, the proletarian was exempted from military service, a privilege marking him for dishonor. It is contrary to the spirit of America; it is contrary to truth, that we should create in this country a class of proletarians. It is as true today as it was when the statement was originally made, that in America it is three generations from the plow to the millionaire, and three generations back again.

"I do not impugn the motives of those controlled by love of humanity who desire the material welfare of every one, but mistakenly aim to involve the State in their philanthropy. It is a natural instinct in all. What an individual may do, however, is not a criterion for a State. The benevolent State inevitably breeds not men and women, but dependents. The oppression of crowd-thought, crowd-interest, crowd-demand for mediocrity will lead the human race back to the protoplasm whence it emerged.

"I am asking, if this convention passes favorably upon this proposition, that it be submitted separately to the voters, that there may be a clean-cut expression for or against the principle of equality. If the voters should adopt this amendment, those who now crowd these legislative halls, demanding privileges for their clients, will come here in direct violation of the mandate of the people. If the voters of this State should by disapproving this amendment establish privilege as a principle every group will be justly entitled to call upon the Legislature to pass whatever they demand.

"The State of New York, in that event although dedicated, as are the other States of the Federal Union, and the United States itself, to the ideal of equality, will set its heel upon that aspiration. Because of its cowardice it will become no longer an institution expensively established to protect the property, health, safety, and lives of all the members of the State, but the means through which each separate collection of individuals within its confines may secure such privilege as in its weakness the Legislature fears not to grant."

Wickersham Answers Barnes.

Mr. Wickersham took the floor when Mr. Barnes had finished. 'Although he rose to oppose the former Republican State Chairman, he paid him a graceful compliment for the work he did at the Chicago convention three years ago, where he was the main factor in defeating Colonel Roosevelt for the Presidential nomination.

"The proposal advanced by the delegate from Albany," he said, "embodies principles which he has expressed frequently. They bubble up from the depths of an earnest conviction that we all recognize, and they are, I think, the byproduct of that magnificent fight which he conducted three years ago which laid the American people under lasting obligation to him. But his proposal embodies principles so impractical in the expression he has given to them that their adoption would mean the destruction of this Government as a practical vehicle for the conduct of the affairs of this Commonwealth."

Treating the proposal analytically, Mr. Wickersham pointed out that it would prevent payment by the State of funds to support any benevolent or charitable undertaking.

"Sacrificing everything to the Moloch of the idea of equality," he said, "it would, indeed, be preventing the State of New York from imitating the example of the State of Germany, erect the State of New York into as impersonal, as heartless a social organization as the worst enemies of Germany accused Germany of being."

Mr. Barnes disputed this saying that the injunction in his proposal was directed against the payment of the State's money to a "person," not to an institution.

Mr. Wickersham said that the distinction was "more subtle than candid" because a corporation under all the principles of established law and under all constructions of the statutes was a person.

"It may be that the gentleman did not fully appreciate the extent to which this prohibition which he seeks to impart to the Constitution would go," said Mr. Wickersham. "I fear he has been led on by this abstract conception in his mind to establishing that idealistic state of equality in which all men will be equally happy and equally busy and will enjoy an equal state of good health; under which nobody will need the beneficent assistance of the State or the individual. But we are dealing here with a constitution for a State of ten millions of living, breathing, suffering men and women, men and women who in strength and in health, in sickness and in need, must look to the organized agencies of society to help them from the consequences of failure in the struggle of life, whether that failure be the result of physical breakdown or other causes.

"Throughout the whole history of English-speaking peoples the State has charged itself with the care of its sick and its poor. I know Mr. Barnes does not mean by this provision to tie the hands of the State so that for the future it may go forth impersonally, without pity, without capacity to help, and turn its stern back to all voicing of suffering, whether in its midst or elsewhere.

"There are a thousand illustrations that rise in the minds of what would be prohibited by this, where every consideration and where every dictate of humanity would require a State to appropriate its money and take its action. What are you going to do in case of pestilence? What are you going to do in case of war? What are you going to do in case of any one of the thousand contingencies that arise in the life of a nation? Are you going to say that our civilization is at an end? Are you going to say that we have lost all capacity to help ourselves? Are you going to say that unless we make an appropriation which goes equally to every human in this land, equally to every human being, the Legislature shall stand mute and powerless? I think not.

"I must protest against seriously considering writing into the fundamental law of the State a provision that is in violation of every dictate of civilized, enlightened and progressive government."

Senator Robert F. Wagner, who spoke next, said that the Barnes proposal, had it been part of the present Constitution, would have prevented the enactment of practically every law passed during the last five years for the benefit of the working men and working women.

Dr. Schurman's Argument.

President Schurman, in his speech, called attention to the fact that the statute books were full of laws granting privileges to classes of individuals.

"Mr. Barnes's proposed amendment," he said, "rests on a dogmatic theory of government. For my part, I do not want to be wise beyond what is written in the legislative record and practice of our past. Let us take up the new social problems one by one as they arise, in the old way and in the light of past experience. Progress will be effected not by speculation, which is exceedingly dangerous in politics, but by preserving the ancient rights and liberties and by having regard to equity and the general welfare.

"For the sake of a theory of government which 'I think erroneous, Mr. Barnes proposes to discriminate against the industrial classes. Gentlemen of the convention, I warn you, there is dynamite in his proposal. If you adopt it it is liable to dissolve existing political parties, to create class antagonism in the State, and ultimately to impair, if indeed it does not undermine, that authority on which all government rests—authority—which in all civilized States is embodied in the Legislature."

Clearwater Defends Barnes.

Judge Clearwater, in speaking in support of the proposal, said he was surprised—almost shocked—at the narrow construction placed on it by Mr. Wickersham and President Schurman. It would not be retroactive, in the first place, he said. In the second place it would not, as Mr. Wickersham had intimated, prevent the State from spending its own money in such grave emergencies as pestilence and war.

"In years gone by," he said, "when we talked of special privileges to be guarded against, we had in mind the privileges granted to the great, the wealthy, and that still is in the minds of most men when we speak of special privileges.

"If we are so destitute in foresight, so lacking in vision, that we cannot see ahead dangers threatening the Commonwealth, we are unfit to sit as delegates in this convention. If our grasp is so narrow that we cannot foresee the evils which may come and probably will come and which are knocking at our doors we should not be here.

"Mr. Barnes has referred to the proletarian. Up to within a very few years ago there were no proletarians in this country, and when I use the term proletarian I use it in the sense it was used by the Romans. I mean the man who has not and never will have any property, who has not the industry, the frugality, and self-denial to accumulate property, a man who will breed children and who will throw himself without scruple or reserve upon a community for support."

The proletarians, Judge Clearwater said, were crowding the seaboard cities today. They elected legislators, created Legislatures, and were strong enough in numbers to enforce their demands for "equality" according to their ideas, which was not the American idea.

Under a resolution brought in by the Committee on Rules further debate on the Barnes proposal went over until Monday night, when a vote will be taken.

TAX ARTICLE ADVANCED.

Constitutional Convention Protects Existing Exemptions from Levy.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 12.—After amendments had been made to protect from new levies those who have paid taxes on securities under the secured debts law, the Constitutional Convention today advanced to the order of third reading, the article on taxation.

In its amended form, the article protects existing tax exemptions, but provides that no new exemptions shall be made by the legislature except by a two-thirds vote. The article reads as follows:

> Section 1. The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended, or contracted away except as to the securities of the State or a civil division thereof.
>
> Hereafter no exemption from taxation shall be granted except by general laws and upon the affirmative vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each house.
>
> Taxes shall be imposed by general laws and for public purposes only. The Legislature shall prescribe how taxable subjects shall be assessed, and provide for officers to execute laws relating to the assessment and collection of taxes, any provision of any other article of this Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding. The Legislature shall provide for the supervision, review, and equalization of assessments.
>
> For the assessment of real property heretofore locally assessed, the Legislature shall establish tax districts, none of which, unless it be a city, shall embrace more than one county. The assessors therein shall be elected by the electors of such districts or appointed by such authorities thereof as shall be designated by law. The Legislature may provide that the assessment roll of each larger district shall serve for all the lesser tax districts within its boundaries.
>
> No such tax district larger than a town shall be established until the law providing therefor shall have been adopted by a vote of a majority of the people voting thereon in such a proposed tax district at an election for which provision shall be made by law.

The powers of the State Department of Taxes and Assessments are enlarged under the article. The duty of assessing personal property for purposes of both State and local taxation is likely to pass from local tax boards to the central body at the Capitol after the new article becomes effective. The assessment of real estate will be the sole function left to the local assessors.

These new powers, it was said, would enable the State Tax Commissioners to classify personal property and levy taxes in such a manner that the tax would not drive property out of the State.

In its original form the article contained a provision taking from local assessors, who have shown themselves overzealous, the power to assess municipal property outside of city boundaries, transferring that duty to the State Board. This provision had been urged by the Board of Water Supply in New York City, but at the last minute it was taken out, as the Corporation Counsel's office thought there was no need for it.

CALLS PLAN A SUBTERFUGE.

Mayors' Conference Official Assails Home Rule Proposal.

TROY, Aug. 12.—The home rule proposal of the Cities Committee of the Constitutional Convention was attacked here tonight by William P. Capes, Secretary of the State Conference of Mayors, in an address before the convention of City Clerks.

"The proposal now receiving the consideration of the convention is so plainly a subterfuge, so vague, so cumbersome, and so obstructive," he said, "that we marvel at the seriousness with which an intelligent body is discussing it. Houdini, the handcuff king, never made a greater effort to mystify his audience than has the Cities Committee of the Constitutional Convention in its attempt to give home rule to the cities without giving it.

"If the advocates of home rule are not successful in their present attempt to convince the delegates that the proposal now before them is worse than the municipal article in the present Constitution and that it should be revised, there is only one thing left to do. We must request the convention to submit its home rule decimal to the people this Fall as a separate proposition, so that the people living in the cities—75 per cent. of the total population of the State—will not be placed in the position of having to oppose the entire work of the convention in order to register their disapproval of the alleged home rule amendment."

NEW AIDS FOR GOVERNOR.

Whitman Appoints Two National Guard Officers to His Staff.

A number of changes have occurred recently among the National Guard officers of New York. Governor Whitman has accepted the detail of Captain Howard E. Crall of the Seventh Infantry, a well-known rifle shot, as aid on his staff to succeed Captain William R. Johnson, late of the First Cavalry, who has been transferred to the reserve list. The Governor has also appointed as an aid Captain Joseph J. Kingsbury from the reserve list to succeed Major John F. Dunseith of the Medical Corps, who has been relieved. Private Frank McCoy, Company C, Seventh Infantry, having served for twenty-five years, has been retired by Governor Whitman with the brevet rank of Second Lieutenant.

The following promotions of officers are announced: Second Lieutenant Robert R. Molyneux, First Cavalry, to First Lieutenant and assigned as squadron Adjutant; John J. Atkinson, Jr., Fourteenth Infantry, to Second Lieutenant in Company M; First Lieutenant A. I. Marshall, First Infantry, to Captain of Company K; Second Lieutenant William L. Hodder, Third Infantry, to First Lieutenant, Company M; Edgar C. Leaycraft of Squadron A, to Second Lieutenant and assigned to Troop C; Second Lieutenant Walter C. McClure, First Field Artillery, to First Lieutenant and assigned to Battery F; John G. Poore, Sixty-ninth Infantry, to Second Lieutenant and assigned to Company A; Patrick J. Crowley, Sixty-ninth Regiment, to Second Lieutenant and assigned to Company D.

Lydig Hoyt has been appointed Second Lieutenant in Company A of the Twelfth Infantry, and Geoffrey M. Taylor of the same regiment has been promoted First Lieutenant in Company C.

Ex-Captain John M. Thompson, formerly of the Ninth Coast Defense Command, has on his own request been appointed a Captain on the reserve list of the National Guard; First Lieutenant William D. Farrington, formerly of the Coast Artillery Corps, has been appointed from civil life to the reserve list as a First Lieutenant; Second Lieutenants Louis S. Barrett of the Coast Artillery and Louis King of the Second Infantry, who resigned a short time ago, have both been honorably discharged.

TO FLY FOR $6,000 PRIZES.

Sperry May Start Tomorrow in Curtiss Marine Contest.

Lawrence Sperry, the Brooklyn aviator, will decide this afternoon when he will make a flight in his Curtiss flying boat in an effort to win the Curtiss Marine Flying Trophy for the greatest distance traveled in ten hours of one day.

He will come from Bellport, L. I., today and examine his flying boat, which is in the hangar at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. He said he would make the flight either tomorrow or Sunday morning, the weather conditions permitting. The flight will be made from the Brooklyn Navy Yard over the Great South Bay and will end at Amityville, L. I., according to the aviator's present plans. He may make a trial flight from the navy yard around the harbor here this afternoon.

The trophy offered by Glenn H. Curtiss is valued at $5,000. In addition the winner will receive a cash prize of $1,000.

M'MILLIN DONATES $50,000 TO AVIATION

HE URGES USE OF MUFFLERS

Mrs. Willard D. Straight Contributes $25C and Another Woman Has Given $1,000 Anonymously.

Emerson McMillin, the banker, who recently gave $1,000 to the National Aeroplane Fund, offered an additional $50,000 to the fund yesterday, according to the announcement made by the Aero Club of America, which has already received $12,000 toward the $500,000 it proposes to raise.

In his letter to Alan R. Hawley, President of the Aero Club, Mr. McMillin emphasizes the necessity of training aviators and inducing them to use the most efficient aeroplanes and motors available, having the motors equipped with mufflers and self-starters. These latter devices are readily obtained, but aviators do not use them, because their added weight decreases the speed of the aeroplane from two to three per cent. Mr. McMillin, however, points out that the question of silent or noisy motors in warfare is the difference between success and failure, and he urges that this matter be given thorough consideration in the near future.

"Whatever the cost of developing this combination of trained aviators and good aeroplanes and motors," he writes, "it should be done. Russia and the Russians doubtless felt unwilling to incur such expense a couple of years ago and refrained from expenditures and at what awful cost! Feeling the grave importance of this branch of military equipment, I will gladly contribute in any possible way to expedite the work of creating an efficient corps of aviators, with aeroplanes in sufficient number for their use."

Mr. McMillin's offer is made contingent on the Aero Club raising the total amount of $500,000 for the National Aeroplane Fund. He agrees to add $100 to every $900 that the club receives between Aug. 1, 1915, and Feb. 1, 1916.

The women of New York are also contributing to the fund. One who desires to remain anonymous recently gave $1,000, and Mrs. Willard D. Straight, whose husband is a member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., gave $250 to the fund yesterday.

Henry Woodhouse of the Aero Club in speaking of the National Aeroplane Fund said:

"The Aero Club has been conducting a nation-wide campaign to acquaint the public with our total lack of aeroplanes in the army, navy, National Guard and naval militia. Although this country gave to the world the first practical aeroplane, the first hydroaeroplane and the first flying boat, and although we are supplying more than a thousand aeroplanes and 2,000 motors to Europe, we are today behind the first and second class powers. In fact, we are very much behind Japan, China, Switzerland, Australia, and Morocco.

"Our navy, which boasted three years ago of being the first navy in the world to have an aviation section, has, at this time only five aeroplanes in commission and five more ordered. The half dozen aviators in the navy who hold certificates have had no opportunity to gain experience in manoeuvring, and never manoeuvred with a fleet, and do not know what ships and submarines look like from the air."

MRS. HEVENOR GETS DIVORCE

Custody of Son Is Awarded to Lumber Merchant's Wife.

Mrs. Grace Dimon Hevenor, wife of Harvey K. Hevenor, a wealthy lumber merchant, with offices at 17 Liberty Street, Manhattan, received an interlocutory decree of divorce yesterday through Justice Townsend Scudder, in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn. The suit was heard by former Justice Josiah T. Marean, as referee, and in his report to Justice Scudder he recommended a decree for the plaintiff. The report was confirmed by the Court.

The couple were married at Lake Placid, N. Y., on Aug. 21, 1905. They have one son, now 7 years old. He is in the custody of his mother. Mr. Hevenor is required, as recommended in the referee's report, to provide the means to educate his son, and continue the payment to Mrs. Hevenor of $15 a week alimony, which was awarded to her under the terms of an action for separation.

The marital troubles of Mr. and Mrs. Hevenor have figured in the courts for several years. Before her marriage, while Mrs. Hevenor was Miss Grace Dimon, a prominent society belle of Hammondsport, N. Y., she was named as co-respondent in a suit for divorce brought by Mrs. Amy Drake against Charles J. Drake. While this suit was pending Miss Dimon married Hevenor.

Following an alienation suit brought later by Mrs. Drake against Mrs. Hevenor, after the latter's marriage, the marital differences of the Hevenors caused both to separate. Mrs. Hevenor went to live at 518 West 111th Street with her son. Hevenor later kidnapped the boy from his wife's apartments, and in December, 1912, he sued her for divorce. Mrs. Hevenor defended the suit successfully and then obtained the custody of her son.

NEW AUTO FOR DR. SHAW.

Suffragists to Give Touring Car to Head of Association.

The National Woman's Suffrage Association plans to present a new touring car to Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, its President, at 10 o'clock this morning, at its headquarters, 505 Fifth Avenue, and afterward members of the association will escort her in automobiles to the McAlpin, where she lives.

The little yellow car presented to Dr. Shaw some months ago, and which was seized in Pennsylvania and held for taxes, was redeemed by the association and again given to her. It was, however, found to be too small to convey the President and the speakers who travel with her on her lecture tours, hence the purchase of a big car.

WON'T TRY TAGGART FIRST.

Indianapolis Mayor Faces Jury on Election Charge Sept. 7.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Aug. 12.—Judge W. H. Eichhorn, in the Criminal Court, today overruled the motion to quash the indictment against Thomas Taggart, Democratic National Committeeman for Indiana; Mayor Joseph E. Bell, Chief of Police Samuel V. Perrott, and 123 others, charged with election irregularities. The court held that forty-three of the forty-eight counts in the indictment were valid.

The State elected to place Mayor Bell on trial first, although the defense asked to go to trial with Mr. Taggart the first defendant. The trial was set to begin Sept. 7.

PAINTERS' UNION ENJOINED.

Contractor Alleges That Boycott Grows Out of Personal Enmity.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 12.—Vice Chancellor Backes today granted an injunction to restrain the Bayonne Council of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers' Union from putting Harris Boorstein, a contracting painter, on the unfair list. It was charged by Boorstein that because of the enmity of William B. Hunter, Business Agent of the Painters' Union, he was being boycotted and was unable to hire union labor.

It was held by the Court that Boorstein had a right to a free and open market in which to hire labor without interference by the union.

CAPT. KNOX KILLED IN AEROPLANE FALL

FORT SILL, Okla., Aug. 12.—Captain George H. Knox of the First Aero Squadron, U. S. A., was killed and Lieutenant R. B. Sutton, his aid, probably was fatally injured today, when an aeroplane in which they were flying fell 350 feet.

The officers came to Fort Sill from California last Tuesday and since then had been conducting experiments on the army reservation. Upon the arrival of the aerial squadron several members said they considered the various currents of air existing in and near the Wichita Mountains here extremely dangerous.

The aviators ascended about 9 o'clock this morning. They had been aloft only a few minutes, when the aeroplane began falling. Captain Knox and his aid made desperate efforts to control the machine, but it dashed to the ground and the Captain was killed. Sutton was hurried to the army hospital, where an operation was performed in an effort to save his life. He has only a fair chance of recovery.

An officer at the post who saw the accident said the biplane was "banking" against the wind and about 350 feet in the air when it suddenly dived toward the earth, pinioning the occupants beneath the motor.

Captain Knox was born in New York in 1874, entered the service in 1898, and was unmarried.

Captain George H. Knox was the adopted son of Colonel Edward M. Knox, the founder of the E. M. Knox Retail Hat Company of New York City. When he was adopted he dropped his surname of Robinson and took that of his foster father. His brother, Charles K. Robinson, lives in Brooklyn, and has gone to Fort Sill to bring the body to this city.

Captain Knox was in the Seventh Regiment when the Spanish-American war started, and resigned from the regiment to become a Second Lieutenant in the Twentieth United States Infantry, his appointment taking effect on July 9, 1898. He was promoted to the rank of Captain in July, 1905, and was detailed to the Quartermaster's Department in December, 1912. Since February, 1915, he had been at Fort Sill.

He was said to have been the wealthiest officer in the army. His foster father, Colonel Knox, is one of the two surviving officers of a battery that fought at Gettysburg, and he earned the Congressional Medal of Honor for gallantry during that battle.

According to information obtained at the Quartermaster's Department here, Captain Knox had gone up as a passenger with Lieutenant Sutton and was not in control of the aeroplane.

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 12.— Lieutenant R. B. Sutton, who was injured at Fort Sill, was appointed to West Point from Portland and is the son of J. N. Sutton, local agent of the Southern Pacific Railroad. He is twenty-five years old and was born at Redondo, Cal.

Lieutenant Sutton was graduated from West Point in 1913 and appointed to the Aero Station at San Diego a year ago. His brother, Lieutenant James Sutton, met death at the Annapolis Naval Academy soon after his graduation in 1907, the verdict of an investigating commission being that he was accidentally killed.

TO REMODEL CASSANDRA.

E. L. Doheny to Make Oil Burner of the Yacht S. J. Whalen Sold.

The steam yacht Cassandra, built originally for Roy Rainey at a cost of $480,000, went into dry dock yesterday in Shewan's Ship Yard, Brooklyn, to be remodeled as an oil burner. The yacht, recently the property of George J. Whalen of the United Cigar Stores Company, has been bought by Edward L. Doheny, President of the Mexican Petroleum Company. Thomas C. Shotwell, formerly of the United Company, negotiated the sale, and recently resigned his post to take charge of a department under Mr. Doheny.

The Cassandra is 287 feet long, with a beam of 32 feet 6 inches. She is lavishly fitted; her woodwork in all the cabins being Circassian walnut, while every bit of plumbing on the yacht is silverplated.

Mrs. W. Seward Webb Visits Court.

An interested spectator in the Tombs Court yesterday morning was Mrs. W. Seward Webb, daughter of the late Mayor Gaynor. She occupied a seat on the bench with Magistrate Corrigan and watched the disposal of cases. At the conclusion of the morning session Mrs. Webb left, saying that her call was merely a social one.

SIX KILLED IN WRECK OF EXCURSION TRAIN

COLUMBUS, Aug. 12.—Six persons were killed early today when a heavy freight train on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad crashed into a special train carrying members of the Knights of Pythias Lodge of Mount Sterling, Ohio, who were returning from an outing at Cedar Point. More than a score were injured, some so seriously that they may not recover.

All of the dead are from Mount Sterling or that immediate vicinity.

The accident occurred at Orient, fourteen miles south of Columbus, shortly before 3 A. M., during a heavy rainstorm. The passenger train had stopped to take on water when the freight train rumbling along through the mist struck it, smashing the crowded wooden coach in the rear into small fragments.

Residents of the village and occupants of nearby farm houses heard the cries of the dying and injured and organized relief parties, which extricated many of the injured.

Four members of the excursion party were killed outright. Two others died in hospitals after being brought to this city on a special train.

The State Utilities Commission sent Inspectors to the scene and will hold a hearing to fix responsibility for the wreck.

ACTORS' JOY RIDE HALTED.

Unable to Recall How They Came by Another Man's Missing Carriage.

Daniel McDonald walked out of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel early yesterday morning and found his horse and victoria missing. He sent in an alarm to the West Thirtieth Street Station, and policemen along Broadway were directed to keep an eye open for the missing outfit.

A policeman saw the horse and carriage a little before daybreak headed for Central Park, at Fifty-ninth Street and Eighth Avenue, and tried to stop them, but the horse turned on Fifty-ninth Street and ran to Fifth Avenue, where it turned south. The policeman commandeered an auto and started in pursuit. He caught up with the horse at Forty-third Street and Fifth Avenue, where it had been stopped by Policeman Lyons.

Three young men in the carriage were taken to the East Fifty-first Street Station, where they said they were Edward Collins of 313 East Thirteenth Street, Russell Meyers of 211 West 138th Street, and Daniel Levitt of 241 West Fifty-fourth Street. They said they were actors and could remember nothing since they had attended the festivities of an actors' organization the night before. They pleaded guilty to intoxication and were fined $5 apiece by Magistrate Krotel in Yorkville Court. They had been charged with larceny, but McDonald said he did not care to press the charge.

AGAINST POLICE FAVORITISM

Woods Opposes Preference for Veterans of Spanish War.

Police Commissioner Woods sent to Chairman Rush Rees of the Committee on Civil Service of the Constitutional Convention yesterday a letter protesting against an amendment, in so far as it would affect policemen, which would give Spanish war veterans the preference of appointment and promotion in the civil service.

Commissioner Woods says that, while he feels the nation is under a debt to those who have made sacrifices to their country, he does not think that appointment or promotion in the police force should be made one of the ways of paying it.

"The safety of life and property and the maintenance of law and order," he says, "are dependent upon the police. In such matters we can accept no compromise. Anything which we must promote those men who show they would make the best officers. In no other way than this can a proper standard of police efficiency be maintained and the public be properly protected."

TRAYMORE FRIDAY CHATS

THE LAND OF MAKE-BELIEVE

De Soto sought the Fountain of Youth in Florida, but he did not find it. * * * "When I am old," said James Russell Lowell, while Ambassador to England, "put me in a Home for Incurable Children." He died young, aged 72, for he had quaffed of De Soto's fountain, which bubbles up in the Child's Kingdom of Make-Believe. * * * The youthful instinct for play impelled many of the Traymore guests last week to dress as peasants and join in the Festival of the Tyrolese Farm. * * * Winter was coming; the snow-peaked Alps loomed in the distance. Turkeys were strutting about; pigeons flew through the air. Youths, feather-capped, and maidens in stomachers and kirtles, whirled in folk dances and feasted on Tyrolese doughnuts. * * * Suddenly down came the snow—first on the distant mountains, then upon the revelers—for, by undulating light and white confetti, the snow of illusion blended with the snow of reality. Over five hundred, on the second night, shared the pleasure of this winter idyll in August. * * * The Traymore had borrowed the Fountain of Youth from the Land of Make-Believe.

The excessive demand for places has compelled repetition of these Traymore fantasies. Pere Lunette's Cafe of the Parisian Underworld has been given three times in the Belvedere. The "Night in Seville" and the "Night in Naples" have been staged in the Restaurant. Last evening the setting was in Cairo.

Speaking of the concrete construction of the Blenheim, Thomas A. Edison said, "It is the coming construction for all great buildings. It won't bend, it won't break, and you couldn't burn it if you tried."

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
THE LEADING RESORT HOUSE OF THE WORLD
Capacity 1100 American and European Plans

The great essential of a resort hotel, as distinguished from a city hotel, is ample public space devoted to the use of its guests, in the form of bright and airy Exchanges, Lobbies, Parlors, Galleries and Solariums, affording pleasing vistas and beautiful promenades, the whole combining into a harmonious vision of grandeur and beauty, while replete with the cozy group seclusions of home, and yet affording full view of the pleasing panorama of the resort life. In this essential the Marlborough-Blenheim stands without an equal in Atlantic City or elsewhere.

Its "Ownership Management," while accounting for its unique reputation, is a guaranty of the high character of its patronage and the unexcelled quality of its service and cuisine. It employs only white service in both its American and a la carte dining rooms.

It makes a specialty of its high-class music every evening throughout the year, with special Sunday night solo features. Romani, the world's highest Tenor, of Venice, is engaged to sing at frequent intervals during July, August and September.

Atlantic City, with its only real competitor (Europe) this year impossible, is offering unusual attractions and entertainments. Two flying boats are daily sources of interest. Two golf courses, the Yacht Club, the fishing fleet and the wonderful bathing beach attract their respective devotees, while the pier amusements, the Boardwalk, the fine motor roads and the splendid hotels and restaurants, afford enjoyment to all. There is only one Atlantic City, and this summer it is particularly attractive. Write for illustrated booklet and rates.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Many War Stocks Advance, but Reactionary Movement Occurs —Mexican Situation a Factor.

War order prosperity continued to exert important influence upon the course of prices on the Stock Exchange yesterday, but the railroads and some of the industrials, notably United States Steel, were reactionary, and despite numerous substantial net gains the market presented an irregular and heavy appearance, particularly at the close of the session. Disappointment over the extent of the advantage gained by the Western roads through the decision just rendered by the Commerce Commission remained a factor making for reaction, but beyond that the Mexican situation was looked upon as capable of becoming an active market influence. The assurances that the Administration's policy does not contemplate armed intervention was not sufficient to reassure the market entirely, for the belief prevails that the question whether we will take forcible action or not cannot be answered solely on the basis of the Administration's known desire to avoid a resort to force. The view was that conditions might make adherence to that policy impossible.

Aside from these influences traders made real or alleged nervousness over the possibility of a submarine attack on the Adriatic, which was in war zone waters yesterday, an occasion for profit taking or short selling, which in the aggregate was sufficient to emphasize the reactionary tendency of an important part of the list. It was not until the afternoon that all thought of danger to that vessel was dismissed by the news of her safe arrival at Liverpool. There was no real reason for the fear which was felt or assumed and the fact that the danger of submarine attack was made to play a part in shaping the day's prices indicated in the main that traders in increasing number were committed to a reaction in the market.

The volume of trading was fairly well maintained, but it was less well distributed than during the later days of the upward movement, which yielded to reaction on Wednesday and again yesterday afternoon. One or two war stocks which had received less attention than some others were picked out and made very active, and another company or two were added to the list of those whose fortunes are to be bettered by supplying Europe's war needs. The general market designs of those who have undertaken to "organize" the rise in the stock market may have been reflected in these moves, for they were seemingly made to play the part of a counterstroke against the gathering forces of reaction which had manifested themselves the previous day. They were effective to the extent that many more stocks showed net gains for the day than net losses, but they did not prevent a narrowing of the market through an undue concentration upon a few stocks, nor did they save the market from a good deal of raggedness.

Insomuch as we have but to do nothing to have gold come to us in much larger quantity than is needed, even in much larger quantity than is wanted, if that be possible, the occurrence of a renewed and large decline in sterling exchange, despite the receipt of the largest single shipment of gold which ever crossed the Atlantic in either direction, is the cause of no immediate concern to this market. We say immediate, for conditions which would force a continuing decline in sterling exchange would eventually react on our own ability to trade with other nations. All the more would that be so were the gold which is coming to us unsolicited to be made the basis of increased inflation. Such practical measures as are possible to prevent that misuse of the gold which we have already received and the other gold which may yet come to us, should be taken.
